"The new material will soften under the influence of enormous heat, but it cannot take fire and burn. It can be rolled into a tissue or large leaves and be used in the manufacture of goods that are entirely waterproof, and for this purpose is especially desirable because it is odorless."

THE RUSSIAN JUDENHETZE.

Fire Set to a Hamlet and Fourteen Hebrews Burned to Death.

Thrilling tales of persecution are told by the Russian Jews who came to Boston on the steamer Kansas and are now detained by the immigration officers. The burning of their hamlet is thus described:

It was a little farming settlement, four Russian miles from Veile, containing eighteen houses, with their barns and outbuildings. July 18, about midnight, a dozen or so Russians from the city came trooping down upon them and set fire to the whole settlement.

Fourteen of the Jews were burned to death, while twenty were fearfully burned.

The Jews armed themselves with stones and sticks and gave chase. The Russians were thoroughly surprised at this, because they were accustomed to have their own way with these people.

One young man whose mother had been cruelly burned took a crowbar and attacked three of the Russians. He killed two of them and struck the third one such a blow that he died in an hour. All the time the Russians were rushing wildly about shouting: "Kill the Jews! Kill the Jews!"

In the midst of this turmoil the officers from Veile, attracted by the blaze, came into the settlement and arrested the young man who had killed the three Russians, and also captured other Jews. These were to be tried there July 20, and probably will be sent to Siberia.

A Useful Lesson in Philology.

The origin of words is an interesting study even to people who are not philologists. Take the homely word "diaper," for example. To what depths has it descended. It is like a high-born gentlewoman deprived of her broad lands and fair towers and compelled to do a scullion's work for a livelihood. It is, in short, like the story of Cinderella reversed. For diaper was a term originally applied to a silken fabric, and is mentioned as early as the eleventh century. Its special characteristic was that by the arrangement of warp and woof, both of the same tone of color, a design could be produced on the web which had the appearance of being raised in relief above the seemingly dusky ground. Cloth of gold was diapered with designs in this way. Exeter Cathedral had, in an inventory dated 1277, a cope of white diaper with half moons, and St. Paul's Cathedral one with parrots done in green.

The meaning of the word diaper gradually widened, so that it came to be used when the pattern or ornament was repeated, or when the pattern was sprinkled or powdered over the surface. Embroidery to imitate diaper in gold was general in the middle ages. The beautiful golden ground of the Opus Anglicanum was usually dotted all over with a repeating pattern. This apparently mechanical method was capable of infinite variety, and formed the most effective backgrounds, and it is remarkable that in different examples of old work the same diapers seldom appear.

In its 325 years of existence Harvard college has graduated 17,000 students.

WIT AND HUMOR.

The family tree cannot be depended on for board.—Indianapolis Journal.

Fresh-air boy—"Mister, do you have to buy chewing-gum for all those cows?"—Life.

Hope builds a nest in man's heart where disappointment hatches its brood.—Texas Siftings.

Eve is the only woman who never turned round "to see what the other woman had on."—Puck.

A woman never hits a hen when she throws a missile at it; but, alas! a man is not a hen.—Yonkers Statesman.

Teacher—"Jimmy, what is the chief product of the Malay peninsula?" Jimmy—"Malayria."—Harper's Bazar.

The first thing a man does after he has patted you on the back is to turn his own back to be patted.—Atchison Globe.

If men were half as wise in their actions as they are in their minds, the word "fool" would be out of use.—Atchison Globe.

Patience and hope may be virtues, but the man who sees his "margin" gradually wiped out is likely to look upon them as follies.—Puck.

Miss Dorcas—"Have the poor any pleasures, think you?" Miss Ann Thrupe—"O, yes! They criticise the characters of the rich."—Life.

Moralist—"Do you realize, what is the end of this feverish, grasping life of yours?" Speculator—"Certainly; a divid-end."—Baltimore American.

Little boy—"Mamma may I go swimming?" Mamma:—"I'm afraid you'll get drowned." Little boy: "Why, this isn't Sunday."—Good News.

Mrs. Spendall—"You look worried. Is it because you are so deeply in debt?" Mr. Spendall (gloomily)—"No, it's because I can't get any deeper."—N. Y. Weekly.

Tomson—"I suppose you are hard at work upon your latest story?" Johnson—"No, the work has not begun yet—I haven't tried to sell it yet."—Yankee Blade.

It is a mean man who will get up a joke on the medical profession when he owes his doctor a bill. We should be grateful to those who spare our lives.—Puck.

"There goes a spanking team," remarked Willie Brown to Tommy Jones, as the two boys' mothers walked down the street together.—Buffalo Express.

If some people were to do unto others as they would have others do to them they would not have a single moment in which to look out for themselves.—Dallas News.

Little Bennie:—"Boo-hoo! The bee stung me." His big brother:—"Never mind. I killed the bee." Little Bennie:—"Did you? Boo-hoo! Well, kill him deader."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Squeers—"Did you enjoy yourself at the theater last night?" Nickleby—"Well, I should say so—they've changed the jokes on the program since last season!"—Boston News.

He—"Young Dudelets says he had a hard pull to detach himself from Miss Flirt's fascinations." She (contemptuously)—"It must have been a monkey wrench, then."—Baltimore American.

Smythe—"How was Peterby injured in the service so as to entitle him to a pension?" Thompkins—"Why, the provost guard hurt his feelings drumming him out of the camp."—N. Y. Herald.

Mrs. Jaysmith—"Freddy, how did you get your clothes torn and your eye blacked like that? Now, don't deny it, you've been in a fight." Freddy (ruefully)—"Nome; I wasn't in it."—N. Y. Sun.

"Does your husband read the Sunday papers?" "No, he thinks it's wicked to do so. Besides he has not time to read them, for Sunday's the only day he has to collect his rents."—N. Y. Press.

Mamma—"Sallie, if you had a little spunk you'd stand better in your class. Do you know what spunk is?" Sallie (moodily)—"I suppose it's the past participle of 'spank,' mamma."—Brooklyn Life.

"Even school has its pleasures," said Willie. "You have found that out, have you?" asked his teacher. "Yes. I an't been to school yet but what it let out before the day was over."—Harper's Bazar.

Nellie: "Boo-hoo! Papa's got May another pin, and I think he might get me one, too." Mamma; "You know you lose all your pins, Nellie." Nellie: "I don't care—boo-hoo! I haven't had any to lose since I lost the last one."—Judge.

"I want you to paint us a big motto in gilt letters," she said to the sign artist. "Yes'm: what is the text?" "It is more blessed to give than to receive." "O, I see; the ladies are getting ready for another church fair."—Washington Star.

It was at a Saratoga hotel that a child attracted considerable attention by saying repeatedly: "I wants a cake." "You have had five or six already," replied the mother. "Them's not the ones I wants. I wants a fresh cake."—Texas Siftings.

Four-year-old Charlotte had been having some trouble with her English, but she had entirely passed her difficulties on one point. "I see how it is now, mamma," she said the other day. "Hens set and lay." "Yes." "And people sit and lie, don't they, mamma?" Washington Star.

"Say, Harry," said one small boy to another "they's peoples in the moon." "No, they han't." "Yes, they is. My pa said so." "How does your pa know? He was never in the moon." "No, but he's out every night and sees lots. I guess he knows more'n us."—St. Louis Republic.

There is a large picture of the Father of his Country in Eddie's home. Eddie is 3 years old and has ideas. "Who is that in the picture, Eddie?" asked a visitor. "Washington," he answered, gravely. "And who is Washington?" "Oh, he washes!" replied Eddie, promptly.—Youth's Companion.

LOVE FOR A DAY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "DORA THORNE," "A DEAD HEART," "TWO KISSES," "THE FATAL LILIES," ETC.

CHAPTER I.

Everywhere at Gracedieu was the scent of lilacs. In no other place did they grow in such luxuriant profusion. People came to see the lilacs at Gracedieu as they go to look at the beeches at Burnham and the chestnuts at Hampton Court. They were the great attraction for many weeks, and all the country round was sweet with their odor. In well-laid-out grounds, in cottage-gardens, in the long green lanes, at every corner of the pretty streets, in every nook where there was room for a tree to grow, on the path by the river, on the road to the woods, in the meadows and orchards where they had no right to be, by the brookside, nodding over the iron railings of the old churchyard, were the beautiful tall plumed lilacs. It would be difficult to say whether they were sweeter in the evening, in the sunlight, wet with dew, or stirred by the wind; from the time they began to bud until the last leaf dropped from the trees, they made Gracedieu a garden of Eden, a land of delight. The children called them "The Prince of Wales's feathers." The elder folk dated from them; they would say, "Before the lilacs were out," "When the lilacs were in bloom," or, "After the lilacs had faded." The days they were in flower was a time of pleasure to all.

This pretty town of Gracedieu, where I lived my happy young life, is in the fairest part of Devonshire—where the land is green and fertile, although it borders on the sea—where the green lanes are like gardens, and the hedgerows full of bloom. My father, the Reverend John Chester, was Rector of Gracedieu for more than forty years. His church, an old Norman building, was very dear to him. He did not marry until late in life, and I was his only child. I remember but little of him. His name was held in great honor by the townspeople. My dear mother, whom I lost when I was eighteen years old, was a quiet, gentle, unobtrusive woman; she had a small life-annuity. My father had not been able to leave her anything; he had insured his life for a trifling sum, which was invested for my benefit, and which brought me in a modest income of twenty pounds per annum.

In those days the gold of the laburnum and the buttercup was more to me than the glitter of coin. My mother and I thought but little of money. Our expenditure was quite within our income—the true secret of content. I remember no sordid cares, no "bills," no uneasiness as quarter-day came round; I remember no undue extravagance.

We had many friends and acquaintances in the town. In the summer afternoons it was a pleasant walk to our house; and, though we could not afford to entertain grandly, as some of our wealthy neighbors did, tea in our pretty gardens, with home-made cakes and ripe fruit, was pleasant enough. My mother was a lover of nature and she taught me all she knew. I was acquainted with the name of every bird; I knew their haunts and their habits. I was familiar with the trees and the various grasses, the wild-flowers, the reeds by the river, the cresses in the brook; every secret of the sweet country life was known to and loved by me. Looking back, I see a simple-hearted happy child, whose life was a poem.

As the opening of a tragedy is almost always quiet, so my life, that was to embody a tragedy, began calmly; like the opening bars of some sweet musical idyl. From my infancy until I was seventeen I had passed a peaceful, calm, uneventful existence.

My mother, when her husband died, went to live at a pretty little villa outside of Gracedieu, and built just on the borders of the Gracedieu woods. When I was a child, I used to lie for long hours listening to the wind amongst the trees of the forest; and while I live no music will be so grand or so sweet to me as that which it then made.

Our lives were well filled. I remember no vacant hours. Those which I spent in the woods and by the river were not idle to me. I was storing my heart and mind with pictures that lasted me for many years when with my eyes I could see them no longer. It was on my seventeenth birthday, and the date was the tenth of May, that a new life was opened to me. On that morning I was one of the happiest, brightest children that ever drew breath, with no care or thought save for the birds and flowers. With a longing impatience to see the dew on the grass I watched the sun rise; when I watched the same sun set, I had passed from childhood to womanhood. My mother's pretty little house peeped out from a mass of lilac trees, and there was a group of the same just outside the garden gate, bordering the path that led to the wood. The townspeople had the right of using this path, but they did not often avail themselves of it.

The first thing I thought of on my birthday was the lilacs. I knew just how the trees would look, the dew lying heavy on them, and the sun shining on their bloom. I must gather plenty for the breakfast-table, for my birthday was a household fete.

I went out. On the previous night I had noticed on the top of the tallest tree a spray of lilac that I wanted to gather. It was exactly the shape of the Prince of Wales's feathers—three nodding, beautiful, graceful plumes, surrounded by green leaves.

Once, twice, thrice I tried to reach the branch I wanted, but failed to do so. The sun was shining in my face; the shaking of the boughs scattered the dew-drops all over me. Suddenly a voice near me said:

"It is too high; you cannot reach it. Let me get it for you."

I had heard no footsteps, and had seen no shadow on the grass. Turning, my eyes fell on a bright, handsome face, with eyes dark and lustrous, and a mouth sweet and firm.

As he spoke, he broke off the bough. In doing so the tree shook, and the great dew-drops fell on his face and on mine.

"How careless I am," he said. "Do forgive me, Miss Chester!"

"How do you know my name?" I asked. "I do not remember having seen you before."

"I know most of the inhabitants of Gracedieu," he replied. "You do not recognize me, but my father is often at your house."

My mind quickly reviewed the few friends who were in the habit of visiting us, and I could think of no one likely to be the father of the handsome young man by my side.

"I am Dr. Upton's son," he continued—"Mark Upton, at your service. My father often talks of Mrs. and Miss Chester."

"I am much obliged to you," I said. "It is my birthday, and I had set my heart on that particular spray of lilac. How beautiful it is!"

"They are my favorite flowers," he said.

"How strange! I prefer them to any others," I remarked, glancing up at him.

"I wish you many happy returns of the day," he said, smiling; "and I hope every wish of yours to-day may be gratified as easily as this has been"—touching the branch of lilac as he spoke.

And so, by that one incident, my fate was sealed on the bright May morning when Mark Upton passed our house on his way to the woods.

It was not a very great surprise to me when, three days afterwards, on returning from my favorite haunt by the river, I found Mr. Upton talking to my mother. His dark face flushed when he saw me, and he rose from his chair.

"Miss Chester," he said, "I have taken the liberty of bringing you these,"—and he held out a mass of beautiful flowers, chiefly white lilacs of a rare kind with very sweet perfume. "I was at Oakton Hall this morning," he continued, "and I thought of you as I rode through the park. The lilacs are in full bloom; these white ones are the finest I have ever seen. I could not resist bringing them to you. The park is beautiful now. Not only are the lilacs out, but the laburnums are also, and the hawthorn-trees are magnificent.—You would enjoy seeing them."

I said something about the Gracedieu woods—I never remembered what. He came nearer to me, and held out the white lilacs that I might inhale their fragrance. How can I describe the vague feeling of happiness, of new-born delight, of pleasure that was almost pain when he approached? I remember how we were half afraid to look at each other; then one, stealing a glance, would meet the other's eyes, and dire confusion would result. I remember that while we both examined the lilacs our hands met—and that first touch of his hand was a new revelation to me. Presently the figure of my gentle, silent mother, who was knitting busily at the window, disappeared, and we were alone—two young, loving, passionate hearts alone with the glamor of first love over us.

I had thought of nothing but the dark handsome face since I had seen it first under the lilac-boughs. I dreamed of it; wherever I looked, there it was. I could see it in the flowers, in the shadowy river, in the blue of the sky, in the gold of the sunlight; glance where I would, it was there—always there.

I was a romantic girl, full of poetry and dreams. He was the first handsome young man I had seen, and fate had brought us together. When I awoke to the reality of the present, my mother was saying—

"Nellie, show Mr. Upton our trees. I think they are the finest in Gracedieu."

Presently we were standing in the glory of the golden sunshine, but I did not see it. I did not see the ripple of the foliage, the dark woods, the lilac-trees, or the garden. I saw nothing but the face that was more beautiful to me than all the world beside.

There was a shady arbor under the great lilacs, and we were sitting there. Mr. Upton was telling me of his life, his position, and his future.

"I shall always thank Heaven," he said, "that I made my way to Gracedieu woods on the tenth of May."

I dared not ask why. I knew.

"What small events rule our lives!" he went on. "If I had been one hour later or sooner, I should not have seen you, and then——" He stopped.

"And then?" I interrogated.

"There could be no 'then,'" he said, hastily. "The world would be quite different if I had never seen you. I shall love May; I shall love the lilacs as long as I live."

The weight of happiness seemed almost more than I could bear. It seemed to me as if the birds singing around us had guessed our secret.

It was evening when I recovered my composure. I was sitting with some work in my hand. My mother began to talk about Mark Upton, and I grew alarmed—alarmed at the tumult of happiness in my heart, wondering what that same gentle mother would say if she knew that all the world was changed for me.

Mark was at the cottage again the next morning, with the excuse of a message from his father. I see him now as I saw him then, with the May sunlight all about him, a smile lighting up his dark, handsome face, standing near the lilac-bushes, crying out in his cheery voice, "May I come in and see how you are this morning, Mrs. Chester?"

On that same afternoon I went for my usual stroll through the woods and down by the river. My heart and thoughts were full of him. It was hardly a surprise when I saw him crossing the little rustic bridge that spanned the river Way to join me. I was sitting in a nest of violets and forget-me-nots that grew down to the edge of the water.

Ah, me, it all comes back to me—the song of the birds, the sound of the wind in the great trees, the odor of the lilacs, and my lover's dark, handsome face bending over me, his warm, strong hand clasping mine! It would have been well, I sometimes think, had I died then and there with that full sunlight of happiness upon me. For, when I realized what was passing, when, above the music of the birds and the wind and the rush of the river, I heard every word, Mark Upton was telling me that he loved me, and asking me to be his wife who one short week before was only a child! Oh, happy time of the lilac-bloom, which had brought me a lover so good and so true! I dared not look at him. I glanced at the river and the trees—anything rather than meet his dark, loving eyes.

"Will you say that you are not angry, Miss Chester? 'Nellie' your mother calls you, and it is the prettiest name in the whole world—Nellie, will you try to love me?"

I faltered out that I had known him only one week. He cried, "What does that matter?" A week in such a case was like an age. There was no such thing as time in love.

"You know there is not, Nellie," he said. "I tell the simple truth when I say that at seven o'clock on the morning of the tenth of May I was heart-whole and fancy-free; I had never thought of love or marriage; and it is equally true that by ten o'clock I had sworn to myself that Nellie Chester should be my wife or no one. Nellie, you do not know what you looked like when I first saw you. Your hair was purest gold as the sunlight fell full upon it; your face was fresh and fair as a flower; your sleeve had fallen back, and half your beautiful arm was bare, as you tried to reach the lilac, and could not. I can only say that that moment you made your way to my heart, and that you will never leave it again. You have become part of my life. Now let me look into your eyes. I can read my answer there."

He raised my face in his hands and looked into it as though he would read my very soul.

"You do care for me, Nellie," he cried; "the love-light is in your eyes! Say you love me. What does it matter that we have known each other only one week? Why, my darling, if you had been my dearest friend for twenty years, I could not love you more. You know me as well now as you will in fifty years' time. I do not hide one thought of my heart from you."

What could I say—I, who loved him with all my girl's heart, and to whom his love was as sunlight and dew are to the flowers? I said something as to being very young.

"My hair is not gray, Nellie," he said, laughing. "You are seventeen; I am twenty. I know 'my love is but a lassie yet;' 'tis for that I love her."

Then he plighted his troth to me, taking me in his arms and kissing me as he said—

"I love you, Nellie; and while I live I shall love no other woman. If you will be my wife I will live and die for you; if you will not, I will call no other woman wife."

The laughing river and the singing birds seemed to repeat the words. I was dazed with happiness as I sat with my head on my lover's breast, wondering why such perfect bliss should be mine, content with knowing that I belonged to him, that my life and my love were his, that in the future we should always be together, glad to know that the dark, handsome face would never smile on another woman, glad to think that no other woman's hand would caress the clusters of dark hair, no other woman's lips kiss the face that was mine, all mine.

Oh, foolish, trusting, loving heart! I did not remember that in the depths of the dark, strong river lay shifting sands, that the wind never told the same story twice. To me my lover's dark eyes were true and tender as the stars. I forgot that the stars are not all fixed. I was very young, very loving, full of faith, but not very wise.

So, while the May sunshine shone around us, he kissed me and claimed me for his wife; and we walked back to the cottage as the "Sleeping Beauty" and the "Fairy Prince" walked, from the old world to a new.

CHAPTER II.

The old proverb states that the course of true love never runs smooth. Ours ran smoothly enough. The Doctor laughed when Mark told him of our engagement. My mother was delighted; she had liked Mark from the first. The one great drawback was that he was compelled to go to India for four years. He was a civil engineer by profession, and a lucrative appointment had been offered to him on a railway which was being extended. The advantages that would accrue to him were great. He would gain immensely in experience and knowledge and he would make money. The Doctor considered his son most fortunate. My mother agreed with him, but added that it would be sad for us to part. The Doctor replied that nothing better could have happened for us. We were too young to marry—too young, in his opinion, to know our own minds; and we could have no better test than four years' absence and trial of constancy.

But during the first few happy weeks we did not think much of the parting. It was a dark cloud ahead of us, a cloud that had a silver lining; for when the four years were ended Mark was to return home and we were to be married. I should, he promised me, always have a home in the country. He would never ask me to live in the town. It was in the month of May that we met, and in July we parted; but during the interval we spent the greater part of the time together. Other summer days have dawned for me, but none like those on which my young lover came early in the morning, while the dew sparkled on the grass, when we walked through the woods and down by the river, noting with loving eyes all that was so fair and beautiful around us, returning from our long rambles, our hands filled with wild flowers, to find my mother waiting breakfast for us, the table set out on the lawn. Then Mark would linger and pass the morning with me. He came back in the afternoon, and stayed with us until the moon rose.

How I loved him! Then I saw only the beauty of a great passion; now I see its pain and its pathos; now I know that the mighty power of love has not been given us to be centred in any creature. Then I had one idol, and, alas, I worshipped it! I had no life apart from my young lover's. I had no life, no love, no care, no thought apart from him. I read the love stories of others, written in poetry and prose; but no love was like mine. Surely wise people, while they laughed, would have wept over it! If he had asked for my life, I should have given it to him, as I had given my love, freely and with a smile. I felt something like pity for those he did not love; I felt that every girl living must envy me.

Mark Upton cared for me quite as much as I loved him. We spent those few weeks in a land into which no care, no sorrow came—the fairyland of love and hope. Every hour brought us closer together, bound us by newer and sweeter ties, while the summer flowers bloomed, the corn grew up in the fields, and the lilacs withered. I do not know what comes into other lives, but I hope that Heaven gives such a glimpse of happiness as mine to all.

On one occasion I heard the Doctor laughing as he talked to my mother. He asked her if she knew that in some parts of England the beautiful fragrant shrub known as southernwood was called "lad's love." My mother replied that she had never heard it so called, and asked why it was named "lad's love." I listened half curiously for the answer. "Because," he said, "it dies in a year, as lad's love often does." He looked at me as he spoke, and I knew he was thinking of Mark's love, which, after all, was a lad's love, and might live for a year or die in a day. But he did not know. He was old and immersed in the cares of a grave profession. How could he understand our love, loyalty and constancy?

One evening Mark had gone home; but the stars were so bright that I remained out of doors watching the night-sky. The dark blue vault was a mass of shining, twinkling gold. They were so bright and clear, and the faint mysterious light they threw upon the earth was so dreamily beautiful, that I was entranced.

"Nellie," cried my mother, "do come in."

"Mamma," I answered, "you come out."

Almost to my surprise she came, and we stood together watching the far-off, wonderful orbs.

"How bright they are, those beautiful stars," said my mother. "Ah, Nellie, how many thousand years have they been shining? What have they seen? And, my darling, how soon they will be shining on our graves."

But I, with my warm deep love—I felt no fear of death. Not even the stars in Heaven shone so brightly or were so true as my love. I said to her that I might die, but that the love that filled my whole soul never could. She looked at me with sad, sweet eyes.—When the stars shine in the sky her look and her words come back to me.

"Nellie," she said, "you should never give to a creature the love that is due the Creator. I have often thought, dear child," she continued, "that you love Mark too much. It is not safe to centre all your happiness in one person. If anything happens to that one, your whole life is shipwrecked."

"There can be no shipwreck where Mark is," I answered, strong in my faith and love.

My mother sighed.

"Nothing gives me more pleasure, Nellie, than to know how happy you are with Mark. I believe he is true as a man can be."

"True as a man can be, mamma, means infinitely true," I interrupted.

"Ah, no, my dear Nellie. Men are but mortal; their power of loving is not infinite. I do not wish to sadden you, to cloud your faith, to dim your love or lessen your trust; but I should like to warn you. Love with caution."

"There need be no caution where Mark is concerned, mother," I rejoined.

"I am old," she continued; "I have seen a great deal of life. I do not say—Heaven forbid—that all men are false, or all women; I do not say that one sex is more false than the other; but I have seen love betrayed, trust misplaced. I have known the honest heart of a man broken because a woman deserted him, and I have known a loving and tender-hearted girl die because her lover left her."

I raised my face to the stars shining in their calm, eternal beauty. Strong in my youth, ignorance and faith, I said lightly—

"Nothing of that kind can ever happen between Mark and me."

"Some loves," said my mother, "last for ever, some for a day; and oh, my dear Nellie, it seems to me that this last is, in these prosaic times, the commonest form of love."

"Love for a day!" I echoed. "Ah, thank Heaven, that is not Mark's love."

My mother looked at me anxiously; I wonder how many mothers have given to their daughters just the same sensible advice, and just as much in vain?

"Do you quite understand, Nellie?" asked my gentle, loving mother, "what I mean, what I want you to do? Mark is to be absent four years. I do not say that his love will change or grow less; but I beg of you to leave yourself one chance. Do not give him such entire love that, if he should die or forget you, or any circumstance should part you, your whole life would be ruined. Love with caution, Nellie."

"There is no need for caution with Mark!" cried my happy heart. To Mark, my handsome lover, I might give in superabundance the lavish love that filled my heart; and the words of my mother's warning fell on heedless ears.

I can remember a warm day in June, when Mark and I sought the shade of the tall trees that grew by the river. A refreshing breeze came over the water, and the birds were silent in the great heat. We were talking of our marriage, of that bright future which, like the June sunshine, had no shadow. Suddenly Mark asked me—

"Have you any relatives, Nellie? You and your mother seem to be quite alone in the world."

I told him that my father was an only child, my mother also, and that I was the same. The only relatives I had ever heard of were some distant ones in America; but I had none in England.

"It must have been lonely for you, my darling, before I came," he said.

I told him how my home-duties, and my love of nature, of flowers, trees, and birds, had filled my life. I had lived then in the gray of the twilight; I lived now in the light of the glorious sun.

"How little I dreamed that morning, that fair May morning, that I was to meet my fate," said Mark. "Nellie, I shall never forget how your hair gleamed in the sunshine."

I looked at him with happy eyes; his praise was sweet to me.

"We were talking about relatives, Mark," I said. "Have you many?"

"Ours is a very peculiar family," he said, laughing. "We have some relatives on my mother's side who are very poor; they live in London. On my father's side we have some distant relatives who are very rich; but we do not correspond with either. These rich people have a title too; but I shall never trouble them. If ever I have a title, it shall be through winning it, if ever I have a fortune, I shall have made it, Nellie."

My noble Mark! My whole heart bowed down before him; he was so brave, so gallant, so independent, as all true men are.

I never recalled that conversation, those few words, until I knew who Mark Upton's relatives were.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Beware of Ointment fo Catarrh that contains Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure and get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

☞Sold by druggists, price 75c. per bottle.

THE OLD DOCTOR'S

Cotton Root Pills

LADIES' FAVORITE.

ALWAYS RELIABLE and perfectly SAFE. The same as used by thousands of woman all over the United States, in the OLD DOCTORS private mail practice, for 38 years, and not a single bad result. Money returned if not as represented. Send 4 cents (stamps) for sealed particulars. Dr. WARD & CO., 117 N. 8th St., St. Louis, Mo.

A novel method of fishing is being used off San Diego, Cal. Incandescent electric lights are lowered into the water at night and a large net is placed below them. The fish are attracted by the glare, and are plainly visible. When sufficiently numerous the net is hauled up. The catches are enormous.

Wesley has a printing office in her former saloon. They use the ice box for the stock room and book case.

"August Flower"

What Is It For?

This is the query perpetually on your little boy's lips. And he is no worse than the bigger, older, balder-headed boys. Life is an interrogation point. "What is it for?" we continually cry from the cradle to the grave. So with this little introductory sermon we turn and ask: "What is AUGUST FLOWER FOR?" As easily answered as asked: It is for Dyspepsia. It is a special remedy for the Stomach and Liver. Nothing more than this; but this brimful. We believe August Flower cures Dyspepsia. We know it will. We have reasons for knowing it. Twenty years ago it started in a small country town. To-day it has an honored place in every city and country store. possesses one of the largest manufacturing plants in the country and sells everywhere. Why is this? The reason is as simple as a child's thought. It is honest, does one thing, and does it right along—it cures Dyspepsia. 6

G. G. GREEN, Sole Man'fr, Woodbury, N.J.

PILES RUDY'S PILE SUPPOSITORY is a sovereign remedy for Piles (bleeding, itching, blind, inward, etc.) whether of recent or long standing. It gives instant relief, and effects a radical and permanent cure. No surgical operation required. Try it and relieve your sufferings. Send for circular and free sample. Only 50 cents a box. For sale by druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of price.

MARTIN RUDY, Lancaster, Pa.

Paper For Sale.

The leading Republican newspaper at a good county seat. Good job office. Address Y care M. C. Newspaper Co., Mason City, Ia.-1a*

Farm For Sale.

A No. 1 Improved Stock Farm of 365 Acres for Sale Cheap.

THE PORTLAND STOCK FARM.

Situated adjoining the village of Portland, on the C. M. & St. P. R. R., 4 miles east of Mason City, Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa. Farm fenced into 18 different fields and yards all hog tight and horse high. Farm buildings and all improvements are first class. Two large troughs soft spring water five rods from barn; farm also watered by Lime Creek and several springs. Twenty acres of timber surround buildings, also one thousand (1,000) rods of beautiful willow hedge on farm, 20 to 75 feet high, mostly bordering on the highways. Four large barns (hay capacity 200 tons) with five hundred (500) feet of basement walls. A large water-power roller mill and cheese and butter factory join farm. A large, modern, first class farm house, built in 1890.

Mason City, the county seat of Cerro Gordo county, and the Lexington of Iowa, is a beautiful little city of about five thousand (5,000) inhabitants. She has just completed one of the best mile tracks in the state, which, with the fair grounds, have been built at an expense of $20,000.

Price of farm, forty-five dollars ($45.00) per acre. For particulars and picture of farm and buildings, call on or address the owner at Portland, Cerro Gordo County, Iowa.

A. S. FELT, prop.

The New Method.

☞If you are Unwell send me your name and address and I will mail 9 Days' treatment of the Famous Australian Electro Pills. They quickly cure Liver, Kidney or Stomach trouble, Constipation, Indigestion, LaGrippe, Pimples and Skin Diseases. Address DR. E. J. WORST. Ashland, O. FREE

The WEAK made STRONG

FREE TRIAL {In Nervous Debility, Lost Vitality, Weakness and Decay, sent free for 12 cents postage.

Address Dr. Ward Office, 117 N. 8th Street, St. Louis, Mo.

FAT FOLKS REDUCED

Mrs. Alice Maple, Oregon, Mo., writes "My weight was 320 pounds, now it is 195 a reduction of 125 lbs." For circulars address, with 6c., Dr. O. W. F. SNYDER, McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, Ill.

WANTED.

$15 A WEEK, ANY LADY, employed or unemployed, can make this for a few hours work each day. Salary or com. $10 samples free. Ad. H. BENJAMIN & CO., 115 N. 8th St., ST. LOUIS, MO.

☞ANY LADY can get a valuable secret that cost me $5.00, and a rubber shield for 30 cents.

Mrs. V. M. APP. CO.

115 N. 8th STREET, ST. LOUIS, MO.

$3.75 A DAY and steady work right at home for any man or lady. Write Stone & Wellington, Madison, Wis.

Mason City Newspaper Co-91-48

BUY STOCK

IN A

Good Gold Mine!

It will make you from 100 to 500 per cent. profit within two years. Don't wait; write for information now.

ADDRESS

Pittsburg-Mexican Mining Company,

PITTSBURG, KANSAS.

Mason City Business College,

Institute of Short-Hand and Telegraphy gives two complete courses for $30. Five experienced instructors in Commercial and Short-Hand Departments. Gray's System of Short-Hand taught. We have the largest and best lighted school room. Our graduates succeed. Day board $1.50 per week; furnished rooms 50 cents per week. Write for information.

C. P. HEADINGTON, Principal, MASON CITY, IOWA.

MASON CITY, IOWA,

Cancer Infirmary

The Only Reliable Institution in the Northwest. Homelike and Pleasant.

DR. M. V. MAYFIELD, the Specialist, has been more than successful for thirteen years. No Knife. No Caustics.

H. E. MOORE, the President, GUARANTEES A CURE OR NO PAY.

Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co.

of Milwaukee, Wis.

Assets Jan. 1st, 1891, - - - - - $42,353,912.96
Surplus Jan. 1st, 1891, - - - - $ 6,532,324.93

I consider my policies in your company the cheapest insurance I have.
JOHN V. FARWELL, Merchant.

I consider the Northwestern incomparably the safest, best and cheapest institution of the kind in the country.
WM. STEVENS PERRY, Bishop of Iowa.

I have dropped my policies in the Equitable of New York and New York Life and taken additional insurance in the Northwestern.
R. M. STEEL, Banker.

H. A. MUNGER, GENERAL AGENT, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.
D. R. HUBBARD, ASSOCIATE GENERAL AGENT, Mason City, Iowa.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

Best Cough Medicine. Recommended by Physicians. Cures where all else fails. Pleasant and agreeable to the taste. Children take it without objection. By druggists.

[illegible]

Official Paper of the City.

Railroad Time Table.

TAKES EFFECT MARCH 29TH, 1891.

LEAVE P. M.		ARRIVE A. M.
8	St. Paul.	7.05
8.35	Minneapolis.	6.30
A. M. 12.12	Little Falls.	5.10
5.35	Winnipeg Jct.	P. M. 10.00
7.30	Fertile.	7.30
8.25 p.m		7.15
8.56	Red Lake Falls.	5.48
8.15	Crookston.	5.24
9.30	Grand Forks.	6.50
11.20	Via Red Lake Falls.	7.20
P. M.		A. M.
4.25	Winnipeg.	11.23
8.45	Brandon	7.30

CHAS. S. FEE, G. P. T. A. W. S. MELLEN, G. M. J. A. DERRY, Agt.

Caution. Barbed Wire.

What that barbed wire fence has done to your horses Metzger's Veterinary Ointment will heal at once not leaving a scar, and will grow the hair as before. It is natures own remedy, and is warranted to heal any and all cases of scratches, Grease heal, collar and saddle gall, speed cracks, cracked heels, cuts, wounds, stiff or inflamed joints, frost bites, sore eyes, sore teats in [illegible] fever, inflamed and diseased feet, and will grow a new hoof in the quickest possible time. Call at W. A. Schreiter's and get a box and try it price 50c and full lbs. $1.00.

A Standard Remedy.

Metzger's Pile Ointment has long proven a boon to suffering humanity, and is effective whenever used. Those in need of a remedy of this kind can find none better or more effective and should get a package of Metzger's Pile Ointment, it is warranted to cure. Price 50c. At Schreiter's drug store.

A Sad Mistake.

Is to have a stable of fine horses and have the distemper start among them with nothing to prevent its spreading. Heed the warning and check it in the first stages of the disease by using Metzger's Pink Eye and Distemper Cure, as it has never been known to fail. Cures horses of old chronic coughs, colds, [illegible] and all throat, lung [illegible] and nasal troubles. Especially good in hay fever or heaves. Price $1 per bottle or 6 for $5. For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

The Police Gazette

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper Barber or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes. Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send Five Cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX,
Franklin Square, New York City

The Impending Danger.

Every horse owner dreads that most [illegible] disease "Colic" and although having at hand the best remedy he knows of still wishes for a quick and certain cure. It has recently been discovered that Metzger's Lightning Colic Cure is a never failing remedy. Therefore without delay call on your druggist and get a bottle as it is warranted to cure in 25 minutes any kind or stage of kidney, wind or spasmodic colic. Your horses are in danger if you do not keep it in your barn ready for an emergency. Price $1 per bottle or 6 for $5.00. For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

A Very Narrow Escape.

Yes, I had a very narrow escape, said a prominent citizen to a friend. I was confined to my bed for more than two years and all my friends gave me up. I had running sores on my limbs and after trying nearly everything was induced to try Metzger's Pain Eradicator and now I am sound and hearty. You will find it for sale by W. A. Schreiter. Price [illegible] trial size free.

A Perfect Success. VII

Rev. A. Antoine of Refugio, Tex., writes: As far as I am able to judge, I think Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic is a perfect success for anyone who has suffered from a most painful nervousness as I did. I feel like myself again after taking the Tonic.

WEST SIDE, Iowa, Oct. 4, 1890.

I was suffering from nervousness, brought on by [illegible] for about three years. I could not [illegible], I could not work and my memory [illegible]; I commenced using Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic, and after giving it a trial, [illegible] better, my strength has returned, and I am very well pleased with its effect on me.

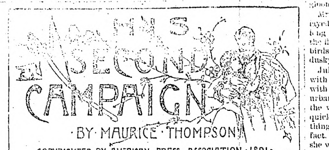
THOMAS DOWLING.

WOODSIDE, Minn., Nov. 27, 1889.

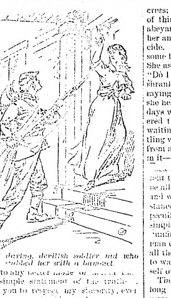
Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic cured me of [illegible]bling" and "swimming in the head."

ANDREW JANSEN.

[illegible] his Opportunity! DON'T Miss it, Reader. The majority neglect their opportunities, and from that cause live in poverty and die in obscurity! Harrowing despair is the lot of many, as they look back on lost, forever lost, opportunity. Life is passing! Reach out. Be up and doing. Improve your opportunity, and secure prosperity, prominence, peace. It was said by a philosopher, that "the Goddess of Fortune offers a golden opportunity to each person at some period of life; embrace the chance, and she pours out her riches; fail to do so and she departs, never to return." How shall you find the GOLDEN opportunity? Investigate every chance that appears worthy, and of fair promise; that is what all successful men do. Here is an opportunity, such as is not often within the reach of laboring people. Improved, it will give, at least, a grand start in life. [illegible] Address at once. H. [illegible] & Co., Box 880, Portland, Maine.



HIS SECOND CAMPAIGN
BY MAURICE THOMPSON
COPYRIGHTED BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION 1891



That daring, devilish soldier had who stabbed her with a bayonet.

way to any better mode of [illegible] the truth [illegible] this simple statement of the truth. I trust you to respect my sincerity, even if you must cast aside my love as something not worth your keeping."

Rosalie read this in her own room, read it and reread it, with a quickened pulse and a sweet sense of its half hopeful, half despairing spirit. It brought Edgar Julian before her, just as she had seen him last; his strong, handsome, truthful face full of passionate tenderness for her. She could not think clearly; her heart throbbed almost painfully. Adelaide came in presently and Rosalie gave her the letter to read.

"Do you love him, Rosalie?" the sister asked after she had finished.

"I—I—don't know," was the stammered reply.

"I think you ought to know," said Adelaide, "love is no light thing. Is he handsome?"

"No, not very—not handsome as they describe handsome men, but he is tall and strong and noble looking, and he is noble, great hearted, true."

"I believe you love him," said Adelaide, gazing searchingly into Rosalie's eyes, "and I am sorry of it."

Rosalie did not answer. Her beautiful bright head drooped and her eyes filled with tears.

"I do not see how you can love a northerner," Adelaide continued; "especially one who was in Sherman's army. Whenever I think of those ruffians who burned our home and reduced us to poverty, the gash in my arm seems to open afresh and I hate every soul in the north! Then poor papa with his wounds and his disfigurements"——

"Oh," moaned Rosalie, "I know, I know! Oh, I wish I had never, never left the 'pocket,' Adelaide, I am so very very wretched!"

Adelaide took Rosalie's head between her hands and drew it gently down upon her bosom. She knew what love was. A soldier's grave held one to whom her life had been pledged.

"Don't cry," she gently said; "if you love him it's all right, dear. It was wrong for me to say these things. It's all right; you mustn't mind my ill natured words. You ought not to suffer on my account. No doubt Mr. Julian is a good and true man."

"Yes, he is," said Rosalie quickly, lifting her head and wiping away her tears; "he is just as honorable and good as he can be."

Adelaide still kept her hands clasping Rosalie's face between them with a gentle, loving pressure.

"But you do love him, sister?" she murmured softly.

Rosalie suddenly blushed. "I do not know if I love him," she naively said, "but I should dearly love to see him again. I—I think a great deal of him."

Adelaide felt the influence of her sister's freshness as she faltered trembling and bewildered in the midst of this great new experience.

CHAPTER XXI.

ADELAIDE RECOLLECTS.

Rosalie found it difficult to know what she ought to write to Edgar Julian, if she ought to write at all. He had been so kind to her, and she respected his honorable frankness so much, that, even if she could not say she loved him, she felt generously anxious not to wound him. But she really longed to see him. He had filled a large space in her life, and had revealed to her a most interesting contrast as his ultra northern traits of character struck sharply against southern obstacles; not that she had traced and defined this contrast or drawn any conclusion from it, but she had felt his superior knowledge of affairs, his sturdy truthfulness, his faith in the future of America, his belief in the value and nobleness of labor, his genuine respect for the common people, and, on the other hand, his rich imagination and his tender eloquence. She could not realize the bitter memories nursed by her father and sister touching the dark struggle for the Lost Cause. She had no past to mourn over. The future and the present were hers. She naturally enough had fallen in love with northern ways.

It seemed to her that the world was made for earnest, persistent people to take and enjoy; she believed in freedom as the war had fixed it—in free education, free thought, free men and women. She was not aware that Edgar Julian had influenced her to believe in these things; the doctrine seemed quite as much her own as the old, Provencal cress; Julian had been simply a restorer of things lost—a reviver of things in abeyance. Rosalie keenly realized what her answer to Julian's letter must decide. She puzzled her mind to discover some happy way out of the dilemma. She asked herself over and over again, "Do I love him?" and just as often she shrank away from the responsibility of saying yes or no. Her heart trembled, she hesitated, faltered, dreamed. So the days went by while Edgar Julian shivered through the Chicago snowstorms waiting for a letter. He, too, was wrestling with a problem. He did not shrink from acknowledging his love—he gloried in it—but he did not feel safe in rushing [illegible] content to stay away. A man in love must be allowed some latitude of foolishness, and we ought to consider that each instance of love trouble has its sentimental peculiarities. Julian had uttered the simple truth when he wrote that he was "unfit for business since returning." No man could have been more preoccupied all the time, more restless, more inclined to wave affairs aside and to give himself over to his fancies.

The letter he was waiting for was a long while coming, and when it did come it only gave emphasis to his difficulty.

"Your letter," Rosalie wrote, "has been here for a good while. You will forgive me for not answering it sooner when I say frankly to you that I have been dreadfully at a loss as to my duty in the matter. I very much desire to be kind and good to you, but my selfishness has interposed itself all the time. On one hand I must not, I cannot, tell you to come back; on the other hand I should be delighted to see you and talk with you. I did not know until I returned that you had gone away, and I missed you so much that I became restless. You had better not come back, I think, for it would be unpleasant to you, unless you could repress and forget everything beyond our charming friendship. I prize you above all my friends, and frankly, I hardly know why, unless it is because you have humored my selfishness and fed my Provencal fancies as no one else save papa ever has. I shall be very unhappy if I lose you, and yet it would not be right for me to make you hope for what might never come.

"I respect you too sincerely not to be precisely frank if I knew how; but I have vainly tried to make up some phrase or other expressive of my feelings. The best I can do is to say that I hope you will not come back till you have determined to be my good, strong, generous friend, and nothing beyond. I could not bear to have you come in any other way, and yet I hope you will come. Our little garden is full of flowers and the air is very sweet with their perfumes.

"Papa and my sister Adelaide are here with us. We are going to Europe in July—to Provence, of course. Aunt Marguerite is going along as guardian and chaperon for Adelaide and me. Won't you write me and tell me those things about Chateau Chenier that you say you forgot to tell me while you were here? I am sorry to have to refuse you anything, but I cannot see how any good could ever come of permitting you to return, so long as you feel as you say you do. You wouldn't enjoy being here, and that would make me very unhappy. My century plant is in bloom. Give my love to Mrs. Largely. Your friend,

"ROSALIE CHENIER."

Julian read this letter with a queer mist in his eyes. He could not find much comfort in its half girlish, half stilted sentences, and yet he would not have had a word changed for anything. He imagined he could trace Rosalie's innocent frankness and freshness between the lines. He sat and gazed into a big blazing fire for hours after he had learned the letter by heart. Her elastic, graceful figure and warm bright face came up before him; he saw her gray brown eyes and straw gold hair; he heard her low, sweet voice. Did she love him? He read the letter again, pulling his mustache, frowned, smiled, read again, gazed into the fire almost fiercely, looked at his watch, went and packed his traveling bag and took the next train for the south.

When he got to Savannah he went to the Pulaski House. He did not care to rush in unaware upon the household at Roosevelt Place, especially since the Cheniers had come there. He sent his card to the house. An hour or two later Mrs. Roosevelt called for him in a carriage. She was glad to see him. Rosalie had gone to Jacksonville with Mr. Roosevelt, but would be back tomorrow. He was introduced to Colonel Chenier and Adelaide, and despite his predetermination to the contrary, was again installed as one of the household. You cannot live in a hotel in the south if your southern friend has a house.

Colonel Chenier and Edgar Julian were on good terms at once. A mutual friendliness, a soldierly comradeship, a shaking of hands on common ground, took place between them.

Adelaide, while not avoiding him, was dignified and shy, seeming to view him askance, as if doubting whether she ought to trust him, or as if trying to overcome an impulse toward hating him. Julian, on the contrary, felt a warm interest in this dark, sad faced girl at once, and he was not slow to show it. Against his kindly assaults reserve was a poor shield. Without seeming to be adroit or artful he reached her womanly nature at every unguarded point. He assumed the place of a big, amiable, interesting brother, [illegible] to draw his sister out of her gloom.

Mr. Roosevelt and his niece were delayed a week in Jacksonville—a very long week of dreamy, drowsy weather, the flowers bursting out and the mocking birds singing in every orange grove and dusky fig orchard.

Julian prevailed on Adelaide to walk with him in Forsyth park, and to drive with him to the several charming suburban resorts. He found her wiser in the ways of the world than Rosalie—quicker to catch hidden meanings in things—a strong, self poised woman, in fact. If she was not strictly beautiful she was attractive, and gave him to see that she possessed a reserve of culture a little faltering on account of long disuse.

One morning they sat together on one of the pine benches near the fountain in Forsyth park, and by some chance Julian got upon the subject of his war experiences, and after the fashion of ex-soldiers told over many of his adventures. He had a fascinating way of presenting these personal reminiscences in the form of sparkling sketches. Adelaide recoiled a little now and then, but his coloring was so liberal to the south that she could not be affronted. She began to grow strangely used to him, if one may so express it; his face, his movements, his personal effect, seemed to antedate, in some way, her acquaintance with him. As he went over again his boyish freaks in the army she saw him more as a boy soldier than as a man, and he had a curiously familiar look.

A few northern tourists were abroad in the park, sauntering up and down the shaded walks and dallying around the flower decked fountain. Some mocking birds were singing ecstatically in the treetops overhead.

Suddenly, without any definite forewarning, by one of those inexplicable cerebral tricks, Adelaide recognized Julian as that daring, devilish soldier lad who stabbed her with a bayonet and burned her father's mansion.

The knowledge came upon her as the apparition of death or some numbing calamity. The blood went out of her face, and she grew weak, trembled, drew her breath heavily, and clutched the back of the bench for support.

Julian instantly became aware of this change. He was startled.

"You are ill," he exclaimed; "what is it? I will call a carriage."

"No, no," she said faintly; "in a moment it will be over. It is a mere faintness. Do not be alarmed."

She struggled bravely and conquered more than he dreamed of. Presently she smiled and added:

"It has passed already; it was quite sudden. Let us return, if you please."

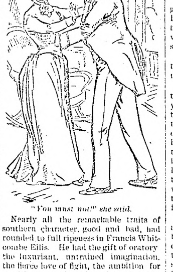
"But you are not strong enough to walk," he insisted.

"Oh, yes," she said, rising and standing firmly before him; "I can walk as well as ever. I am quite over it. I assure you."

They returned to Roosevelt Place, Julian lightly talking, and she answering in monosyllables.

CHAPTER XXII.

A FERVID LOVER.



"You must not!" she said.

Nearly all the remarkable traits of southern character, good and bad, had rounded to full ripeness in Francis Whitcombe Ellis. He had the gift of oratory the luxuriant, untrained imagination, the fierce love of fight, the ambition for wealth, the mediaeval notion of honor, no regard whatever for truth in the abstract, a perfect faith in the purity of women, an absolute punctuality in keeping his word simply on the score of conventional honor, and a reverence for everything pertaining to southern aristocracy, only equaled by his hatred of everything northern and his high disdain of manual labor and all forms of mere breadgetting effort. To balance these characteristics, he was generous, brave, courteous to those whom he liked, tender hearted, full of warm sympathies and laudable impulses, charmingly companionable, and possessed of the gift called "magnetism," by which he had made his way to his present wealth and power in an incredibly short space of time. He had been aided at every step by good luck, as such men seem always to be, as well as by the fine intuition of a born genius, if the mere power to control and combine may be called genius.

He loved Rosalie Chenier with a passion like intensified fire whenever he thought of her but once his thoughts turned from her, he did not love her at all. He was not fickle. He simply lacked the power to think of two things at once. He focused his whole mind and soul upon whatever for the time occupied his attention.

Rosalie's direct accusation against him had stung his southern sense of honor almost to the point of driving him mad for the time. He had straightway rushed back to Savannah, bent upon making plain his innocence. That she should think him guilty of a vulgar assassination was more than he could bear. For awhile his mental torture was exquisite. He went to work with enormous energy trying to ferret out the real assassin. If only Colonel Talbot could speak he might easily settle the whole matter with a word, but Colonel Talbot could not speak; he lay there dumb and unconscious, a puzzle to the learned physicians.

When Rosalie returned to Savannah from the "pocket" Ellis knew it, but he did not attempt to see her; he meant never to speak to her again until his innocence had been proven beyond a doubt. He admitted to himself that, in a way, he deserved this punishment, remembering distinctly as he did his foolish threatening words. But he had a large faith in the star of his destiny—that is, in his luck, and he spared no effort to get into the mystery of that unhappy night.

After a time Sir Edmond Kane came back to Savannah for a few days, and Ellis was flattered by the marked attention paid him by the English aristocrat and his fair daughter. His thoughts were turned from Rosalie and his investigation of the crime, and he gave Miss Ellen Kane his undivided attention. The English girl found him a charming companion—so attentive, so knightly, so full of ready expedients for rational amusement, and withal, so delightful as a story teller. Those days made a memorable spot in Miss Kane's life. She went back to England dimly conscious that she had almost loved an American. As for Ellis, he never thought of her again once she had passed out of his reach.

At length the day came when Colonel Talbot regained consciousness. It was while Rosalie was gone to Jacksonville that one morning the newspapers made the following announcement:

"A Mystery Cleared Up—Colonel Warren Talbot Recovers Consciousness and Explains the Manner of His Assassination—He Was Struck by Wamsley the Forger, Who Thereby Got Possession of the Forged Instrument Which Colonel Talbot Had on His Person That Night. Wamsley Has Escaped."

Those were the headlines. Ellis read the account and then hastened to Talbot's bedside to get confirmation of its details. Armed with such assurances as made his innocence absolutely unquestionable, he went forth exulting. He could not wait for Rosalie to return, but departed at once for Jacksonville.

It was dark when he arrived at the hotel in which Mr. Roosevelt and his niece had rooms, but the first person he saw was Rosalie's colored maid standing on a veranda. He went to her at once.

"Fanny," he said, "where is your young mistress, Miss Chenier?"

"She's in her room, sah."

"Can I see her?"

"I go see, sah."

"Here, Fanny, take this."

He wrote on a card.

"Give Miss Chenier that and tell her I am waiting for an answer; and, Fanny, fetch her answer here at once—do you understand?"

"Yes, sah," said the girl, taking the card and hurrying away.

The veranda was on the second floor, and overlooked a garden on one hand and the street on the other. The green boughs of a water oak brushed the gayly painted railings. Ellis walked back and forth restlessly, every moment seeming to drag itself by with the delay of something maliciously perverse. He was in one of his intense, fervid moods. His face was lighted as with a pale flame, and his eyes, so dark and fine, were glowing with the heat of passion.

When he thought he heard the servant girl returning he looked around and saw Rosalie instead. She came rapidly to him and held out her hand. He took it with feverish eagerness and in a half stifled voice said:

"Rosalie, I have come to show you the proofs of my innocence. You said I might"——

"Come into our parlor," she said, interrupting him; "you look tired. Have you just arrived?" She had already turned about and was leading the way to the parlor. He followed her, gazing eagerly down at the sweet, warm cheek half turned to him as she swiftly swept through a long hall. She was dressed in black, which made her crinkled yellow hair look all the brighter by contrast. He thought she had grown taller within these last few weeks; she certainly was more beautiful than ever before.

The room into which they passed was a small, bright parlor opening upon a broad balcony. She offered him an armchair, and flung wide the door to let in the perfumed evening air. He did not sit down, but stood in the middle of the floor with his burning eyes fixed upon her face. She could not look at him, and her heart was in her throat. His first words had revealed to her all he was going to say. She had turned pale, and despite her effort to keep control of herself she was trembling a little.

"It was very, very wicked of me to say that dreadful thing about you," she said in a subdued but perfectly clear and steady voice. "I was laboring under"——

"No, no," he cried; "you need not begin in that way. It was all my fault. You had a right"——

"I had no right," she firmly said; "it was mean of me; but you will forgive me—you have come to do that?"

"I have come to tell you how I love you," he exclaimed impetuously, "and to ask you to be my wife. Oh, Rosalie, Rosalie, how I love you!"

She retreated before him as she would have done before a flame. She put out her beautiful hands and motioned him back. He stopped short, a strange change coming across his dark face. He was as handsome as man could be as he folded his arms on his breast and looked half despairingly, half triumphantly down at her. When he spoke he had all the magic of his voice under perfect control.

"Rosalie," he said, "you told me I might come back to you, when I could prove my honor unstained. I bring it to you as spotless as"—— "I know, I know," she hurried to say; "I did you irreparable wrong. I shall never forgive myself—never."

"Don't talk that way," he exclaimed, "I can't bear it. You have done no wrong. You are all right. Let the past keep its troubles and misunderstandings; I want to be happy now. Rosalie, are you afraid of me? Am I so dreadful to

Green Bay,
Winona
& St. Paul

Railroad. Best and most Direct Line Between

LACROSSE,
WINONA,
Neillsville,
Eau Claire,
Grand Rapids,
Stevens Point,
New London,
Appelton,
Neenah,
Menasha,
Oshkosh,
Fon du Lac,
GREEN BAY,

And all Points in
EASTERN WISCONSIN,
Iron Districts of Northern Michigan and Lake Superior Regions.

Close Connections and Quick Time,
See That Your Ticket Reads Via
GREEN BAY, WINONA & ST. PAUL
Railroad.

S. W. Champion,
Superintendent, Green Bay, Wis.
J. B Last,
Ass't Gen. Pass. Agt., Green Bay, Wis.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Edwin T. Bigelow of Polk County, Minnesota, mortgagor, to William Plankinton, mortgagee, bearing date the 21st day of January, 1884, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 21st day of January [illegible], at 2:15 o'clock p. m., in book O of mortgages on page [illegible] and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. The amount claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date hereof is the sum of eight hundred twenty-two dollars besides the sum of seventy-two and [illegible] dollars for taxes necessarily paid by said mortgagee and interest, and fifty dollars, attorney's fees, stipulated for in said mortgage.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in said mortgage, viz: The south east quarter of section thirty two in township one hundred and fifty [illegible] north of range forty seven west containing one hundred and sixty acres of land more or less in Polk county and state of Minnesota, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, or his deputy, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston, in said county and state, on the 28th day of November, 1891 at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day.

Dated Sept. 1st, A. D. 1891.

WILLIAM PLANKINTON, Mortgagee.
S. P. PIERCE, Attorney, Crookston, Minn. 1-26

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Silvester Johnson and [illegible] Johnson, his wife, of Polk county, Minnesota, mortgagors, to Francis W. Noyes, mortgagee, bearing date the 7th day of July 1882, and, with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 8th day of July, 1882, at 11:30 o'clock a. m. in book F of mortgages on pages 562 to 563 and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. The amount claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date hereof is the sum of one hundred and ninety seven dollars ($197) besides the sum of one hundred thirteen and 11-100 dollars for taxes necessarily paid by said mortgagee and interest, and twenty five dollars, attorney's fees, stipulated for in said mortgage.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in said mortgage, viz: The east half of the southeast quarter and the east half of the north east quarter of section number thirty two in township No. one hundred and forty nine north, of range forty-five west, and containing one hundred and sixty acres of land more or less, according to the government survey thereof in Polk county, and state of Minnesota, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, or his deputy, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 28th day of November, 1891, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day.

Dated October 1st, A. D. 1891.

Francis W. Noyes, Mortgagee.
S. P. Pierce, Attorney, Crookston, Minn. Oct8-26

State of Minnesota, county of Polk—ss.

In Probate Court, Special Term, Nov. 19th, 1891.

In the matter of the estate of Pierre Montbriant deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Esther Dubuque of the town of Gentilly of the county of Polk, representing, among other things that Pierre Montbriant, late of the county of Polk in the state of Minnesota, on the 1st day of April, A. D. 1891, at the county of Polk died intestate and being an inhabitant of this county at the time of his death, leaving goods, chattels and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is the widow of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to Esther Dubuque granted.

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before this court, on Tuesday, the 8th day of December, A. D. 1891, at 2 o'clock p. m., at the probate office, in the city of Crookston in said county.

Ordered further, that notice thereof be given to the heirs of said deceased, and to all persons interested, by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Red Lake Falls News, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 19th day of November, A. D. 1891.

By the Court,
C. M. Benson, Judge of Probate, oct15-29

First National Bank

RED LAKE FALLS, MINN.

JAS. I. WYER, Pres.
JOS. SMITH, Vice President.
THEO. GARCEAU, Cashier.

Capital .... $50,000.
Surplus..... $5,000.

Careful Attention and Prompt returns given all Collections.

ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

Notice to Local Subscribers.

☞All local subscribers who know themselves to be indebted to the NEWS for subscription are hereby requested to call at once to settle. There are several hundred names on our list of local subscribers and a large percentage of these are in arrears—many have not paid anything on the paper, though enjoying its weekly visit for years. This, however, is the first notice of this nature the NEWS has felt called upon to make, and we feel confident it will not be necessary to repeat it. We don't think there is one dishonest name on our list, and we hope they will all sustain us in this opinion. The NEWS is $1.50 a year, so bring that amount for each year of indebtedness. The majority of these local subscriptions have run for about three years. Don't put this matter off, but act at once. We will hold our liberal offer to subscribers who pay one year in advance till these settlements are made—a few days—so that all may avail themselves of it.

Haynes is coming.

Scarce as hens' teeth.—Servant girls.

The 8th st hill has been fixed up quite comfortably and jeremiade in relation thereto ceases.

Mr. and Mrs. Victor Marchaud of Badger Creek, are the happy parents of a bright boy.

E. H. Strannahan was down from St. Hilaire to-day making arrangements for the Thanksgiving ball.

A dramatic entertainment under the auspices of Clearwater Lodge I. O. O. F. would draw a large audience.

Services next Sabbath morning and evening in the Presbyterian church. All are cordially invited to attend.

Don't miss the Haynes Palace Studio Car at the Northern Pacific depot Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Nov. 24, 25 and 26.

Joe Ralph took the train for West Superior Wisconsin this morning, after having settled his business affairs here for the winter.

The Clearwater Lodge I. O. O. F. will do a charitable work this winter in the way of entertaining the public with a dramatic production. They should be encouraged.

We have an office cat. His name is Tom. He face measures six inches in diameter—without counting in the whiskers. He is a specimen of noble cathood.

Dolphis Champeaux is another subscriber who realizes that printers can't exist on ozone "Here is $1.50 for the NEWS," he said "My family couldn't get along without it." That little speech was well received.

Grim winter seems to have taken a firm hold and has apparently "taken off his things" and settled down for a sociable stay. The jingle of merry sleighbells fills the air and the festive skates respond once more to the annual roll call.

August Brunelle is one of the prosperous farmers of Lake Pleasant township—in fact the title to a homestead in that township seems to be a companion to success. He has just completed thrashing 3,000 bushels of wheat. August was marketing some of it Friday and called on the NEWS to pay up his subscription.

Mr. Jerry Poirier and Miss Eliza Ballergon were married at Crookston on Tuesday, by Rev. Fr. Faille. Both are well known here. Miss Ballergon is a daughter of George Ballergon. They will reside at Warren, where Mr. Poirier has charge of a farm for T. S. Tricky. The happy couple have our best wishes for their future.

The national Chautauqua class this year comprises fifteen thousand students, for the three years' course. Those who complete the course will have a fair education, however limited their former attainments may have been. They will not be compelled, when in company, to be silent except when talking about the weather or the circus.

C. P. Demers, county commissioner, in company with J. Nolan, of Crookston, have been inspecting bridges throughout this section this week. Mr. Demers says the Clearwater bridge is o k but the Red Lake river bridge is not and has been condemned. Travelers will have to use the ice. It will be repaired as soon after the commissioners meet as possible.

Isaac Fournier of Terrebonne is passing around the cigars over the arrival of a son and heir.

Anybody wishing to take the Chicago Daily News, Minneapolis Journal or Times, can get them, delivered free at your homes, for 10c a week, from Victor Patnode.

Edward Huot has suddenly achieved fame. The bee article from the NEWS relating to his succes as an apiarist has been copied in the twin city papers and half the local papers of the state.

The Crookston Times will start a daily. The Times is progressive and has always given Crookston a good paper. In its new attainments we hope to recognize the old spirit. The journalists of Crookston are progressing—except Cooke, who ought to move out to Numedal or Belgium.

Maggie, the seven year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Schmitz died Saturday of diphtheria and was buried Sunday. One other of the children was afflicted with the disease but prompt and skillful medical attention checked its progress. The house was quarantined a couple of days.

Thursday, Nov. 26th, is the day set apart for giving thanks to God for His watchful care over us during the past year. This national Thanksgiving day will be observed, by the Presbyterian church, with appropriate services. The services will be held Thursday, Nov. 26, at 11 o'clock in the Bergdorf building. An invitation is hereby extended to the public to attend these services.

Dolphis Champoux took his eldest son Damr, to St. John's University for one term. He then proceeded to Stillwater, Sommerset and Marine, where he visited with old Canada friends and relatives, among whom was a brother he had not seen for fourteen years, and who once owned a claim at Badger Creek. Mr. Champoux reports having had a delightful time among his old friends and his relatives, completing the trip returning by way of Duluth.

Lauritz Jensen intends to celebrate Thanksgiving. We have made careful inquiries, have silently taken notes and find that the exact number of pigeons he has doomed for the Thanksgiving sacrifice is thirty. We recommend that both our physicians hold themselves in constant readiness for a professional call after 12 m., Nov. 26th, in view of the above facts. We shall, personally, be relieved from excessive uneasiness, only upon the intelligence that Lauritz came out sound—in the meantime, let us hope.

Now we have just the thing—a thrilling love story, which will be printed on the inside of the paper in weekly installments. It will be charming. Who don't love a love story? From the small boy to the crusty old bach, both of whom read it on the sly, to the blushing maiden who sees her lover portrayed in the hero of each story, and the stately matron who has forgotten that humanity produces real lovers, but who nevertheless delights in a romance on paper—it will be read with keen delight. By all means turn to "Love For a Day" before laying the NEWS away.

The NEWS has just completed five hundred twelve-page pamphlets, the "Course of Study" of Red Lake Falls public schools." The course is carefully graded and will be followed in the schools. Students completing it will receive a State High School diploma which will admit them to the corresponding courses in the University of Minnesota. The High School is gradually developing, and in the course of a few years will be firmly developed here. It will be necessary, as the next step, to secure an assistant to the principal, to have the full quota of teachers for the High School courses This will probably be done next year.

Terrebonne's popular pastor, Reverend Louis Feige, made us a pleasant call yesterday—not merely because he deposited a smiling V, we affirm, but because the reverend gentleman was in a particularly happy mood. The present status of the Terrebonne parish can hardly find an equal in this district, being entirely out of debt with a fund in the treasury that is creeping close to three thousand dollars. The church building is not satisfactory, and will be replaced by a new structure at the proper time. An assessment will be made shortly, for the purpose of raising additional funds. The rate as agreed upon is one per cent. of this year's harvest. When Terrebonne builds a church it will be a handsome and costly edifice. The thrift of the parish is a criterion of the financial prosperity of the people, which no one notes with more pleasure than the NEWS.

DR. PRICE'S

Cream Baking Powder.

Used in Millions of Homes—40 Years the Standard.

DO YOU EAT

Candies, Nuts, Fruits? Ovide Emard sells such. Fresh and cheap, fresh and cheap. The finest and the best. When you think of Candy, or nuts or fruit or fancy groceries or

TOBACCO

Or pipes, or schoool supplies, or writing inks, or photograph albums or autograph albums,

OR PENS

Go to Ovide Emard and he will give you digestible prices that will please you.

All kinds of COAL for sale at Hoskin's elevator.

32 W. T. SPILLANE.

Don't forget, when about to lay in a suppy of coal, that you may be supplied at P. & J. Meehan's yards on Main st.

WANTED.—A girl for general housework.

FRANK E. HUNT.

WANTED.—A girl for general housework. Good wages. Small family. Must apply soon.

MRS. J. D. MARSHALL.

Comr. Demers reports that Charlie Rapp's store at St. Hilaire was threatened by the fire fiend Tuesday night. Prompt action by citizens saved it, with little loss.

WHEAT.—No. 1 hard, 78.
No. 1 Northern 76.
" 2 " 69.
" 3 " 63.

Do not fail to see the pictures at the Haynes Palace Studio Car and take advantage of this rare opportunity to secure a first-class photograph of yourself or family.

Simeon Patnode, the blacksmith, has more work than he can attend to and is looking around for a good horseshoer. Such a one looking for work, apply at the shop on 2nd st south.

Mrs. J. D. Marshall has returned from St. Paul after a pleasant visit. Upon Mrs. Marshall has been conferred the honor of state corresponding secretary of the Non-partisan Women's Christian Temperance Union.

Miss Christine Morin leaves this evening to attend a year's session at St. Joseph's Academy, St. Paul. This is a favorite sisters' institution, and Miss Morin's many friends wish for her an honorary place among the students.

Jas Meehan Sr. came down from Thief River Falls Tuesday. Mr. Meehan has not only mastered the intricacies of the lumbering business, but it is surprising with what facility so loyal a Gælic son handles the French dialect.

The cold weather continues. Ice seven inches thick has been taken from the rivers. Thrashing operations have not been suspended, but one farmer after another is made happy by getting his crop of cereals into the granary.

Mat Skala's place on Broadway stil retains its popularity, and not without reason—Mat has dexterity and tact. A full stock of wines, liquors and cigars. When in need of liquors for medicinal purposes.

About this time of year there is an annual excursion to Canadian points which is well patronized from this point. The Northern Pacific and Wisconsin Central lines are offering great inducements. Those contemplating making the trip should look the articles over in this issue appertaining to the subject under comment.

There will be a Thanksgiving ball at Opera Hall Thursday evening next by the St. Hilaire orchestra. This orchestra is said to produce fine music, so those who enjoy dancing and feel in a thankful mood should go. The tickets will be 75 cents. The band is made up as follows: Clarienette—Prof. Cooper; cornet, E. H. Strannahan; 1st violin, J. E. Holmes: 2d violin, Martin Williams; bass viol, Will Peters. A competent caller will be engaged.

Simeon Patnode sold his woodburning thrashing engine and separator Saturday and four burly Norsemen hitched four span of oxen to the outfit and hauled it into the northern part of the county at the rate of about five miles a day. The men state that in their neighborhood no thrashing has yet been done, and the people are getting desperate. It is safe to say the "soldier's return" was not more enthusiastically welcomed than this delegation when they arrived home with the thrashing outfit.

:- IMPERIAL -:

TONSORIAL HALL!

N. MORISETTE, PROP.

Everything First Class!

SHAVING,
HAIR CUTTING,
SHAMPOOING!

☞Shaving 15 cents.
Haircutting 25 cents.☜

MainStreet. Red Lake Falls

Improved Passenger Service.

Under the new time schedule of "the North-Western Line," C., St. P., M. & O. Ry., all passenger trains of this line make the trip between St. Paul and Chicago in less than 14 hours.

The Pullman and Wagner Vestibuled Limited, leaving St. Paul at 7:30 p. m. makes the trip to Chicago in 13½ hours and from Chicago to St. Paul in 13 hours and 25 minutes.

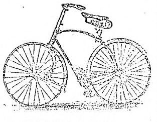
The Daylight Express leaving St Paul at 7:45 a. m. makes the trip to Chicago in 13 hours and 50 minutes and from Chicago to St. Paul in 13 hours and 45 minutes.

This is the only line running all its trains in less than 14 hour between St. Paul and Chicago, and while this time is quick trains don't have to run at as high speed to make their time as on other lines, because this is shorter than any other line.

In addition to these facts this is the only line by which connections are assure in Chicago with all fast line trains from Chicago to the East and South in the morning and at night.

Note.—Fares by this line are always as low as by any other.

For Map Folder ecupe and addres T. W. TEASDALE, Gen'l Passenger Agent St. Paul, Minn.



BYCICLE-

For Catalogues, Terms and Prices, address the Undersigned. Freight advantages! Liberal Terms—small monthly payments.

PHIL. A. KAUFER.

I. LEMIEUX,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON,

Office in residence, First street, Red Lake Falls, Minn.

Attention Canadians.

WINTER EXCURSIONS TO PRINCIPAL POINTS IN CANADA.

Will again be run from the Northest and all principles points in at the low rate of $40.00 for the round tirp. Tickets will be on sale in Manitoba daily from Tuesday December 1st to 30th inclusive and Northern Minnesota and North Dakota on Tuesday December 1st and 8th and daily from December 15th to 22nd inclusive and on Tuesday December 29th. Limit of tickets 90 days from date of sale. Those contemplate taking advantage of these low rate excursions should bear in mind that the Northern Pacific in connection with the Wisconsin central from the public highway from points in the Nortewest to Chicago On December 1st, 8th, 15th 22nd, anp 29th through Pullman furnised tourist sleeping cars will be run via those lenes to Chicago with out change, in which the rate for one double berth from starting point Chicago will be but $2.00.

Tickets, maps, time table and full information can be obtainet from any agent of the Northern Pacific R. R.

Canadian Round Trip Excurion Thickets will be on sale from points in Minnesota and North Dukota on the following Dates: Dec. 1st, 8th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21nd and 29th at a rate of $40.00 for the round Trip to Montreal and all points west thereof in Quebec and Onterio limited to return 90 days. These tickets will also be sold to points east of Montreal in Cuebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince edward's Island at one fare for the round trip from Montreal. Tickeks will be extenned at Destonation at following Rata: 15 days on payment of $5 00, 30 days 10.00, 45 days 15.00 and 60 days $20.00. excursion beyond the 60 days will be given on payment of $10.00 for each excursion of 30 days or part thereof beyond the 60 days.

Any inquiries regarding rates and connections will be cheerfuly answered by the undersigned.

J. A. DUFFY, Agt.
CHAS. S. FEE.
G. P. T. A. St. Paul, Minn.

For Sale.

I HAVE FOR SALE THE FOLLOWING LANDS,

Improved and Unimproved

FARMS

IN POLK COUNTY, MINN.

Long Time, Small Payments, Low Rate of Interest.

	SECTION.	TOWN.	RANGE.	SETTLER.
W½ of Nw¼	29	147	43	Wilson
Nw¼ of sw¼	28	147	43	Wilson
Se¼ of Ne¼	30	141	52	Wilson
Se¼	6	148	42	Sylvestersen
Se¼	8	146	45	Troxell
Ne¼	2	148	45	Dillon
Sw¼	2	148	44	LaDue
S½ of Nw¼	2	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Rivard
S½ of Sw¼	4	149	44	Bombardier
N½ of Nw¼	9	149	44	Bombardier
Se¼	7	146	41	Vaudrin
Nw¼	11	149	44	Tanasse
Ne¼	11	149	44	Emil Fontane
Ne¼	4	149	45	Beaudette
Sw¼	12	149	45	Herbert
E½ of Ne¼ & E½ of Se¼	23	149	45	Patnode
Sw¼	24	149	46	Chayer
Sw¼	20	149	46	Haber
Ne¼	26	149	48	Folk
Ne¼ of Nw¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
N½ of Ne¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
Nw¼ of nw¼	9	150	41	Lemieux
Ne¼	26	150	41	Galeurey
Ne¼	10	150	42	Dagneau
Se¼	13	150	42	Lajambe
Se¼	25	150	42	Sylvester
Nw¼	32	150	42	Lachapelle
Se¼	12	150	43	Deserve
W½ of Se¼	13	150	43	Marlow
N½ of Ne¼	24	150	43	Marlow
Nw¼	17	150	43	Desotelle
se¼	11	150	43	Lizee
Ne¼	23	150	43	Besson
Se¼	21	150	43	Velie
Se¼	29	150	43	Teepin
E½ of Nw¼	31	150	43	Rabillard
Lots 1 and 2	31	150	43	Rabillard
Nw¼	32	150	43	Dandenault
Ne¼	33	150	43	Gaudette
Ne¼	19	150	44	Bertellere
Se¼	31	150	44	Charron
Nw¼	33	150	44	Zaiser
Sw¼	34	150	44	Houle
Ne¼	6	150	45	Garon
E½ Sw¼	6	150	45	LaBelle
Lots 6 and 7	6	150	45	LaBelle
E½ of Sw¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
W½ Se¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
Nw¼	12	150	46	Pare
Sw¼ of Tw¼	3	151	42	Doutra
S½ Se¼	4	151	42	Doutre
Se¼ Sw¼	4	151	42	Doutre
Se¼ of Nw¼	4	150	42	Meilleur
Sw¼ of Ne¼	4	151	42	Meilleur
Lots 2 and 3	4	151	42	Meilleur
N½ of Se¼	18	151	42	Sotourneau
N½ of Sw¼	17	151	42	Sotourneau
Se¼	15	151	43	McIntire
Lots 1 2 and 3	17	151	43	Emard
E½ of Nw¼	17	151	43	Emard
Ne¼ of Nw¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
Nw¼ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
S½ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
W½ of W½	23	151	43	Pace
Ne¼	32	151	45	Beausoleel
E½ of Nw¼	7	152	44	Blaire
Lots 1 and 2	7	151	44	Blaire
Nw¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Lots 8 9 and 12	15	151	44	Bottineau
Ne¼ Se¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Nw¼ Sw¼	23	151	44	Bottineau
S½ Ne¼	6	151	44	Muller
Lots 1 and 2	6	151	44	Muller
Se¼	4	151	45	Jones
Se¼	14	151	45	Berry
Ne¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	32	151	45	Fleurie
Ne¼	20	150	46	McLean
Ne¼	21	151	46	Gauthier
Se¼	24	151	46	Tougas
Se¼	8	151	48	Lyle
Ne¼	25	152	42	Paussant
W½ of Ne¼ & w½ of se¼	28	152	43	Beaulieu
Nw¼	30	152	43	Turville
E½ of Nw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
Lot 1	31	152	43	Rourke
Ne¼ of Sw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
N½ of Sw	10	152	44	Loe
Sw¼ of Se¼	10	152	44	Loe
Ne¼	13	152	44	Sandon
Sw¼	15	152	44	Dahlbeck
Nw¼	25	152	44	Rourke
Sw¼	25	152	44	Comstock
Ne¼	34	152	44	Rourke
Nw¼	25	152	45	Carroll
Se¼	28	152	45	Pepin
Nw¼	32	152	45	Pilon
S½ of Ew¼	2	152	46	Kirsch
Lots 3 and 4	2	152	46	Kirsch
E½ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Ne¼ of Se¼	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼	20	152	46	Carlton
Tw¼	26	152	46	Billardeau
Sw¼	4	152	48	Fessy
Fe¼	24	152	49	Browndae
Se¼	11	153	43	Ness
Nw¼	25	153	44	Ives
Sw¼ of Ne¼	2	152	45	Bray
Lot 2	2	153	45	Bray
W½ of Se¼	2	153	45	Bray
Nw¼ of Sw¼	10	153	45	Bray
Sw¼	4	153	45	Lucian
Nw¼	6	152	45	Lusia
Sw¼	12	153	45	Clement
E½ of E½	14	153	45	Clement
W½ of E½	14	153	45	Coe
Se¼	18	153	45	Labounta Sr.
Sw¼	15	153	45	Labounta
E½ of W½	2	153	46	Lusia
Nw¼	8	153	46	Kelly
Se¼	8	153	46	Hazeltine
Ne¼	14	153	45	Stacy
Nw¼	26	153	46	Cole
Se¼	26	153	46	Labounty
Se¼	28	154	45	Gooler
S.½ of Ne	32	154	46	Bautain
Se¼	25	153	46	Lusian
Ne¼	31	154	46	Thamus
S½ Ne¼ & 1,2	2	152	46	Filbin
Nw¼	32	150	45	Brosseau
Ne¼	30	152	43	Miller
Ne¼	19	152	44	Borup
Ne¼	20	150	41	Stone
Sw¼	10	151	46	Benoit

A. D. Wishard,
RED LAKE FALLS,
ma 21f5 Polk Co, Minn.

NORTHERN PACIFIC

BETWEEN

Winnipeg, Gilby, Dayton, Grafton, Grand Forks-Crookston, Red Lake Falls.

AND ALL POINTS

EAST AND WEST.

There is nothing better than the service on

THE DINING CAR LINE

Through Pullman Sleeping Cars Daily Between Points in the

RED RIVER VALLEY

AND

ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS

PACIFIC COAST TRAINS
PASSING THROUGH
MINNESOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA
IDAHO, ORENON AND WASHINGTON,

CARRY COMPLETE EQUIPMENT OF

Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars,
First and Second Class Coaches,
Pullman Tourist and
Free Colonist Sleepers.

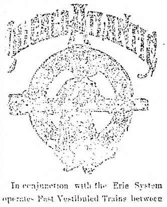
And Elegant Dining Cars.

THROUGH TICKETS Are sold at all coupon offices of the Northern Pacific Railroad to points North, East, South and west, in the United States and Canada.

For further information regarding rates, routes maps, etc., address

CHAS. S. FEE,
G. P. & T. Agt.,
St. Paul, Minn.

J. A. DUFFY
Local Agt



In conjunction with the Erie System operates Fast Vestibuled Trains between Chicago and the Atlantic Seaboard. you may travel in the most Elegant and complete Pullman Vestibuled Trains ever constructed and save $1.50 to Buffalo and Niagara Falls. $2.00 to New York $2.55 to Albany and Troy. and $3.00 to Boston and New England Cities.

No rival line offers the advantages of a system of through first and second-class day coaches and Pullman Dining cars chicago to New York.

It is the only line operating pullman cars to Boston and New England via Albany.

Entire trains are lighted by gas, heated by steam. Pullman dining cars run through in either direction.

Pullman chair and sleeping cars to Columbus, O., and Ashland, Ky., Daily.

No extra charge for fast time yeap unsurpassed accommodations afforded on these luxurious trains.

Get an Estimate

Of the Cost of Your Building - From

JAMES BRADY,

CONTRACTOR
AND BUILDER.

Foreman of the Construction of

North Side Roller Mill.
P.&J. Meehan's Saw Mill.
J.D. Marshall's residence.
And others

Office at residence on hamilton av.

MARKETS AT NORTH SIDE ROLLER MILL.

Mascot (Fancy Patent) per 98lb. sack	$2.75
Favorite (Family Straight) per 98lb sack	$2.50
Echo, per 98lb sack	$2.25
Shorts, per ton	$15.00
Graham, per 100 lb. sack	$2.50
Bran, per ton	$13.00
Ground feed per ton	$13.00

WHEAT.

1 Hard, 78c. Nor. 75c 2 Nor. 70c 3 Nor. 62c

Red Lake Falls News

TERMS, $1.50 PER YEAR.

P. & JAS. MEEHAN, PROPRIETORS.

MINNESOTA NOTES.

Hutchinson has now 11 artesian wells.

Northfield now has four cases of diphtheria.

Zumbrota expects soon to have a starch factory.

The Duluth Unitarian club is discussing "Agnosticism."

Litchfield will signalize 1892 by building an opera house.

The snow recently stopped threshing and plowing at Crookston.

A Presbyterian church in the village of Manannah is under projection.

An East Grand Forks tough charged with stealing $85, is in the Crookston jail.

United States circuit and the state district courts are in session at Mankato.

Fifty-nine applications for homestead entries were filed one day at Marshall.

Northfield parties are negotiating to put an electric light plant in at Cannon Falls.

The trial of William Bender at Long Prairie for the murder of his wife has begun.

The new Methodist church at Stewartville, near Winona, is nearly completed.

The vote to issue court house bonds to the amount of $12,000 carried in Murray county.

Frederick Kluth, an old and respected citizen of Oak Ridge, near Winona, is dead.

Rev. Charles Axtell, a prominent Presbyterian minister, died at Mankato, aged 73 years.

Prof. Judson, of the State university will lecture at Faribault in the university extension courses.

At Pine City game is very abundant, and in that region deer and other game are being killed in great abundance.

A. J. Demeules, the defaulting city treasurer or Brainerd, has returned and proposes to make good the amount.

The proprietor of the Austin Democrat will commence the publication of a daily to be called the Austin Daily Herald.

Formal application has been made for the admission of Carleton college to the Minnesota association of collegiate alumni.

In Rosemount, George Manners threshed 8,400 bushels of oats, 320 of flax and 180 of buckwheat in three and one-half days.

Hokah complains that the depot is not kept open, lighted and heated in accordance with a law passed by the last legislature.

The Catholic church at Darwin will be ornamented with a steeple belfry and a thousand pound bell given by a ady of the parish.

Jackson, by a practically unanimous vote, decided to issue bonds for $10,000 for the erection and maintainance of water works.

V. P. Kennedy and wife, of Litchfield, will spend the winter at Phœnix Springs, Arizona territory, where the doctor has some interests.

The city council of Stillwater administed a rebuke to the street railway company. It proposes to bring it to time or annul its charter.

Gov. Merriam and Secretary Hart visited the prison at Stillwater. Several convicts who are endeavoring to secure pardons were interviewed.

The Marshall land office is besieged by parties who are anxious to become settlers on the Hastings & Dakota indemnity land now open to settlement.

Messers. Washburn & Finch, breeders of fine horses, will have a horse show at Plainview. There will be more than 25 blooded horses on hand.

Steam heat equipments are being put into all passenger engines on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road for the purpose of heating the coaches.

Two silk flags of the latest design, made at Lyons, France, have been presented to Carleton college, Northfield, by Hon. E. B. Fairchild, consul at Lyons.

Frank Holland, arrested for robbing Fred Sebastian, was brought back to Albert Lea, waived examination and went back to the county jail to await the action of the grand jury.

A Great Northern freight ran into a Northern Pacific freight at the junction near Fergus Falls. No one was hurt, but travel was delayed until a wrecker could clear the tracks.

The barn of Thomas Conroy, at Baline, Anoka county, together with 75 head of cattle and considerable hay, was burned. Loss $1,000. The fire is supposed to be of incendiary origin.

John Hunter, a prominent farmer of Anoka county, has been for the past two years very successful in raising sugar beets, and since Anoka can raise the raw material, the matter of establishing a refinery is being agitated.

Two Minneapolis boys, Bennie Larson and John Scahie, are working on the railroad grade near Red Lake Falls. They claim to be fugitives, and that their mothers are looking for them. They are about 13 years old. One is of light complexion and the other dark.

The coroner's jury at Austin threw the responsibility of the wreck at Taopi on the crew of the Kansas City road. Through the death of Engineer Chambers, of the Milwaukee, this verdict will bring forth criminal prosecutions by the friends of the deceased and the Milwaukee officials

A threshing crew near Barnesville found between some grain stacks a dead babe apparently about 3 weeks old. It was neatly dressed, but bruises on the side of its face showed that it had been murdered. It was taken to Barnesville and placed in charge of an undertaker.

In the celebrated school case at Winona, where a public school teacher Miss Susie Jones, was arrested for severely punishing Willie Fort, the judge who took the case under advisement has rendered a decision favoring the defendant. The public school teachers were all in court to hear the finding read.

EVENTS OF A WEEK

Interesting Digest of the Happenings of the Past week.

State, Criminal, Foreign, Personal, Casualty, and Other News.

St. Louis has had an epidemic of suicides.

Mme. Albani is now on her way to America.

Forest fires are doing great damage in the vicinity of Vernon, Ala.

Sara Bernhardt, it is said, is tired of traveling and will settle down in Paris.

Robbers secured $3,000 from an express car on the Missouri Pacific near Omaha, Neb.

It is estimated that $125,000 changed hands on the result of the election in New York.

Frank Slavin in a letter to R. K. Fox says that Sullivan is afraid to meet him in the ring.

Wednesday all the coal miners from Elmwood, Ill., to Edwards station, went on a strike.

Seventeen men were killed Tuesday in a mine near Butte, Mont., by the breaking of a cable.

Norman L. Munro's yacht Norwood Saturday, off Bay Ridge, N. Y., sailed a mile in 2:12¼.

There is said to be an increased demand in English markets for American flour and spring wheat.

Cholera is destroging hogs in the town of Oregon, Wis., and the contagion is rapidly spreading.

Mrs. Parnell is reported to be growing weaker, and it is feared that death may occur in a short time.

Comptroller Lacey will not make public the bank examiner's report on the Maverick bank failure.

The export of potatoes and all cereals, except wheat has been forbidden by the Government of Russia.

Citizens of San Francisco are making efforts to secure one or both of the National political conventions.

Bill Howard, a desperado, was killed in California by officers who tried to arrest him for stage robbing.

It is estimated that there are 5,241,500 bushels of wheat in the elevators of Minneapolis and the two Dakotas.

Dr. C. N. Palmer of Raymond Center, Wis., has pleaded guilty to the charge of robbing the village postoffice.

Charles Morton Stewart, of Baltimore, Md., was elected President of the Board of Trustees of Johns Hopkins University.

There is a movement on foot in England to direct the whole tide of Russian-Jewish emigration to the United States.

Four stockmen were killed and an engineer was seriously hurt near Waco, Texas, by a rear-end collision of stock trains.

Mrs. Jefferson Davis has decided to have the remains of her husband interred in Hollywood Cemetery at Richmond, Va.

Gen. Palmer, Commander-in-chief of the G. A. R., issued an order forbidding Union soldiers from marching under the Confederate flag.

The Secretary of State is informed that the government of Hawii has accepted the invitation to participate in the World's Fair of 1893 at Chicago.

London theatrical managers and actors presented the prince of Wales with a gold cigar box valued at $2,500 Monday as a souvenir of his 50th birthday.

Revolutionary tactics in Brazil have so alarmed the authorities in Washington that one or more United States gunboats will be sent to Rio de Janeiro.

It is said that the Smithsonian Institution at Washington has sent for two sandstone tablets bearing strange inscriptions found near La Harpe, Ill.

The Kansas Supreme court has decided that men who violated the state prohibitory law in the original-package invasion a year ago may be punished.

It is said that the boundary line between Ohio and Indiana deprives Ohio of a triangular-shaped strip of land 200 miles long and twelve miles wide at the north end.

Workmen while engaged at Marseilles, Ill., in excavating found four feet below the surface what appears to be a prehistoric roadway, paved with stone, fourteen feet wide.

The fourth-class postmasters of Ohio held a meeting at Columbus, Ohio, and adopted resolutions requesting congress to pass a bill increasing the pay of postmasters in that class.

The Secretary of the Treasury has announced the new regulations to govern the free importation of articles for exhibition at the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago.

There is not the slightest prospect of a settlement of the quarrels within the Irish nationalist party, and this state of affairs begins to cause serious alarm to the Gladstonian leaders.

Russian explorers in central Asia claim to have found a buried city. Coins discovered in the ruins show that the city was in existence several centuries before the Christian era.

Thomas Fortune, the colored editor of the New York Age, was awarded $325 damages from a restaurant keeper, Friday, who refused to sell him liquor and afterward assaulted him.

After an all day session Wednesday the New York Presbytery voted to dismiss the charges of heresy against Professor Briggs. The controversy will probably be taken before the synod.

All the street-car employes who were arrested at Grand Rapids, Mich., last summer, charged with conspiracy to destroy the property of the company, were Saturday discharged from custody.

Failing to secure $75,000 bail Jonas H. French, who is involved in the Maverick Bank failure, was on Thursday evening, at Boston, placed by the United States Marshal in the Charles street Jail.

The Hon. Thomas S. Ridgeway, of Shawneetown, Ill., and J. J. P. Odell, of Chicago, were elected president and first vice president, respectively, of the Bankers' Association of Illinois, organized at Springfield.

It is stated, and generally believed that the powers are preparing to take summary measures with the Chinese Government for its failure to make satisfactory reparation for the Chinese outrages on foreign residents.

At Milwaukee, Wis., about seven hundred laborers working for the Villard syndicate on electric railway lines struck against a reduction of 25 cents in their wages Wednesday and work on the railway improvements is at a standstill.

Wool was in light demand at unchanged prices at Boston the past week. Receipts of the week were 8,106 bales domestic and 1,355 bales foreign, against 12,028 bales domestic and 1,764 bales foreign for the corresponding week of 1890.

It is alleged that the secretary of the board of lady managers of the World's Fair contemplates issuing a circular inviting the members of the board to contribute something from the natural products of their states for the women's building.

John Schonbocker of Will county, Ill., has been acquitted of the charge of murdering Evert Marvin, member of a party that went out to charivari Schonbocker and his wife. It was proved that Marvin was accidentally shot by one of his friends.

The United States cruiser Newark was floated out of the dry dock at the Charleston navy yards Sunday, only a portion of the proposed repairs having been completed, owing to the order from Washington that the vessel must be ready for sea Nov. 10.

The Edgemore Land Syndicate, known as the Barley Syndicate of Chicago, has secured 50,000 acres of land in North Dakota on which it is proposed to place German farmers as owners to raise barely for malt purposes. The crops will be bought by the company.

At Terre Haute, Ind., Friday Charley Trout, the accomplice of Bob Musgrave, who tried to secure $35,000 accident insurance by burning up a cabin in which he had placed a human skeleton, was arrested on receipt of news of the arrest of Musgrave in St. Paul.

Dr. A. Nash, of Joliet, Ill., made public another cure for alcoholism, and proved its efficiency by ten habitual drinkers of that city, some of whom stand high in business and social circles. They all give their names and indorsements, and relate their experience.

The McCarthyites were victorious in the election at Cork. Martin Flavin, the McCarthyite candidate for the seat in parliament for Cork city, left vacant by the death of Charles Stewart Parnell, was elected by a plurality of 1,512 votes over the Parnellite candidate, John F. Redmond.

The intendente of Valparaiso has addressed an official communication to Capt. Schley of the United States warship Baltimore, requesting that the sailors attached to that ship who were wounded in the recent riots be permitted to go before Judge Foster and give their testimony.

John J. King, a hitherto a respectable citizen of Brooklyn, was arrested for impersonating a dying friend at a medical examination in order that the friend might secure insurance on his life for the benefit of his wife. The policy was secured, the man died and the insurance was paid to the widow.

The New York Chamber of Commerce has appointed a committee of five to urge upon Congress such modification of the act of July 14, 1891, as will suspend the purchase and coinage of silver until an international agreement is arrived at between the United States and other commercial nations of the world.

A very large and enthusiastic meeting of miners at Brazil, Ind., Saturday agreed to strike and stand by each other, which means that if the bituminous miners are offered 75 cents per ton they will not go to work unless the block coal miners get 85 cents also. The general feeling is that it will not last long.

There is a strong probability that the miners who returned to work in the Pittsburg railroad district may again be called out. The operators are discriminating against the leaders and refuse to employ them. As a result about 2,500 men are still idle and others threaten to go out again if the leaders of the strike are not given work.

Dispatches from Rio de Janeiro Monday, state that there is a widespread fear that Fonseca, backed by the army, intends to turn the government over to the Imperialists. There will, however, be a new Cabinet and a new Congress, and it is reasonable to suppose that the newly elected Senators and Dupities will be in sympathy with the Fonseca platform.

A letter was received at Arkansas City, Kas., by a prominent member of the Cherokee Strip colony from Pawnee Bill, stating that the 1st day of January he with thousands of boomers will invade the strip. He claims under Judge Green's recent decision that the outlet is public domain, and that being public domain it is subject to homestead under the United States.

Prime in his latest crop report says in regard to winter wheat that the drought has not yet been broken, and that the prospects of its going into quarters in a good strong, healthy condition are not at all flattering. The general prospects of the crop is not as good as it was ten days ago. The success of the crop of 1892 depends now very largely upon copious rains and a mild November.

A dispatch from Valparaiso says there is a decidedly more friendly feeling between the Chilians and Americans. The intendente of Valparaiso has addressed an official communication to Capt. Schley of the United States warship Baltimore, requesting that the sailors attached to that ship who were wounded in the recent riots be permitted to go before Judge Foster and give their testimony.

A telegram received by Capt. McDougall at Duluth informed him of the safe arrival at Valparaiso, Chili, of the whaleback steamer Charles W. Wetmore, which has doubled the Horn. It was two days ahead of the time it was expected to make. The Wetmore left Philadelphia Sept. 18, touched at Montevideo Oct. 19 and is expected to reach her destination, the new town of Everett, Washington, Dec. 10.

A circular letter purporting to come from the Grand Secretary of the Farmers' Alliance has been sent to the farmers of Kansas advising them to sell their wheat and corn at present prices. The letter is signed J. D. Sedwick, "Grand Secretary," and is marked "Wheat Circular No. 8." J. D. Sedwick is not Grand Secretary of the Kansas alliance and the alliance people at Topeka claim to know nothing of the letter.

Referring to the talk that if Ohio's claim is correct, Indiana will be entitled to twelve miles off the eastern portion of Illinois, Professor Mendenhall, of the coast survey, said: "It does not follow that if one line is wrong the other is equally wrong. As a matter of fact I doubt very much whether it is. I think probable that the Indiana-Illinois line was run independently of the line between Ohio and Indiana."

Two Howard street business blocks at Akron, Ohio, collapsed Saturday afternoon. One of the blocks was a stone front, four stories high, occupied by Herrick & Son, crockery jobbers and retailers. The other was a brick, three stories high, occupied by the bakery and confectionery establishment of B. Lafferty. About twenty people were in the dining-rooms in the rear portion of the bakery. These heard the premonitory crash and rushed out of the back door, all being saved. Six persons were seriously injured.

The bill to regulate the pay and promotion of postoffice employes provides that the assistant postmastes shall receive 50 per cent of the salary of the postmaster; the secretary and stenographer to be divided into five classes, with salaries ranging from $1,200 up and not exceeding $1,600; cashiers, six classes, $1,800 to $2,300; finance clerks, bookkeepers and superintendents of stamp divisions, 35 per cent of the postmaster's salary; superintendents of mails, 45 per cent of the postmaster's salary; assistants, 30 per cent; superintendent of delivery, 45 per cent; assistants, 30 per cent. The bill will come before the next congress.

Da Fonseca has declared himself dictator of Brazil and assumed the supreme command barely in time to prevent the fruition of a conspiracy to restore the empire. This conspiracy is known to have strong European support, and has been directed in Brazil by adherents of the ex-imperial family, who were leniently permitted to return to or remain in the country. But for the president's action they would probably have attempted a coup d'etat within a few days. As it is the Brazilian authorities are aroused to the utmost vigilance, and both the army and navy are loyal to the republic. Several arrests have been made and all those to whom treason can be brought home will be dealt with severely. Others under strong suspicion will be expelled from Brazil. Entire tranquillity prevails and it is believed that there will be no outbreak.

FONSECA DICTATOR.

The Revolution in Brazil Solely for Preserving Order.

PARIS, Nov. 12.—A dispatch received here from Rio Janerio states that the elections for members of the new chamber of representatives are expected to take place in January. Congress will revive the constitution and will retain its republican and federal character. The dispatch further says that a commission has been appointed for the summary trial of persons charged with being enemies of the republic, and that upon conviction on that charge they will immediately be banished from the country.

Presdient De Fonseca has been proclaimed dictator. He appeared to demur for a time, but at length gave his consent. He then issued a degree relating the disagreement between him congress and explaining his position. Wednesday a conference of ministers was held. At its conclusion Fonseca issued another degree, in which he proclaimed himself a dictator. A dictatorship, he said, was the very best thing for the distracted country. He disclaimed any intention of prolonging it after peace had been restored. Telegrams received from Porto Allegro in the state of Rio Grande do Sul, declare that the authority of the dictator is not recognized there. This is one of the most prosperous of all the states. The republicans say they will not tolerate a dictatorship and are demanding armed opposition to Fonseca.

ROBBED HIS EMPLOYER.

A Stillwater Clerk Who Has Been Stealing by the Wholesale.

STILLWATER, Nov. 12.—Speculations amounting in the aggregate to a very considerable amount, running up into the thousands of dollars, have just been brought to light. John B. Johnson, a young man in charge of a department in Albenburg's clothing store, is at the head of the affair and has been a trusted employe for a number of years. Lately several minor articles have been missed and investigation showed that Johnson had been depositing a sum of money in the bank every month far in excess of his wages. When confronted with the proofs of the crime, Johnson confessed and implicated a number of clerks in other stores in his wholesale operations. He turned over $1,500 in cash, on condition that he would not be prosecuted. Some wholesale arrests will be made, however.

The business men at Stillwater are just waking up to the importance of organizing to secure additional manufacturing industries and public meetings will be called to adopt plans for concerted plans.

FLAVIN WINS.

The McCarthyite Candidate is Elected by a plurality of 1,512.

CORK, Nov. 12.—Martin Flavin, the McCarthyite candidate for the seat in parliament for Cork city, left vacant by the death of Charles Stewart Parnell, has been elected by a plurality of 1,512 votes over the Parnellite candidate, John E. Redmond. The result of the count is as follows: Flavin (McCar.) 3,669; Redmond (Par.) 2,157; Sarsfield (Unionists) 1,761.

At the last election for Cork city Mr. Parnell was elected with Maurice Healy, who also represents Cork city, without opposition.

An enormous crowd of excited people surrounded the hall while the votes were being counted, and large squads of police had all they could do to keep order.

WASHINGTON NOTES

Latest Telegraph News from the National Capital Condensed.

Doings of the Supreme Court the Executive and Other Departments.

The president has appointed Fenton R. McCreery, of Michigan, to be secretary of the legation at Santiago, Chili.

Secretary Proctor has handed in his resignation, and it is accepted, though no official announcement has yet been made of it.

A dispatch from Chili announces that Admiral Jorge Montt was elected president of Chili for the term of five years. He will be inaugurated on December 26.

Dr. Mott Smith, of Hawaii, who was in Washington Thursday, announces that the citizens of Hawaii desire the annexation of the Island to the United States.

Tests of armor plates made at the Indian Head proving ground showed that the high carbon nickel plates made at Bethlehem give the best result. Further tests will be made.

The Spanish government has refused to grant an exequater to the United States consul in the Caroline Islands, and has notified the government at Washington to that effect.

A. G. Porter, United States minister to Italy, has received permission from the government to make a brief visit to the United States. Mr. Porter starts shortly for his home in Indianapolis.

The controller of the currency has declared a final dividend of 5.55 per cent to the creditors of the California National Bank of San Francisco. This makes a total of 100 per cent with interest on claims aggregating $453,637.40.

Another effort is being made by the United States Fish Commission to stock the Hudson river with California salmon. Five thousand yearlings will be placed in three small streams flowing into the Battenkill, near Arlington, Vt. The Battenkill joins the Hudson at Northumberland.

SECRETARY FOSTER'S ANNUAL REPORT.

Secretary Foster is at work on his annual treasury report to congress. He has had conferences with all the subordinate chiefs in his department and has had special conversations with Controller Lacey regarding the recent troubles of the Keystone bank of Philadelphia and the Maverick of Boston. Assistant Secretary Spaulding will continue at the head of the department while Mr. Foster is at this work.

NOT A VERY VALUABLE GIFT.

When American men-of-war were wrecked in the hurricane at Apia, Samoa, some years ago, the United States government gave the wreckage to King Malietoa. He sold it to a San Francisco firm, but the treasury department has just decided if the wreckage is brought into this country it must pay customs duties. As they would be greater than the sum the California firm agreed to pay Malietoa is wondering what he made by the present.'

NAVAL EXPENSES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR.

Fourth Auditor Lynch, in his annual report shows the naval expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, to have been: Appropriations and balances, $47,753,185; amount drawn out by warrant, $27,016,315; balance in hand, $19,900,183; amount expended by vouchers, $23,090,342; amount carried to the surplus fund, $835,737. During the year bills of exchange were sold by naval pay officers to the amount of $1,195,507, on which the total net cost of negotiation was $20,554.

A PERMANENT TIMBER RESERVE.

Commissioner Carter of the general land office has received by reference from the president a petition signed by Senator Dubois and a large number of other prominent citizens of Idaho, asking that a tract of land adjoining the Yellowstone National Park on the west, containing about 750,000 acres, including Lake Henry, be set apart as a permanent timber reserve. The matter has been placed in the hands of a special agent, who is instructed to examine and report upon the matter and also as to the advisability of extending the reservation north into Montana, so as to embrace the country around the headwaters of the Madison river.

WOULD AMEND A PENSION LAW.

In his annual report Assistant Secretary of the Interior Bussey says that owing to the absence of a clear legal provision on the subject, the government has been compelled to submit to serious losses of money, which, having been once improperly paid, either to claimants or to pensioners, were irrecoverable under any established rule of departmental practice. He recommends that congress make special provision in regard to these cases; that the act of June 27, 1890, in regard to the list of applications for widows' pensions be amended so that it will be applicable to meritorious cases of dependence and distress, and that persons who served in the confederate army and afterward enlisted in the union navy be given the same pensionable rights as were granted to those who enlisted in the federal army.

RECIPROCITY WITH MEXICO.

Minister Ryan is having daily talks with Secretary Blaine and ex-Minister Foster on the details of Mexican reciprocity. It is likely that two commercial arrangements will be made. One will be under the limited provisions of the McKinley bill. The other will be a general treaty which will have to be ratified by the senate and made effective by legislation in the house.

The special commissioner appointed by President Diaz is said to be restricted in his powers because the Mexican government must feel its way. Under the reciprocity section of the McKinley act coffee is about the only article that can be made the basis of negotiations, for Mexican exports of hides are small and its sugar production amounts to practically nothing. With the promise of a good market, however, sugar-growing could be made a paying industry.

LOW WATER IN LAKE MICHIGAN.

Maj. Adams, assistant chief engineer of the army, does not regard the low water in Lake Michigan as likely to have serious consequences. He has charge of the government charts which show the height of lake waters during the last fifty years. They show that there is a uniform rise and fall in Lake Michigan every year, the highest point being reached in June and July and the lowest in midwinter. The water of Nov. 1 for the last fifty years has been about one foot higher than in the winter months. The government reports show that the water of Chicago has been falling steadily since last February. At that time it was lower than during any period since 1872. Maj. Adams says, however, that there is invariably a reaction after these low periods. The army engineers look upon the present low water at Chicago as an answer to the many complaints of insufficient depth of harbor. The engineers say vessels go aground because of the natural fluctuation in the depth of water, and not from inefficient work in keeping the channels excavated.

A NEW GUN FACTORY.

Gen. Flagler, chief of the ordnance bureau, in his report to the secretary of war, says that the Watervliet army gun factory will be in working order this month. Its annual capacity will be twelve 8-inch, fifteen 10-inch, fifteen 12-inch and three 16-inch guns. The appropriation of $4,475,500 for the year ending June 30, 1893, is recommended for armament and fortifications. After many experiments with small arms a magazine rifle of 30 caliber was decided to be preferable to the larger size, and 100,000 have been ordered. With reference to the general equipment of the army with magazine rifles Gen. Flagler says that the present service Springfield single loader should be retained until a better magazine arm than any in use in foreign service has been invented. Meantime the government will continue experiments in this behalf. With the Springfield an expert can fire twenty shots per minute. It is also set forth that much difficulty has been found in procuring a satisfactory smokeless powder. As to the pneumatic dynamite cannon contracted for it may be said that no progress has been made in their manufacture, and the company has been given further time.

GETTING UP A WOOL EXHIBIT.

The assistant secretary of agriculture says: "We intend to send out circulars to all the principal wool-growers of the country asking them to assist us in every way possible in getting up a wool exhibit for the World's Fair. We will instruct our agents to get samples of every kind of wool that is clipped. From our agents and from the wool-growers we will receive, I think, in all about one thousand samples of wool, each sample about a yard long. We will classify them and arrange them in the most attractive form possible and place them in our building at Chicago about next July. A small pamphlet of 100 pages will be issued by the department on each of the different branches of its exhibit. It will be written in the simplest language and will contain much that is not commonly known about the subject of which it treats. We have in view a book on tobacco culture which will be prepared by Col. Estes, the officer in charge of that branch of our exhibit, a book on the cereal exhibit and a book on the woolen exhibit. These will be so written as to be readily understood by any farmer of common intelligence and will also contain much that is instructive."

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTION RESULTS.

Six congressmen to fill vacancies were elected Tuesday. In the fifth Michigan district, vacated by the death of M. E. Ford (Rep.), Charles E. Belknap (Rep.) was elected over John T. Lawrence (Dem.) by from 1,200 to 1,500 votes. In the twenty-second New York district the seat lately resigned by J. W. Russell (Rep.) will be filled by N. M. Curtis (Rep.), he having defeated W. F. Porter (Dem.) by a considerable majority. The second South Dakota district, vacated by the death of John M. Gamble (Rep.), elected John J. Jolly (Rep.) by about 4,000 majority, he beating J. M. Woods (Dem.) and H. W. Smith (Ind.)

In the second New York district Alfred C. Chapin (Dem.), ex-mayor of Brooklyn, was elected to the seat resigned by David A. Boody (Dem.), beating Henry Bristol (Rep.). In the tenth New York district Bourke Cockran (Tammany Dem.) defeated James B. Townsend (Rep.), and John Houser (Social Labor). This seat was vacated by the death of Geo. Spinola. The twelfth New York district was the one represented by Roswell P. Flower. He resigned to run for governor, and the candidates were William McMichael (Rep.), Joseph L. Little (Tammany Dem.), David Deveney (County Dem.), and John J. Flick (Social Labor). Little was elected.

WAITING FOR THE JUNTA.

Secretary Tracy said Tuesday there was no warrant for warlike dispatches at this time, as nothing could be done until the result of the Chilian investigation of the attack on the sailors was known. He saw no reason for any apprehensions in the mind of the American public. The secretary's view is evidently shared by the state department officials, who look with amusement upon what they regard as clumsily disguised efforts of a certain element in the English press to foment serious trouble between the United States and Chili in an effort to nullify the progress made towards the establishment of reciprocity between the United States and South America.

The ordnance bureau announced that in four months the harbor defense vessel Monterey, now being built at San Francisco, will be ready for service. The Monterey will, in the opinion of the naval authorities, be the most formidable vessel in the American navy, excepting probably the monitor Puritan, also near completion.

Senor Montt, the Chilian minister, left Washington Monday for New Orleans, to be gone one week. He refused to speak respecting his visit to the state and navy departments, but expressed the belief that matters were progressing satisfactorily. It is presumed he sought without success to secure for the junta the testimony of the American sailors which was contained in Capt. Schley's report.

The Chimney Demons.

Out on the top of a chimney tall
I saw a parcel of demons crawl;
Some in gray and some in white,
And others in robes as black as night.
They danced together; they waltzed and whirled
With streamers out on the air unfurled!
And the windy bugles began to blow
And sent them scurrying to and fro.

In gauzy garments they all were drest,
And one, with a lengthy plume on his crest,
Was the leader of all without a doubt,
And marshaled his forces round about.
With graceful gestures, like those at court,
They bowed and courtesied, and then they fought—
Fought like furies, for none would yield,
And not a remnant was left on the field.

The chimney demons their part performed
From morning till night, unless it stormed;
And I loved to watch them and note the shape
That each one took as it made escape
Out of the shaft, and to see them rise
And melt away in the distant skies;
And when they were angry they rose the higher,
For then they were fed with a fresher fire.

Comic or tragic they seemed to me,
In whatever the mood I chanced to be;
And Fancy led me from day to day
To watch those giants and midgets play.
And even now that I'm older grown
I often sit by the window alone,
And amuse myself as the demons crawl
Out of the top of the chimneys tall.

—Independent.

THE STEPMOTHER.

"The sweetest little cherub that ever you saw!" said Mrs. Constant. "But, oh, such a care!"

"I told you so, Mary," said old Aunt Arabella, sourly, "when you would insist on marrying a widower with a child!"

"But I loved him," said the little bride wistfully.

"Stuff and nonsense!" said Aunt Arabella. "The woman never lived who could get along with another woman's child."

"Well, I mean to try," said Mrs. Constant. "And I think I should manage splendidly if only the first Mrs. Constant's old-maid sisters would keep away, and Mr. Constant's mother-in-law by his first wife wouldn't persist in coming here every day to see if Dita has enough flannels on, and eats her quantum of oatmeal, and says her catechism regularly."

"Tell Bridget not to let them in," suggested Aunt Arabella.

"And make mischief between John and his first wife's relations!" said Mrs. Constant. "Oh, I couldn't do that!"

Just then the door flew open, and little Dita herself trotted in, a golden-tressed, pink-cheeked fairy of three years old. And close beside her stalked her maternal grandmother, Mrs. Cartwhistle, with the two Misses Cartwhistle following in the rear.

"I am surprised, Mary," said the step-mother-in-law, "to hear from Bridget that Perdita is allowed to wear her best white frock every day!"

"She looks so pretty in it," said Mrs. Constant, pleadingly. "And she will soon outgrow it."

"It is not the way my girls were brought up," said Mrs. Cartwhistle.

"I've just been counting over her dresses, a dozen sashes, eighteen ruffled and embroidered skirts—"

"A child like that needs a great many changes," said Mrs. Constant.

"And that big doll of hers," added Miss Susanna Cartwhistle, "with the flaxen hair and the eyes that open and shut. I declare it's positive idolatry—that's what it is."

Mrs. Constant winced.

"But, indeed, Susanna," said she, "I didn't buy the doll! It was a gift from her god-mamma to Dita."

"I think it ought to be sold for the benefit of the heathen," Miss Malina said.

"And I was shocked to see Bridget giving her jam—yes, raspberry jam—upon her bread and butter, for dinner," added the old lady.

"It's very plain," apologized the young stepmother. "I made it myself, last summer. And Dita is so fond of it."

"Me yike waddery dam," solemnly enunciated this small bone of contention, who had been looking gravely from one to another of the speakers.

"Is a child's digestion of no consequence?" demanded Mrs. Cartwhistle.

"Are the rules of hygiene to be set entirely at defiance?" Miss Malina questioned.

"The seeds of disease to be implanted even at this early age?" added Miss Susanna.

But her Aunt Arabella rose up, bustling and indignant, in her niece's defence.

"It strikes me, ladies," said she, "that we are all of us meddling with what is none of our business. My niece, Mary, as the wife of Charles Constant and stepmother of this little child, is doubtless a better judge of these matters than we pretend to be. Mary, if you are going out shopping with me, it's high time you put on your bonnet."

The bride looked timidly around.

"If Mrs. Cartwhistle, and Malina, and Susanna will excuse me," said she, doubtfully.

"Oh, we are of no consequence," said Miss Malina, with a toss of the head.

"Pray don't remain at home on our account," said Miss Susanna.

"We are just going to take leave ourselves," said Mrs. Cartwhistle, sourly.

"Me do, too, mamma," coaxed little Dita, seizing hold of the skirts of Mrs. Constant's dress. "Me do with oo."

"No, darling, no," said Mrs. Constant, ringing the bell for Bridget. "You are too little."

"Exercise is good for the child," interposed grandmamma Cartwhistle.

"Ettertise dood for I." This was Dita's mite.

"And you know you were croupy last night," added Mrs. Constant, tenderly.

"I never could find it in my heart to leave a child that wasn't well," croaked Malina.

"But, added Susanna, "a stepmother knows nothing of the sensations that agitate a true maternal heart."

And the bride, fairly driven to the last extremity of patience, took an abrupt departure, leaving the small Dita shrieking in the arms of Bridget, while her grandmother and maiden aunts stood round, a sort of commiserating chorus.

"She has no heart at all!" growled Miss Malina.

"I told Charles how it would be when he would persist in marrying that slip of a child," said Mrs. Cartwhistle.

"What can one expect of a stepmother?" gloomily demanded Miss Susanna.

And the grandmother and the two maiden aunts went grimly away.

But when Mrs. Constant returned from her shopping expedition, there was an evident atmosphere of consternation about the house.

Mrs. Cartwhistle stood sobbing in the middle of the floor, with a pocket-handkerchief pressed to her eyes; Miss Malina and Miss Susanna were hurrying to and fro, wildly wringing their hands; and Mr. Constant himself had just arrived in a cab.

"Dear me!" cried the young stepmother, "What can have happened?"

"I told you so!" said Mrs. Cartwhistle.

"I always prophesied it!" said Miss Malina.

"I foresaw it from the very beginning!" said Miss Susanna.

"But what is the matter?" gasped Mrs. Constant. "Has anything happened to—to dear little Dita?"

"She's drowned!" said Mrs. Cartwhistle.

"In the great Persian jar!" said Susanna.

"Filled it with water out of the bath-tub, and then crawled in herself, dear, sweet innocent!" sobbed Miss Malina. "Oh, dear. Oh, dear! I knew something would happen when you so heartlessly refused her innocent plea to accompany you."

But the poor young wife pushed her way frantically through the confusion.

"Where is she?" she gasped. "Dita Where have they laid her?"

"We—we hain't dared to touch her," answered Miss Malina, with a burst of hysterical tears. "But there's her dear little shoe in a puddle of water on the carpet, and her lovely golden hair floating on top! Oh, dear! don't let Charles go near her! Oh, dear! to think that she should be drowned, and no one near to help her! It all comes of a stepmother's neglect.

"Mamma! Mamma!" piped a little voice at the self-same moment, and Mrs. Constant felt a tiny hand pulling at her dress, and turned to behold Dita held up in Bridget's arms.

"Sure, ma'am, I found her fast asleep on the garret floor," said Bridget, "wid her precious arm under her head. An' to think of the thrick she played us, wid the big doll drowned in the chaney jar, an' its yally hair floatin' a-top, just for all the wurreld like missy's own!"

"Dolly dirty! Dolly have bath!" complacently proclaimed Miss Perdita.

And then, naturally enough, Mrs. Constant fainted away in her husband's arms.

When she came to her senses again, the house was restored to its usual stillness and composure, and she was lying upon a sofa, with her husband at her side, and little Dita playing on the floor at no great distance.

"Where is Mrs. Cartwhistle?" she said.

"Gone," said Mr. Constant. "And so have Malina and Susanna—and they will never come back to this house again. It is quite true they are my lost wife's relatives, but that gives them no title to assail you as they have done to-day. You have been more than a mother to little Dita, and the child's love bears a mute testimony to this. Hereafter with her, as well, dearest, as with me, your will shall be law."

Wounds That New Bullets Make.

The tendency in the devising of improved rifle bullets is now to attain increased penetration, and the consequence is that much of the smashing power of the old bullet is lost. Some of the latest bullets are more like a lead pencil in shape than anything else.

The effect of this modification was recently shown in the case of a laborer who was accidentally shot by a soldier who was practicing at a target with the new Lee Metford magazine rifle, which has just been adopted for the British army. Although the bullet passed clean through the thigh, the wound healed so rapidly that the patient was up and on a meat diet in eleven days. In twenty-four days he was discharged as well, with his leg in as good condition as ever. His luck in one respect, however, deserted him in another, and soon after he caught cold and died of bronchitis. The opportunity of making valuable investigations was too good to be lost, and the army surgeons secured permission to make a post-mortem examination.

They found that all internal trace of the wound had vanished. From this they were able to draw the most satisfactory conclusion that whatever may be the power of the new weapons in disabling a much larger number of men in a given time than was before possible, the severity of individual wounds will be much less. In place of large apertures and tracks, where there always was considerable destruction of tissue, much smaller wounds may be expected, with such trifling damage to the soft tissues, through which the ball passes, that the destruction of substance resulting is almost inappreciable. The size and severity of the wound will be further decreased by the sheathing of hard metal encasing the bullet, which prevents the lead from breaking upon contact, and so lacerating the flesh.

A Legislative Blunder.

One of the most amusing of blunders was made by the Tennessee legislature. It passed an election law requiring registration and secret ballot, and making it applicable to counties of 50,000 voting population, instead of those having a total population of that number. There is no county in the state which has 50,000 voters, and hence the law is a dead letter.

Another relic of the rebellion has been discovered in Virginia. A few days ago while a log two feet in circumference was being cut in two near "Bloody Angle" in Spottsville county, the saw went through the butt end of a twelve-pound shell which was imbedded in the log out of sight. It is supposed that the tree was about nineteen inches in diameter at the time the shell was fired in 1863, as these trees grow about a quarter of an inch a year.

THE MONGOLIAN'S BRIDE.

A Graduate of a Convent Perfectly Satisfied with Her Chinese Husband.

"No, I am not at all dissatisfied. I love my Chinese husband more than any white man I ever saw."

So said a pretty and refined-looking girl in a dingy little room at 908 1-2 Dupont street last night, says the San Francisco Chronicle. She is not over 20 years of age, of slender, graceful form, and a face framed by a wealth of golden hair than bears the stamp of education and intelligence. Her demeanor is modest and unassuming. No one would take the slight girl, in her neat-fitting dress of black, to be the bride of a Chinaman, but such Gertrude Matthews is, and seemingly is well satisfied with her life in two little rear rooms in the heart of Chinatown, with no associates but Chinese.

Lee Po, her husband, keeps a shoe store in the front part of the narrow building, and is extremely fond of his Caucasian wife. In fact, he is jealous of her, and will allow no Chinese to speak to her except upon matters pertaining to the business of the place.

Mrs. Lee, as she is called in Chinatown, was born in New York and graduated from the Ursuline convent in that state in 1888 with high honors. Around her neck, depending from a slender chain, she wears a gold Maltese cross medal, delicately engraved, which shows that she stood at the head of her class.

The girl looks out of place in the small, close room, with no companions but Chinese, but, as she says, she manages to keep busy and is content with her lot.

Until a year ago the girl resided in New York. She is the daughter of wealthy parents, was reared in the lap of luxury and had every wish gratified until the death of her mother, when the cruelty of a step-mother caused her to forsake home, friends, and all. To add to her misery, it is said that her betrothed, a prominent society man, married one of her intimate acquaintances, and she decided to go as far away as she could, where none of her relatives could find her or ever hear from her again. So far she has succeeded.

With but little more in her purse than would pay her transportation, the girl came to California. First she went to Los Angeles, where she found a position as governess in a family, with whom she lived several months. Being well up in the language and an accomplished musician, she had no difficulty in retaining her position, but the departure of her friends to China and other foreign countries caused her to look elsewhere.

She accompanied them as far as this city, and in a short time her services were engaged by a family in Ross valley, Marin county.

In the same house Lee Po was employed as cook.

More than one suitor sought Miss Mathew's hand in marriage while in this state, but to their importunities she turned a deaf ear. She said she had loved once, and that it had resulted in a broken heart.

In the Ross Valley household Miss Mathews was often thrown into the company of the cook, who is prepossessing and well educated for a Chinaman. She took quite a fancy to him. The feeling was reciprocated and gradually ripened into love on both sides.

As a fitting final they were married by contract a few months ago, when Lee Po bought an interest in the store at 908 1-2 Dupont street.

To occupy her time Mrs. Lee has a class of Chinamen to whom she teaches English five nights of the week, and in the daytime attends to household duties and operates a telegraph instrument. Her only female companion is a half-breed Chinese woman living on Stockton street.

To her she has taught the rudiments of telegraphy and a line has been stretched between the two places.

"Some people seem to think I am crazy," said the girl, continuing her conversation yesterday, "but I consider that I am as sane as anybody. I don't think I am strange at all," she added, with a merry laugh that deepened the dimples in her cheeks and served to display a set of perfect teeth.

"I get along much better with my husband than if he were a white man. He is kindness itself, lets me have my own way in everything, and treats me generously. What little work I do is because I wish to be useful. I teach the Chinamen because it is interesting to me, and it is an easy way to make money. My association with them does not extend outside the house.

"If I took a notion into my head to marry a Chinaman I do not see why it should concern the people at large. Do you?" The question was duplicated by the big blue eyes, and was so unanswerable that the reporter concluded the interview.

Barreled Up His Son.

An eccentric man named George Bump, living in North Lyme, Conn., the other afternoon attempted to put a head in a cider barrel, but could not make the head stay while he tightened the hoops. So he put his 5-year-old son, who is deaf and dumb, in the barrel to hold up the head, and soon the barrel was headed up. Bump went to work in the field and forgot his son, until his wife asked him where the boy was. Bump ran to the barrel, knocked out the head, and found the boy breathing through the bunghole, but so frightened that he went into spasms. Bump was arrested, but was afterward released. He has always been noted for his absent-mindedness.

What Columbus Thought.

In a lecture Prof. Fiske says: Columbus estimated the earth to be one-seventh smaller than it really is. He exaggerated the length of Asia, and supposed it to extend so far east that its eastern coast would come to where Mexico is. Then he supposed the island of Japan would extend to where Cuba is; and he argued from a verse in the Apocrypha that one-seventh of the temperate zone was water, and that that would be what he would have to cross, which distance he figured at 2,500 miles.

"19 MINUTES PAST 10."

Testimony of a Farmer That Perplexed a Shrewd Lawyer.

A case was being tried in a country court, says the Philadelphia Times. A horse had been stolen from a pasture and the evidence all pointed to a certain doubtful character of the neighborhood as the culprit. Though his guilt seemed clear he had found a lawyer to undertake his defense. At the trial the defendant's attorney expended his energy in trying to confuse and frighten the opposing witness, especially a certain farmer, whose testimony was particularly damaging. The lawyer kept up a fire of questions, asking many foolish ones, and repeating himself again and again, in the hope of decoying the witness into a contradiction.

"You say," the lawyer went on, "that you can swear to having seen this man drive a horse past your farm on the day in question?"

"I can," replied the witness, wearily, for he had already answered the question a dozen times.

"What time was this?"

"I told you it was about the middle of the forenoon."

"But I don't want any 'bouts' or any 'middles.' I want you to tell the jury exactly the time."

"Why," said the farmer, "I don't always carry a gold watch with me when I'm digging potatoes."

"But you have a clock in the house, haven't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, what time was it by that?"

"Why, by that clock it was just nineteen minutes past ten."

"You were in the field all the morning?" went on the lawyer, smiling suggestively.

"I was."

"How far from the house is this field?"

"About half a mile."

"You swear, do you, that by the clock in your house it was exactly nineteen minutes past 10?"

"I do."

The lawyer paused and looked triumphantly at the jury; at last he had entrapped the witness into a contradictory statement that would greatly weaken his testimony. "I think that will do," he said, with a wave of his hand; "I am quite through with you."

The farmer leisurely picked up his hat and started to leave the witness stand; then turning slowly about he added: "I ought perhaps to say that too much reliance should not be placed upon that clock, as it got out of gear about six months ago, and it's been nineteen minutes past 10 ever since."

OLD GEN. HARNEY.

How He Honored a Private Soldier Who Fought With Him.

Long before I was a policeman, says an interview in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, I served in the regular army and made several journeys of the plains with the famous Indian fighter, Gen. W. S. Harney. Gen. Harney was a remarkable man in many respects, but he particularly excelled in all athletic exercises. Physically, he was a most magnificent specimen, and was in the habit of getting into fights that were derogatory to his dignity. On one occasion he became enraged and made an assault upon a soldier named Kelly, who was considered to be the strongest man in the regiment. He was fully as good as Harney, maybe a little better, but that officer knew every trick of the ring, and brought the fight to an end by striking his opponent on the forearm with the side of the open hand, breaking the bone. That night Kelly deserted. Many months afterward, when Harney was in command at Fort Leavenworth, Kelly was brought in. He had been arrested, tried for desertion, and sentenced to three years in prison. As soon as Harney heard of his arrival he had him brought to his office and asked him why he had deserted. Kelly replied that he had struck his superior officer and feared that he would be most severely punished in consequence. Harney sprang from his chair and said: "I honor you for what you did. I had no right to strike you, and you were perfectly justified in striking back. If you had stayed nothing would have ever been heard about it. I must now see about getting you out of this." He gave Kelly work about his house until an answer could be received from Washington to his application for Kelly's pardon. When this came he was at once re-enlisted, made a non-commissioned officer, and served with Harney for years.

Beecher's Early Habits.

Young and impulsive, ever ready to respond to the wishes of those who took pleasure in his society, and "thinking no evil" of those around him, it was singular that Henry Ward Beecher was never tempted to participate in many of the indulgences of the day, so common among all classes at that time the same as it is to-day, writes Mrs. Beecher in the first of her reminiscent papers in the Ladies' Home Journal. But, as a young man, he was unusually free from any bad habits. He never smoked, nor used tobacco in any form, either as a boy, youth or full-grown man. He never indulged in a drop of liquor. His language was as pure among his companions as when in a parlor. He rejected all indulgences. As a young man he never played card; indeed, he never knew one card from another. He avoided all these habits in his later years, although he had no prejudice against the playing of cards for others—if played for amusement and at home. After coming to Brooklyn we both learned to play backgammon. It was a quiet game, and he said it helped him to a good night's rest, if his labors during the day had excited him so much as to threaten to retard his usually sound sleep.

Underground Streams.

Subterranean Florida is honeycombed by underground streams. When these are obstructed from any cause they work their way to the surface, making the great swamps which are characteristic of that state.

WARD M'ALLISTER INSULTED.

How a Parrot Treated the Leader of the Four Hundred.

A woman will often stand more from a parrot than she will from her husband, for the former is fashionable and can afford to be a tyrant, says a N. Y. letter. One of the sharp-voiced tribe is treasured by a lady whose home on Fifth avenue is the scene during every winter season of the most elaborate of all the showy dances, and whose Newport residence is the rendezvous for those ultra fashionables who are entirely "in the swim." The parrot always travels with his mistress and will condescend to eat sugar from her fingers. It was at Newport recently that the valued bird asserted itself in a way that quite disgraced its owner. A caller at the lady's house, who, it is said, was no other than the great arbiter of good taste and director of etiquet, Ward McAllister, was talking about a dinner that he was preparing to give. It appears that he had an entirely new idea in the serving of some especial dish, and was expatiating upon it at great length to his hostess. He described in detail his entire plans, much as a general might explain his proposed maneuvers in a forthcoming battle. The parrot looked solemnly at the great society leader, and apparently listened as intently as his mistress to his eloquent lecture. After a time, however, the bird began to shift uneasily on his perch. Mr. McAllister kept on talking.

"It is then my intention," said he, "to have the butler and his assistants parade around the table carrying the——"

The parrot's patience was exhausted.

"Oh, rats!" he screamed.

Mr. McAllister stopped short in his discourse.

"What was that?" he asked, after a pause.

"My parrot," replied the lady, greatly embarrassed.

"Parrots," rejoined the great steward, "are not at all good form at present, madam. They went out of fashion at least two years ago. I am surprised that you keep one."

As Mr. McAllister made his adieus and withdrew the parrot spoke his greatest speech, taught him by the 12-year-old son of his mistress.

"There goes a man," said he, "that makes me tired."

TAUGHT BY A COOLIE.

An Incident That Put a Long Row of Americans to Shame.

Somebody should collect the literature of the car seat. There are volumes of it in newspapers and humorous sheets, and mostly of a nature to interest the future student of human nature when car straps shall have been abolished and boorishness unknown.

When this coming historian begins his valuable labors I trust he may find place for such an incident as I saw on Brooklyn bridge the other day, says a writer in the New York World.

It was in the evening. Brooklyn people were still going home in large numbers, the car was full and most of the passengers were men. There were sixteen of them in a row on one side of the car, and in the middle sat a yellow Chinaman, who had a bundle of clothes, two packages of lichee nuts and a paper of oranges.

A middle-aged woman who had likely been tramping the stores all day, came in looking very tired, and glared up and down the line and grabbed the strap. The men wouldn't notice her; they just wouldn't. They glued their eyes to their newspapers or out the window. The car started and nobody moved.

Then the homely, yellow Chinaman took his bundle of clothes from the floor, got his packages under one arm, gravely saluted with the other and hung himself up by the strap while the middle-aged woman took his seat.

Chinamen pinch the feet of their women and don't let their intellects have play and all that, but somehow the other passengers in the car didn't seem to think half so meanly of the barbarous Chinaman as they did of themselves the rest of the trip.

Unique Love-Making.

Here is a romantic anecdote about Louisa Alcott's father and mother. As a young man Mr. Alcott, as the story goes, was amanuensis or secretary to Mrs. Alcott's father. The two young people met often and naturally fell in love with each other. Mr. Alcott's social position and prospects being somewhat uncertain at that time, he did not feel justified in asking this well-born and talented young woman to marry him. He finally gave up his position and they parted with no confessions on either side. It was agreed, however, that each should keep a journal and that these journals should be exchanged once in so often. Thus matters went on for some time; he unwilling to ask so much and offer so little; she willing to give all and chafing under a woman's necessity of keeping silent. At length one day, while reading the journal he had sent her, she came across a few sentences in which he hinted at his love and unhappiness and wondered what she would say if he should ever presume to ask her hand in marriage. The moment was a critical one, but Mrs. Alcott was equal to it. Seizing a pen, quickly and clearly she wrote underneath: "Suppose you ask her and find out!" It is said that the journal is still preserved in the Alcott family.

Lightning-proof.

Women who are afraid of thunderstorms are having their chairs and bedsteads made with glass feet to serve as insulators. What is the matter with the good old-fashioned feather-bed where all the women and children of the family took refuge in a thunderstorm? Or the dark closet where the preserves were kept? Perhaps the glass jars made that secure, but no power on earth ever saved the preserves.

He—"I stepped on your dress. You must think me a perfect bear." She—"Oh, no, Mr. Bashful, you don't remind me in the least of a bear." And he has been wondering ever since what she meant.—Detroit Free Press.

HERBERT SPENCER HORRIFIED.

A Fresh Young Woman Mistook Him for a Writer of Novels.

I was told a good story about Herbert Spencer a few days ago, the truthfulness of which is vouchsafed, says a London letter. It seems that Mr. Spencer was at a West-end reception last spring. There were many notables present, as it happened, and Mr Spencer was being lionized more than usual. During the afternoon a young woman, superbly gowned, entered the parlors. She was presented to the eminent Englishman, her host telling her, sotto voce, that "Mr. Spencer is the famous author of whom you have doubtless heard." The girl was an American.

"Dear me, Mr. Spencer, I am so glad to see you. I just love authors and poets; they're so jolly, you know."

Mr. Spencer is a modest Englishman of gentle voice and feminine grace. He was unprepared for this onslaught of the young woman's. But she took him by the arm and hastened off to a corner with her prey. It was only for a moment, however. The conversation was brief, but it was interesting.

"Oh, Mr. Spencer, I must tell you," went on the young lady, "I've read all your books; I know them by heart. It makes me laugh so much to read them. Your situations are so funny and your climaxes so dramatic; then you are not like our authors. Your heroines are not all alike, and the men are so charming. They make love so well; and oh, Mr. Spencer, do you know your dialogue is very funny. Your name is like a household word in our home. Don't you ever get tired of writing?"

The young woman stopped. She had to. She was short of breath. Mr. Spencer looked at her in amazement. His face flushed. He could not find his voice, but he arose all of a tremble, bowed politely, turned to the hostess, and hoarsely gasped: "She's mad! Mad as a March hare! Don't let her come near me again!" And the young lady didn't know, until her hostess informed her of the fact, that Herbert Spencer was not that kind of an author.

The story is really true, and happened at a house where I was stopping a few days ago, the host narrating the incident to me.

HE HATES PALE PINK.

Why a New York Actor Now Has an Antipathy to Pretty Ribbons.

There is a young actor in New York who has developed a mortal antipathy toward the most delicate of tints, pale pink. When it is referred to in his presence he becomes embarrassed and exhibits a strong inclination to slide through some convenient crack in the floor. The tale that hangs thereby is a touching one. The young actor regards himself as a lady-killer of the deepest dye, and, in the patois of the profession, "earns his salary at Saturday matinees." In the company with him is a comedian with a passion for the practical joke

One day in a facetious moment he wrote what is known as a "mash note" to the young actor and signed a feminine name thereto. The bait was swallowed and the correspondence between the flirtatious youth and his mysterious admirer kept the company in roars for a week. Finally one of the letters from the fair one ended as follows.

> I shall be in a box at the matinee and shall wear a red rose at my throat. If you receive this please have a bit of pale-pink ribbon in your buttonhole. Yours from afar,
>
> Clarissa.

The young man has the opening scene of the play, and at the matinee specified dashed on with a pale-pink ribbon adorning his lapel. In the middle of his first speech he glanced at the boxes and discovered four women each with a red rose at her throat and a deeply sentimental smile. Then the other players began to come on. Every one of them was decorated with a pale-pink knot, bow or streamers. The young actor went all to pieces, forgot his lines and swore to have the red, red blood of the man who put up the game on him.

In the last act the victim has a very pathetic scene and was just in the middle of it when the leading lady's pug dog strayed on the stage. His funny little tale was ornamented with a big pale-pink bow and his entrance had a most disastrous effect. Three scenes were cut bodily and the curtain dropped. To cap it all the stage manager fined the young actor for breaking up the performance. He is still looking for "Clarissa."

How to Remove Stains.

Just as a stitch in time saves nine, a stain promptly eradicated very often preserves a good garment, and it is well, therefore, to keep on your washstand the materials necessary for prompt treatment. Carriage grease is perhaps the most exasperating, and apparently the most hopeless, of all stains, but even this will yield to immediate and proper care. As soon as possible take some bits of old, clean calico and rub the place thoroughly with butter. If done at once this will generally remove the black and dirty grease entirely leaving in its place merely a butter stain, and this, treated in its turn, with oderless benzine, will disappear. Paint, after it dries, is hard to remove, but it yields at once to turpentine if applied when it is fresh. On dark clothes, however, turpentine itself leaves a trace which calls for benzine. This generally prevents the stains from reappearing in obvious and ugly fashion whenever exposed to any dust. But after all is said and done the best advice is, "Try not to get spots on your clothes."

During a Family Spat.

Mr. Lastword—"There's a great difference between you women and a cent."

Mrs. Lastword—"Yes? In that you possess the first, but not the second."

Mr. Lastword—"No. All cents have women's heads, but some women's heads——" (bangs the door as he goes out.)—Puck.

A Delawarean has contracted to furnish 100 tons of cat tails to a firm in St. Louis.

CHICAGO LEDGER
BLADE LEDGER
LEDGER

THE CHICAGO LEDGER.

125.000 COPIES

- - - 19 YEAR OLD - - -

LARGEST AND BEST

ILLUSTRATED FAMILY WEEKLY

STORY PAPER

IN THE UNITED STATES.

ONLY $2.00 PER YEAR

All other Story Papers $3.00 per Year.

SAMPLES FREE

WHY DON'T YOU JOIN THE PROCESSION AND WRITE FOR FREE SAMPLE COPIES.

THE CHICAGO LEDGER,
W. D. BOYCE, Publisher,
CHICAGO, ILL.

If your Newsdealer or Newsboy does not handle the Ledger, ask him to write to us, and we will send them to him on sale. Speak to your Newsdealer about it.

THE SATURDAY BLADE

225.000 COPIES WEEKLY

THE SATURDAY BLADE HAS THE LARGEST PROVED PAID CIRCULATION OF ANY WEEKLY NEWSPAPER IN THE U. S. IT IS SOLD BY NEWS BOYS IN OVER 10,000 CITIES AND TOWNS, 5 CENTS A COPY, OR $2.00 PER YEAR. IT IS THE ONLY ILLUSTRATED 5 CENT NEWSPAPER PRINTED. ANY PERSON GETTING US A BOY TO SELL OUR PAPERS IN A TOWN WHERE WE ARE NOT NOW SELLING, WILL GET THE BLADE FREE. WRITE FOR SAMPLES, ETC., AND ADDRESS,

Saturday Blade, - Chicago, Ill.

WE are making a specialty this season of what we call our PARAGON HARNESS. Made of the FINEST STOCK and the very BEST WORKMANSHIP. Such a harness cannot be bought for less than $25. at retail. But we are willing, in order to introduce it, to SELL ONE SET ONLY to one person as a sample for $16.50.

$25.00 HARNESS FOR $16.50

IN GENUINE RUBBER $16.50

DESCRIPTION OF HARNESS.

[illegible]

Red Lake Falls Iron Works,

P. & J. MEEHAN, Proprietors.

J. Z PERRON, Manager.

SAW AND GRIST MILL

MACHINERY MADE AND REPAIRED.

Repairing Thresher Engines

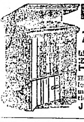
AND BOILERS AND

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS

Circular Saws Hammered. Satisfaction Guaranteed, Correspondence solicited.

BRING IN YOUR WORK

Scrap Brass and Copper Bought.



PERFECTION IN BUTTER MAKING.

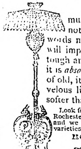
The O. K. OUTFIT EXCELS THEM ALL.

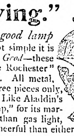
THE O.K. CREAMERY

Has the largest cooling surface; takes less cooling material; less labor, and gives Best Results. All cream raised between milkings. Skimming Glass whole depth of can, showing condition of milk without touching Creamery. Send for O. K. Catalogue.

JOHN S. CARTER, Sole Manf'r, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

"Seeing is Believing."



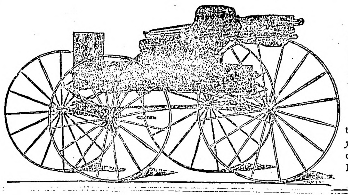


And a good lamp must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer hasn't the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue and we will send you a lamp safely by express—your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.

ROCHESTER LAMP CO., 42 Park Place, New York City.

"The Rochester."



WARRANTED WAGONS AND BUGGIES

MANUFACTURED BY

EASY WAGON GEAR CO.

DETROIT, MICH.

If you wish the easiest riding, most durable and attractive Wagon or Buggy made, ask your Dealer to show you these goods. A written warranty furnished with every one. Take no other. You may as well have the BEST. It costs no more than an inferior article.

CATALOGUE SENT IF REQUESTED.

We Would Like to Call the Attention of

Capitalists

Manufacturers and Others Desiring a Place for

INVESTMENT

To the

Superior Advantages of

RED LAKE FALLS

Its Many WaterPowers and other natural advantages. It is only a question of a few years until this will be one of the leading cities of Minnesota. Investment in real estate or water privileges are sure to secure to the investors handsome returns.

WE'RE

In the Center of Vast

Farming District.

Yearly consuming large amounts of imported products of manufactures. This vast tract of land is watered by the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers. Within the limits of the city are

12 DISTINCT WATER POWERS.

The only natural water powers on these streams. There are fine openings for paper and pulp mills, woolen and other factories. Parties outside desiring any information concerning property, address

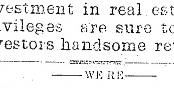
---

LOVELL DIAMOND CYCLES.

No. 1, Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 2, Cushion Tires, $95.00
No. 3, Ladies' Solid Tires, $85.00

STRICTLY HIGH GRADE.

No. 3 C, Ladies' Cushion Tires, $95.00
No. 4, Convertible Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 4, C, " Cushion Tires, $95.00



OUR Cushion Tires ARE Warranted ALL PARTS Interchangeable.

$85.00

No better machine made at any price.

Bicycle Catalogue Free.

$85.00

JOHN P. LOVELL ARMS CO.,
MANUFACTURERS, BOSTON, MASS.

Send six cents in stamps for our 100 page Illustrated Catalogue of Guns, Rifles, Revolvers, Sporting Goods of all kinds, etc.

ANDERSON'S SHORTHAND TYPEWRITER
Prints A Word at One Stroke.

THIS is the machine that is used in the Office, Court-room, and for reporting lectures and sermons.

While its speed is greater than any other known method, it is so simple that any intelligent person can gain a speed of 100 or more words per minute, in five or six weeks, without the aid of an instructor. Circulars and testimonials sent to all who mention this paper.

E. T. PIERCE, FAYETTE, OHIO,
Sole Agent for U. S. and Canada.

THE NEW WEBSTER

JUST PUBLISHED—ENTIRELY NEW.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

A GRAND INVESTMENT for the Family, the School, or the Library.

Revision has been in progress for over 10 Years. More than 100 editorial laborers employed. $300,000 expended before first copy was printed. Critical examination invited. Get the Best. Sold by all Booksellers. Illustrated pamphlet free.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

RALPH & BOURDON,

Proprietors of the

CITY DRAY LINE.

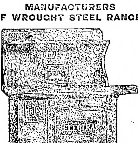
WOOD & COAL

Anything in our line done Promptly and at very Reasonable Rates.

GIVE US A CALL

INDIANA RANGE CO.

MANUFACTURERS OF WROUGHT STEEL RANGES



Guaranteed to be the most economical, most durable and most perfect Range on the market. Suitable for hard or soft coal, or wood.

Send for catalogue to

INDIANA RANGE CO.
EVANSVILLE, IND.

Bucklin's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25 cents per bottle. For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

The Mystery Solved.

A jockey overheard a conversation in a stable that excited his curiosity and lead him to make a thorough investigation which resulted in the following valuable discovery. That Metzger's Angleworm and Wormwood Oil Liniment for horses has no equal as it keeps their joints limber and gives them good action, and for sprains, etc., it cures quickly, as every one is aware of the penetrating qualities of angle and wormwood oil. Call on W. A. Schreiter and get a bottle as he reports it's giving universal satisfaction. Price 50c and $1 per bottle.

His Curiosity Was Gratified.

A stranger stood alone in the street of a great city. His hat was napless his boots covered with the dust of travel. Around him on every side a hurrying throng pushed and jostled in mad haste. He turned to a friendly policeman and said: "Say: Where be all these people gwine"! The officer was dumfounded at such ignorance "Where are they going? Why, to purchase tickets via the popular Wisconsin Central if you are going anywhere you want to go [illegible] on the best track with the most comfortable cars and with the greatest ease you ever experienced". For tickets berths and further information apply to any ticket agent.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. W. A. Schreiter Druggists.

A Safe Investment.

Is one which is guaranteed to bring you satisfactory results, or in case of failure a return of purchase price. On this safe plan you can buy from our advertised Druggist a bottle of Dr. Kings' New Discovery for Consumption. It is guaranteed to bring relief in every case, when used for any affection of Throat, Lungs or Chest, such as Consumption, Inflammation of Lungs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping Cough [illegible] can always be depended upon. Trial bottles free at W. A. Schreiter's Drugstore.

Notice.

To the owners of following described lots and parcels of land situate lying and being in the Village of Red Lake Falls Minn., viz.

Lot 13, 14, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24 in Block 7 of Champagne & Dow's add. Also lots 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 Blk 23, Lots 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 Blk 22. Lots 13 & N 70 ft lot [illegible] Blk 37, Lot 9 Blk 44, lot 1 Blk 45, lots 10, 11, 12 Blk 70 and lot 9 Blk 83 in Kretschmar's addition.

You are notified to repair the sidewalks in front of said above described lots and parcels of land within fourteen days from date of this notice or the same will be done by the village and assessed against said lots as provided by law.

Dated Red Lake Falls, Minn., Nov. 16th, 1891.

H. B. Davis,
Recorder.

ADAM SCHMITZ

DEALER IN

Horse Furnishing Goods,

5/A HORSE BLANKETS
5/A HORSE BLANKETS

EVERYBODY WANTS ONE.

Two or three dollars for a 5/A Horse Blanket will save double its cost. Your horse will eat less to keep warm and be worth fifty dollars more.

LIGHT AND HEAVY HARNESS.

Whips, Combs, Brushes, Trunks, Valises.

The celebrated STANDARD HORSE AND CATTLE FOOD. Every stock owner should test its merits. For sale by ADAM SCHMITZ.

Brodway - Red Lake Falls

Librarian
Minnesota State Historical Society

RED LAKE FALLS NEWS.

JAS. MEEHAN JR. P. MEEHAN } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS. OFFICIAL PAPER OF CITY

Vol. VIII No. 48. RED LAKE FALLS, POLK COUNTY, MINNESOTA, NOVEMBER 26, 1891. TERMS, $1.50 PER YEAR

CHRISTMAS - IS - COMING!

AND AS USUAL SANTA CLAUS IS MAKING HIS HEADQUARTERS AT

The Drug and Jewelry Store,

Where can be found the finest assortment of

Toys and Holiday Goods, ALBUMS TOILET CASES, WORK BOXES, DOLLS, CUPS AND SAUCERS, ROCKING HORSES, ETC., ETC. Something Nice and Cheap

Remember, we have the goods. Call and and see us at the old stand.

W. J. Flack, Proprietor; Miss Mattie Cervais, Assistant.

☞P. S.—Also Watches, Jewelry and Musical Goods in Large Variety.

Joseph Smith & Co.

HAVE, AS USUAL, A COMPLETE Steck of General Merchandise, Including a Fine Assortment of Goods Suitable For Holiday Gifts.

A large stock of Ladies Winter Dress Goods, Cloaks, etc. and general furnishing goods.

A Large Stock of Gents Furnishings. Call and Examine Stock.

Frank E. Hunt,

DEALER IN

GENERAL : HARDWARE.

P & J. MEEHAN,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. J. HOWE & CO)

Manufacturers and Dealers in

LUMBER,

LATH,

SHINGLES

Sash, Doors, Moldings, Building Paper,

Yards and Office on Main St.

At His Old Tricks.

From the West Superior Call.

Sidney Bottineau returned yesterday from a deer hunt on the Tamarack. He returns with five carcases to attest to his prowess. While struggling with a dying buck he had the misfortune to pierce his hand with a prong of the animal's antlers.

A Happy Event.

Tuesday evening at 7:30, Mr. E. J. Garceau and Miss Odile Provost were united in marriage at St. Joseph's church by Rev. L. S. Arpin, Miss Elodia Bray being bridesmaid and Mr. J. E. Bray best man. Rev. Arpin made an effective and sympathetic address. After the ceremony the bridal party repaired to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Garceau, where a well appointed wedding supper awaited them. All then betook themselves to Opera hall to enjoy the dance. Here were assembled about forty couples, friends of the contracting parties, and from the grand march to the finale the ball was a delightful success. The presents were numerous: Centre table, Joe Bray and E. A. Moran; cane rocker, Theo. Garceau; water set and towels, Ed. Garceau; hanging lamp, W. A. Schreiter; vases, Elodia Bray; baby set, Bert Gray; whisk broom, and holder, W. A. Ralph; fruit dish, J. A. Duffy; chrystal table set, J. M. Bray; crumb set Miss Rebecca Brunelle; Match box Miss Mattie Gervais; toilet soap, N. Poulliet; three pillows, Mrs. M. Bray; satchet bag, Miss Laurie Lelonde. Mr. and Mrs. Garceau have gone to housekeeping over Schreiter's store.

Big Immigration Movement.

Everything points to the biggest immigration movement next season that the Red River valley has ever known. The knowledge of this year's enormous crop, which has smashed the world's record, has been dissemminated far and near. The immigration committee of the Red River valley early in the year a pamphlet showing what had actually been done here by actual settlers, most of whom came without a dollar. A quarter of millon of these were distributed throughout the East by reliable news agencies, and 50,000 were sent out under the direct supervision of the committee. Then the Great Northern railway prepared a Red River Valley exhibit, which was sent to all the principal state fairs under the direction of Max Rass, immigration agent for the Great Northern. The commissioner of agriculture also prepared statistical work of value which was given wide distribution, and now the Great Northern has developed another plan which is unique and interesting.

Rainy Lake Park.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—The secretary of the interior has referred to the commissioner of the geneal land office the request of the Minnesota legislature that certain lands situate at the head waters of the Mississippi, Red and Rainy Lake rivers, comprising about six million acres of forest lands, be set aside for the purpose of a national park under the act of Mar. 3, 1891. It is hoped the General Land office will take action in this matter sometime before the year 2000. Hundrds of settlers are already in this region and country is being developed as rapidly as the limited means of the settlers will allow. In a year or two at the most there will not be sufficient forest lands unoccupied to make a respectable municipal park.

The National Republican Convention.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24—The first informal ballot resulted: New York 9; Chicago 0; Omaha 5; Minneapolis 13; Cincinnati 4; San Fracisco 8; Detroit 1; Pitsburg 2; St. Louis 1; Chanttanooga 4; Frist formal ballot; New Yrok 10; Chicrgo 0; Omaha 3; Minneapolis 14; Cinncinnati 8; San Francisco 5; Detroit 1; Pittsburg 1; Chottanooga 4.

THE SEVENTH BALLOT.

Minneapolis has twenty-nine votes on the seventh and last ballot, and gets the convention.

JOHNSON SPEAKS FOR MINNEAPOLIS

C. W. Johnson, clerk of the United State senate, said Ohio was safe, but the enemy had made inroads in the northwest and the convention should go beyond Wall street and the wheat pit of Chicago. Governor Merriam followed. The republicans had lost Wisconsin, Iowa and Nebraska: the Dakotas were tinctured with the alliance, but the convention would go far to redeem that region. Senator Casey and M. N. Johnson of North Dakota favored Minneapolis. Judge C. R. Scott of Omaha spoke for that city. The time set for the republican convention is June 7.

A Very Busy Man.

In each of several states of this Union is a village called Woodside—in what state is the one we are about to mention, we leave the reader to guess. How some of them gained the name, whether because they were on the confines of great forests or not, may be conjectured; but that this particular one was named for a man who was a paragon of busy occupation there can be no doubt. As we write we have his card before us: "Rev. ———Wood, Editor and proprietor "Baptist———;" proprietor Woodside Store, Woodside Blaksmith and Carpenter shop. Woodside Insurance Office, Woodside Stock and Hay Ranch, Woodside Job Printing Office, Woodside Real Estate Office." Only a meat market and hotel need have been added to make him "sole monarch of all"—Woodside. Rev. Wood, all must acknowledge, was a very busy man. In fact this is a country of busy men, the United States; and the Western busy man in particular, when he travels, always selects "The Burlington," as the quickest, shortest, and most comfortable line to reach all the chief cities, and if he wants any information about rates of fare, time, or routes, he calls on a ticket agent of this line, or writes to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

A Republican Exponent.

Every man will wish to be well up on thriff points the coming year, and he can get the prospective views at the lowest possible cost by taking the Home Market Bulletin of Boston which we furnish at half price in connection with the NEWS. Governor McKinley says the Bulletin is admirable, and he wishes it might go to every voter.

A Sad Mistake.

Is to have a stable of fine horses and have the distemper start among them with nothing to prevent its spreading. Heed the warning, and check it in the first stages of the disease by using Metzger's Pink Eye and Distemper Cure, as it has never been known to fail. Cures horses of old chronic coughs, colds, chills, epizootic, and all throat, lung Bronchial and nasal troubles. Especially good in hay fever or heaves. Price $1 per bottle or 6 for $5. For sale by W A Schreiter

Credit to Whom Credit is Due.

The Great Northern railway officials are entitled to high credit for the interest they are taking in attracting immigration to the Dakotas and Minnesota this year. This company maintains a regular immigration bureau and not only advertises the country extensively through the press and pamphlet literature, but it has sent representatives to all state fairs and expositions with fine displays of farm products. It is also publishing carefully authenticated statements of farm yields this season, which are having a large circulation in the east. If every railway company in the northwest would do as effective advertising work as the Great Northern, and immense influx of desirable settlers settlers would pour into these states 1892.

Gentilly Items.

Mrs. I. Fournier is dangerously ill, but we hope she will recover.

Mr. and Mrs. Ovide Moreau drove to Red Lake Falls Saturday, returning Sunday.

Leon Laurent and wife visited Crookston the latter part of last week and returned Saturday.

Messrs. J. Laurent, A. Clement and R. Gagnon took a trip to the county seat Sunday, returning the following day.

Thrashing is over in Terrebonne, and there is not a stack to be seen.

Mrs. Quesnel died Monday at her residence in Terrebonne and was buried Wednesday. The funeral took place at ten o'clock a. m. from St. Antaine's, Rev. Fr. Feige officiating.

Hapypy Hoslers.

Wm. Timmons, Postmaster of Idaville, Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, the farmes and stockman, of same place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medesne, made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner, hardarew merchant, same town, says: Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run dawn and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength, good appetite and felt just like he had a new lease of life. only 50c. a bottles at W. A. Schreiter's Drug Store.

Guaranteed Cure.

We authorize our advertiised druggist to sell Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, upon this condition. if you are afflicted with a cough, cold or any Lungs, Throat or chest trouble, and will use this remedy as directed, giving it a fair trial, and experience no benfit, you may return the bottle and have your money refunded. We could not make this offer did we not know that Dr. King's New Discvry could be relied on. It never disappoints. Trial bottles free at W. A. Schreiters's Drug Store. Large size 50c. and $1.00.

A Very Narrow Escape.

Yes, I had a very narrow escape, said a prominent citizen to a friend. I was confined to my bed for more than two years and all my friends gave me up. I had running sores on my limbs and after using nearly everything was induced to try Metzger's Pain Eradicator and now here I am, sound and hearty. You will find it for sale by W. A. Schreiter. Price 50c a bottle, trial size free.

A Fact

WORTH KNOWING.

AT

Wells' Confectionery Stand.

On Main st
You can secure rare bargains in Toys and Books as I am closing out My present stock

AT COST

To make room for

Christmas Goods

Don't Forget

That I carry a fine line of Fancy Groceries, Fresh

Maple Syrup, Fine Jellies, Canned Pine-Apples, All kinds of Canned Goods.

Potted Hams, Canned Beef, Boston Baked Beans, Etc.

CIGARS
The Finest and Favorite Brands.

CANDY
Fresh, the Finest Quality.

(I supply this couple with sweets.)

Don't forget to call at

C. B. WELLS.

Red Lake Falls News

TERMS, $1.50 PER YEAR.

P. & JAS. MEEHAN, PROPRIETORS.

MINNESOTA NOTES.

The new paper mill at Little Falls is nearly ready for business.

Madison, Lac qui Parle county, has organized a debating society.

The free evening schools at Winona are largely attended and very successful.

The Congregational church at Winthrop has not yet succeeded in finding a pastor.

Winthrop has raised its share of the World's fair fund, 20 citizens signing a joint note of $150.

Citizens of Winona have subscribed $15,000 toward the establishment of the steam radiator factory.

Interviews with prominent citizens indicate that Rice county will raise its share of the World's fair fund.

Rev. C. H. Plummer, lately of Red Wing, has been chosen rector of St. John's Episcopal church of St. Cloud.

Recent surveys have revealed the fact that several sections of land, supposed to be in Sibley county, are really in Le Sueur.

C. B. Thurston, of St. Paul, will utilize the deposits of white kaoline clay near Le Sueur by starting a procelain ware factory.

Stillwater's most enterprising citizens are at work securing subscriptions for the establishment of a trunk factory in that city.

Near Minnesota, the six-year-old son of J. B. Mason, was accidentally shot by his brother. A piece of his skull was blown out.

A big conflagration was averted in the shops of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway, at Austin, by a liberal supply of city water.

The new saw mill, with improved machinery, which will be one of largest in the country, will be ready for operation at Little Falls next spring.

The Pine Tree lumber company's saw mill at Little Falls has shut down for the season. It has run night and day and its cut has been very large.

Lucius Ames, Stephen Ford and Alvin Barber, the men who were badly injured by a boiler explosion near Red Lake Falls, will probably recover.

The Duluth Salvationists with the excursien abused Minneapolis and St. Paul that they might receive the plaudists of some of the Duluth people.

Rev. S. N. Griffith, who formerly preached in North Dakota and received considerable newspaper notoriety, has accepted a charge at Hamlin.

In Rice county during the month of October, 33 farms were sold, of 1,752 acres, and aggregating the sum of $37,620, or an average of 21.60 per acre.

The Prison Mirror publishes the course of study pursued at the night school in the penitentiary. A study of "the nine parts of speech is included."

George Jacobs, the missing Luverne farmer, has been heard from. He sent word that he was in New York, but does not explain his mysterious action.

William Rabb will put in a $10,000 plant at Austin, next spring, for the manufacture of his celebrated double and triple flue chimneys, patented May 24, 1891.

At Cloquet, the jury at the inquest decided that the railroad company was responsible for Mrs. Lobeck's death on the hand car. She was the wife of the section boss.

Minneapolis Mills made 201,525 barrels of flour for the week and shipped 196,191 barrels, of which 90,680 barrels were directly exported. A strong foreign demand exists.

John J. Erin, engineer at the Hotel Winona in that city, committed suicide by shooting himself in his room. Failure in placing a puzzle on the market is said to be the cause.

Geo. Robinson, a farmer living on Portland prairie, near Caledonia, was found dead by the neighbors. His neck was broken, caused, it is supposed, by being thrown from his buggy.

James Scott, of Lebanon, who stabbed Thomas Brown, of Lakeville, waived examination before Justice Kehrer, and was bound over to the next term of the district court in the sum of $200.

Farmers at Northfield fear that if the usual amount of snow falls this year that there will be more chinch bugs propagated next year than for many years, and that their ravages will be very great.

At Grand Rapids Capt. Chas. Seeley found in the snow the body of a lumberman named Ed Whaley, who had been seen on the road badly intoxicated. He had frozen to death during the night. He had lived in Minneapolis.

The newspaper libel case of Senator Frank A. Day, of Fairmont editor of the Sentinel, against H. M Blaisdell, of the Fairmont News, was concluded Thursday. The jury returned a verdict of $500 in favor of the plaintiff.

At Little Falls the last of the machinery for the Hennepin Paper Company's mill is being put in, and in a few days manufacturing will commence. Three new water wheeles, with 250 horse power, will furnish [illegible] aill.

[illegible] c, a boy 15 years old, of [illegible] one of his feet badly [illegible] en the bumpers while [illegible] en two freight cars in [illegible] hern yard here Thursday. The entire flesh was [illegible] e foot, and, strange to [illegible] ere broken.

[illegible] orrespondent says: "A [illegible] o all appearances dis- [illegible] niles, and as large as a [illegible] l from the west last Thursday evening at 7:15, having a southerly course. Its color was purple and blue Its light made it possible to read a newspaper perfectly and lasted five seconds"

Charles E. Pierce, son of W. C. Pierce, of Winona died Thursday morning from catarrhal consumption. Deceased was for many years connected with the Winona Mill Company. For ten years he has been in South Dakota, and recently held the position of station agent at Rapid City for the Fremont, Elkhorn & Missouri Valley road.

EVENTS OF A WEEK

Interesting Digest of the Happenings of the Past week

State, Criminal, Foreign, Personal, Casualty, and Other News.

Stuart Robson, the actor, was married at New York Tuesday to Miss May Waldron.

Statistics show that the corn crop of the past season was one of the best on record.

In a collision on the Great Northern at St. Cloud, Minn., six men were seriously injured.

Between fifty and sixty engineers of the Belt Line struck Wednesday at St. Louis, Mo.

Colonel Donn Piatt died Thursday at his country home, Mac-O-Chee, in Logan County, Ohio.

At St. Louis, Mo., Tuesday the engineers and firemen on the Belt Line declared a strike.

From July 1 to Nov. 1, 1891, $22,323,773 in gold was returned from Europe to the United States.

The twenty-seven breweries in Cincinnati, Covington, and Newport are likely to be consolidated.

The official vote of Hamilton county, Ohio, gives McKinley a plurality over Campbell of 5,776.

A conspiracy to overthrow the present ruling dynasty of Greece has been discovered, it is said.

Congressman William H. Hatch, of Missouri, has entered the field as a Speakership candidate.

Ex-Governor Porter, Minister to Italy, is to reach Indianapolis this week to remain two or three months.

Packing at Chicago since Nov. 1 shows a decrease of 16,000 hogs compared with the returns of last season to date.

At Catskill, N. Y., the Rev. H. W. George was sentenced to fifteen years in the penitentiary for manslaughter.

President Harrison issued a proclamation Friday, appointing Thursday, Nov. 26, a day of thanksgiving and prayer.

Hundreds of persons are reported to be dying daily of influenza in the famine-stricken districts of Southern Russia.

The Democratic editors of Southern Illinois met at Centralia Friday, and organized an association for political work.

During the last twelve weeks Chicago received flour and grain equal to 72,372,000 bu and shipped equal to 62,225,000 bu.

George A. Wiard, of Montague, Mich., died Sunday after sleeping since May 1. He weighed fifty pounds at the time of his death.

Thele Kuhn, murderer of Wesley McDonnell at Port Huron, Mich., has been sentenced to twenty-four years in the penitentiary.

At the Knights of Labor Convention in Toledo, Ohio, it was discovered that the accounts of the ex-treasuror were over $31,000 short.

Inspector Hubbard compelled the display of the American flag at an anarchist meeting at West Twelfth street Turner Hall, Chicago.

John Trebar, a naturalized American citizen, has been imprisoned at Moines, Germany, for deserting the German army in 1870.

The Cheyenne National Bank, of Cheyenne, Wyo., suspended payment Friday. It is thought business will be resumed in a few days.

Republicans and democrats both claim a majority in the New York legislature. The county boards met Tuesday to canvass the returns.

The President of Mexico has issued a decree removing many of the arbitrary restrictions at the custom-house in the City of Mexico.

The Premier of Quebec is charged by a Montreal paper with receiving $115,000 from the contractor who built the Quebec court house.

Ryerson, Hill & Co.'s lower saw mill at Muskegon, Mich., which has been in continuous operation since 1817, shut down Wednesday.

Comanche, a war horse, and the only living thing that escaped the Indians at the Little Big Horn massacre died Saturday at Fort Riley.

Mr. Harry Zick, proprietor of the Bon Ton Restaurant at Duluth, Minn., left for parts unknown, leaving his five wives to mourn him.

In the Chamber of Deputies, a motion by M. Lauer, demanding the expulsion of the Jewish bankers from France, was rejected—431 to 32.

Chicago police broke up a meeting of anarchists at the old headquarters at No. 54 West Lake street. Twenty-five arrests were made.

The Florida phosphate "boom" decreased the price of the Canadian phosphate, but the latter has now taken a jump of $3 a ton or to $18.50.

Official returns for Iowa show that the total vote cast for Governor was 420,214, which is the largest vote ever cast in the State Boies' plurality is 7,816.

Three life convicts escaped from the penitentiary at Waupun, Wis., Wednesday through a tunnel that, it is said, must have required years to dig.

Christopher Buckley and Samuel Rainey, of San Francisco, Cal., were indicted Tuesday, charged with accepting bribes while in the employ of the city.

C. W. Williams, of Independence, Ia., has purchased Mrs. A. J. Barnhart's interests in Axtell's yearling sister and weanling brother. The price is private.

P.P. Palmer, in charge of the Cheyenne Indian Agency in South Dakota, is alleged to have swindled the government out of several thousand dollars by false entries.

Judge Zane, of Salt Lake City, Utah, Wednesday rendered judgment escheating from the Mormon Church the tithing office, Gardo house, historian office and church farm.

It is said that agents of the Canadian Government will visit farmers in several of the Northern States and endeavor to induce them to locate in Manitoba and the Northwest.

The condition of growing wheat for the whole State of Michigan is given at 91 against 105 one year ago. The comparatively low condition is due to insects and dry weather.

A cyclone which passed over the Andaman Islands in the Bay of Bengal a week ago sunk the steamer Enterprise. Only six out of her crew of eighty-three men were saved.

Twenty tons of powder at Miller's station, Ind., exploded, entirely destroying the plant and causing a loss of $75,000. Several houses were wrecked at Hobart, five miles distant.

Friday the Knights of Labor convention at Toledo, Ohio, adopted resolutions to be presented to the Federation of Labor, intended to settle the difficulties between the two orders.

Robert H. McBride, editor of the Mitchell (S. D.) Mail, was whipped by the Hon. John D. Lawler, President of the First National Bank of that place, and ex-Territorial Treasurer.

John Knight, of Beloit, Wis., recently had an iron splinter driven through his eye. Chicago physicians removed it drawing it out through the back of his eye, without impairing his sight.

It is said that the settlers of John Brown colony, in Fresno county, Cal., will not lose from any shortage that may exist in the accounts of W. F. Baird, of the Madera (Cal.) National bank.

It is stated in semi-official circles at Ottawa that Lord Stanley is contemplating resigning from the office of governor-general of Canada and that he will be appointed to the office of viceroy of India.

Since the death of Mr. Parnell the attacks upon his widow, made by some of the opponents of the Parnellite section of the Irish Parliamentary party, have grown more and more virulent in character.

Dispatches from Guatemala say that President Barillas is sending troops to the north from Quezeltenango for the purpose of intercepting the revolutionists if they should attempt to cross over Mexico.

A traveling salesman for a Cincinnati diamond firm left a gripsack containing $20,000 worth of diamonds in a car while he went out to get some lunch at Dayton, Ohio. When he returned the grip was gone.

Capt. T. G. Cushman, lately returned from Apia, says that Baron von Pilsach, governor of Samoa, tried to induce him to blow up the city jail in which five native chiefs were confined to prevent them from escaping.

The Nevada State Board of Trade at large adopted a resolution Saturday assuring Western railroads that it will do its part to aid and encourage the first company that begins the construction of a line into that State.

The second of three competitive tests of armor plates manufactured in the United States for modern vessels of war was made at the Naval Department at Washington, American armor proving they were without a peer.

Senor Silva has been elected President of the Chilian Senate, and Senor Luco has been elected President of the Chilian Chamber of Deputies. These gentlemen, with President elect Montt, constitute the Provisional Junta.

NEW YORKERS HAPPY.

Thanks to Rainmakers They Won't Have to Drink Beer.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—A special from Croton Landing, N. Y., says: Several men employed by a fireworks manufacturing concern arrived here this morning for the purpose of "making rain." They brought with them an outfit of explosives which were to be fired into the clouds. The first was with 200 pounds of explosive. Almost immediatly after entering the clouds a great deluge of water began falling such an outpouring as would fill every stream to overflowing within a few hours.

The explosion was made directly over the dam and the torrents of water that fell insure a great quanity of water thereabouts. Reports from adjacent territory are to the effect that the rainfall extended over an area of about a square mile, the downpour being reported as tremendous. The supply of New York city is derived from Croton lake and this fall will greatly allay the fears of a water famine, which have prevailed for several days past.

MORE WHEAT THAN CARS.

The Car Famine Still Prevails Throughout South Dakota.

HURON, S. D., Nov. 19.—Up to a late hour tonight the state board of railroad commissioners had failed to hit on any plan affording immediate relief from the existing grain blockade. Warehouses, elevators, barns and every available building at many stations are filled with wheat and no cars to haul it away. Thousands of bushels are piled in heaps on the open prairie and unless soon cared will spoil. Many buyers refuse to receive any more grain. The demand for cars exceeds the daily supply from 1,500 to 1,800. In one day the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul was short 700 cars, the Chicago & Northwestern 800 and the Great Northern 300. Each company is doing its utmost to supply the demand, but it is impossible to do so. Ten extra trains have been added by the Northwestern, and nearly as many by the other two principal systems in this part of the state, but they are unable to make any headway.

What The Northwest Owes.

WASHINGTON, D. C. Nov. 19.—Census bulletin number 64 shows that the state and county indebtedness in the North Central Division averages $24 per family. Counting five persons to a family it is $21 35 in Minnesota, $56.45 in North Dakota, 50.20 in South Dakota, $11 35 in Wisconsin, and $9.55 in Iowa. The net county indebtedness of Minnesota in 1890 aggregated $3,315,000 an average of $12.75 per family of five persons. The heaviest aggregate is in Ramsey county but the heaviest debt per capita is in Cook county. In North Dakota Burleigh county has the heaviest debt, but Mercer county is more deeply involved in proportion to population.

WASHINGTON NOTES

Latest Telegraph News from the National Capital Condensed.

Doings of the Supreme Court the Executive and Other Departments.

The total value of the exports of domestic breadstuffs during the month of October was $24,433,334.

The net gold in the treasury, coin and bullion, Friday was $129,631,268, an increase of over $2,000,000 since Nov. 1.

A rumor is current that the president has decided to appoint Mrs. Gen. Logan commissioner of pensions in place of Mr. Raum.

Argument in the three cases involving the constitutionality of the McKinley tariff act has been postponed by the United States Supreme court until Nov. 30.

The Chilian imbroglio has given a boom to the movement to have the government guarantee the bonds of the Nicaragua canal. The projectors are confident that they will get the bill put through.

The citizens' executive committee on the national encampment of the G. A. R. to be held in Washington next year has decided to recommend the second week of October as the date for holding the encampment.

The chief of the bureau of statistics reports that the total value of the exports of beef and hog products from the United States during the month of October, 1891, was $3,265,945. The value of the dairy products was $343,917.

Acting Secretary of War Grant said Thursday that there had been no correspondence between the department and the governor of Tennessee asking aid of federal authorities in case the trouble with the miners in Tennessee becomes serious.

The navy department has authorized the fifth payment, $91,890, to be made to Cramp & Sons on account of the battle-ship Indiana, and the third payment, $46,864, to be made to the Union Iron Works of California on account of the battle-ship Oregon.

Depredations upon the mails is complained of by a certain bank and business men at New Orleans, who are believed to be connected with the lottery. An appeal against the action of the postal authorities has been made to Postmaster-General Wanamaker.

Mr. Azeez Musallem, an Ottoman subject from Mount Lebanon, Syria, called at the White House with an elegant portrait of President Harrison in silk, framed with native wood inlaid with mother of pearl, which he presented to the president. It is a fine specimen of oriental industry.

In the United States Supreme court, on Tuesday, Attorney General Miller announced that it had been agreed to submit the controversy between the United States and England as to the Bering sea seal fisheries to arbitration, and that the official announcement of that fact would soon be made.

The report of the director of the mints to the secretary of the treasury shows that during the last fiscal year the coinage at United States mints aggregated 119,547,877 pieces, the largest in the history of the country. The mines of the United States yielded during the year gold of a commercial value of $33,845,000 and silver of the value of $57,225,000.

LAPSE OF POSTMASTERS' COMMISSIONS.

A statement has been prepared at the post-office department showing that the commissions issued by the president to postmasters at the following named cities and towns in Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa will expire next December: Illinois—Barry, Carmi, Chester, Dixon, Ravenswood, Virden. Michigan—Jonesville, Paw Paw. Wisconsin—Beaver Dam, Chippewa Falls, Green Bay, Prairie du Chien. Iowa—Indianola.

CANADIAN TELEGRAPHERS SENT HOME.

Commissioner Owen's bureau of immigration has taken a new departure by ordering the return to Canada of six telegraph operators who were imported by the Northern Pacific. The men were agents at Ulm, Treman, Tilden, Buffington and Johnstown, all North Dakota towns. The railroad company was prompt to comply with the demand for the return of the men and no prosecution will be instituted.

NO RESPONSIBILITY IS ADMITTED.

The report from Italy that the United States had admitted its blame in the New Orleans affair is false. No responsibility for the lynching has been admitted by the federal government. If Rudini had been more temperate in his course by this time the president might have been willing to recommend to congress the consideration of indemnity. Even such action would not admit the responsibility, but would merely leave it for congress to decide.

NEXT ENCAMPMENT OF THE GRAND ARMY.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the council administration of the Grand Army of the Republic held here Friday at which Gen. Palmer, the commander in-chief, presided, it was decided to hold the next annual grand encampment in Washington, D. C., Sept. 20, 1892. A report of the local committee on hotels was declared to be highly satisfactory.

In no case was the rate in excess of the regular rates prevailing at the respective houses. Lists of hotels and boarding houses, with the capacity and rates of each, will be sent to every post in the country as quickly as they can be prepared.

OMAHA POSTAL EMPLOYES MUST GO.

The postmaster-general has ordered that sixteen mail-carriers and five clerks be dismissed in the Omaha post-office. Soon after Postmaster Clarkson assumed the duties of his office the United States civil service commission called attention to the fact that in the appointment of clerks and carriers in the Omaha office the civil service laws had not been strictly observed. Some of the men who had passed the required examination and had failed of appointment entered complaint with the commission at Washington which resulted in an inspector being sent there by the commission. The inspector made a lengthy report of the case, and recommended that five clerks and sixteen carriers be dismissed from the service in the Omaha postoffice and that the men whose interests had not been protected and who had stood the examination should be appointed instead.

SALVATIONISTS MURDERED.

At the Omaha Salvation Army Barracks A Cadet Kills the Captain and Then Herself.

OMAHA, Nov. 15.—The muster of the Northwestern divison of the Salvation Army at Omaha to meet La Mareschal Booth Clibborn, of France, has terminated in a tragedy sad, sudden and inexplicable. While yet the bell of the army's headquarters in Omaha tolled the curfew, like the requiem for a dead Sunday, and the soldiers were filing slowly out of the barracks, the sound of a pistol shot rang out above the notes of the bell and with a groan one of the army's captains fell to the pavement, blood gushing from her mouth and nostrils. Her body had not yet lodged on the sidewalk when a second report from the pistol was heard and a private reeled from the ranks and staggering blindly a step or two, fell dead in the gutter, her soul winging away amid the cloud of smoke from her own pistol.

It was just after 6 o'clock in the evening and the army's forces had gathered at the barracks for the purpose of making its usual parade prior to services. The residence in Omaha of the official heads of the army in France and America—La Mareschal Booth Gibborn, and her brother, Commander Ballington Booth, had drawn hither all the forces of this division, which includes Iowa, Minnesota, the Dakotas and Nebraska. For four days the army has held daily and nighly demonstrations and the work was seemingly meeting with great success. The real motive for the fearful double crime is not so clear as it might be, but the indications point to a rather queer combination of jealousy and simi-religious frenzy. However obscure may be the motive that prompted the deed, its results stand out too plainly, for the body of Fettie Biedler, the murderess and suicide, rests on a marble slab at the city morgue, and her victim, Capt. Hattie Smith, of the Salvation Band at Oskaloosa, Iowa, is awaiting untold agony the extinguishment of the vital spark at her temporary boarding place on Davenport street.

CHILI IS IRRITATED.

She Doesn't Like Pat Egan's Methods.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 19.—A special letter from Valparaiso under date of Oct. 7, says that while the Chillian people differ in some degree among themselves in opinion as to whether or not all charges against the Americans are true, yet there is, nevertheless, the general feeling that Chili has been injured by the uses and proceedings of the latter government in relation to the Chilian affairs have to say the least very injudicious. The letter adds that the irrigation has been increased by the fact that the cruiser San Francisco has been ordered to sustain Minister Egan in the position which he has taken in regard to the refuges. The letter continues: "The Herald of Oct. 5 says that the following persons are under protection of the American legation, comprising the fatal number of thirteen: A. Catopos, Juan E. Mackenna, Guillermo Mackenna, Gen. Gena, I. M. V Carrera, Adolpo Ibarrez, Ricardo Vicuna, V. Valero and five others of minor importance. Rumors are in circulation that the Chilian government sent to the United States minister at Washington a special messenger with dispatches, who will arrive there in November, and that an intimation has been made in friendly terms that the withdrawal of Mr Egan from Santiago would be agreeable to the Chilian government."

SOUTH DAKOTA'S EXHIBIT.

Circular Issued by the State Committee to the Editors of the State.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Nov. 19.—The state World's Fair committee has issued an appeal to the editors of South Dakota newspapers, asking their aid in stimulating interest in the World's Fair and to facilitate local organization in securing from each county its quota of the $80,000 required to defray the expenses of the exhibit, as follows: "Meantime we beg to remind everybody that as there is no money in the commission treasury and this committee and the executive committee are paying their own expenses as they go—working on their faith and banking on their confidence in final support from the people; there is no law to prevent anyone sending his or her check to Hon. W. W. Taylor, treasurer of the commission, at Pierre (Mr. Taylor being the state treasurer) for such amounts as it may be convenient to either give or loan for an immediate expense fund. It is not at all necessary to postpone this matter if the money lies uneasy in the pocket or the bank and conscience prick you to send it that way."

Now King of the Turf.

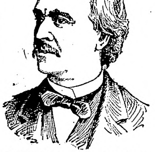
STOCKTON, Cal., Nov. 19.—Marvin drove Palo Alto, the game Electioneer stallion, in 2:08¾ today, breaking the world's stallion record and winning for the Palo Alto stable all records of the world. He made the mile without a skip, breaking after he passed the finish. It was a wonderful performance. His quarters were 31¾, 1:03½, 1:30½, 2:08¾.

Closing Lake Traffic.

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—All the western roads have advised their agents and connecting lines that they can receive no more freight this season for shipment by the lake lines.

SCULPTOR LOUIS REBISSO.

THE ITALIAN MAKER OF THE CHICAGO GRANT STATUTE.



Louis Rebisso, sculptor of the Grant statue, the massive work that now crowns the stone arch near the Lincoln Park shore, is an Italian by birth. He came to this country when quite a young man, and has since devoted himself to his art, at the same time pursuing diligently the study of the language and customs of his adopted country, so that now he is as thorough an American as can be found and as fully in sympathy with the hopes and aspirations of the country. He is small of stature, but vigor is testified in his every movement.

He speaks English well but not fluently. He is a reserved man and has not the faculty of impressing his personalty on others. He states he can speak best through his chisel. Mr. Rebisso is one of the instructors in the Cincinnati Art School, which duties he attends to in connection with the public works upon which he has been engaged. His other great statues are the equestrian one of Gen. McPherson in Washington, fourteen feet high, and the standing statue of the same hero over his grave at Clyde. He is now completing the casts an equestrian statue of Gen. William H. Harrison for the City of Cincinnati, which will soon go to the foundry.

HORSE NOTES.

Robert Bonner has offered $5,000 to the owner of any horse that trots a mile in 2:05. He will probably not be called upon to give it up this season.

The sires of the three fastest trotting stallions of their age in the world—Allerton, Axtell and Monbars—are owned by one man, W. L. Simmons, of Lexington Ky.

Orin Hickok said when Arion reduced his mark to 2:14½: "Arion is the best horse that ever stood on iron and I'd rather own him than any trotter ever foaled."

Now that winter has come you will hear horsemen say that their colts are trotting quarters at a 2.45 and 2:30 clip: This sort of talk will be common from now until about June 1st.

When the returns are all in it will be found that no horse on the turf this season has carried his driver more uniformly in front than Carl Bates' Thalberg. And the old gelding has never had to get out of the 2:25 class to do it either.

The American Trotter says: "Much excitement was caused by the Allerton-Delmach race, but it was needless. Like a wedding rehersal there was nothing in it. Allerton would look as lonesome in a race with any stallion on earth as the proprietor of a batchelor's hall on Thanksgiving Day."

The present season bids fair, for some time at least, to be a red-letter one in the annals of trotting so far as the two-year-old preformers are concerned, as it will be many a day before three such cracks of that age as Arion, 2:44½, Mobars, 2:18, and Ralph Wilkes, 2:18½, are again seen preforming in one year.

The famous old grey trotting gelding, Hopeful, 2:14¾, whose name and fame are familiar to every horseman in the country, is still on deck, and has recently shown himselp to be the champion trotter of his age. He is 25 years old, and on October 16, at Belair, Md., he was started to beat 2:50. The old patriarch started off with a youthful vigor and went the first half in 1:20, and finished the mile in 2:49¾.

GENERAL MARKETS.

CHICAGO.

WHEAT—Closed Nov., 93⅛c; Dec., 94⅛c; May, $1.01⅜.

CORN—Closed; Nov., 51⅛c; Dec., 45⅝c; May, 42⅜c.

OATS—Closed; Nov., 31⅜c; Dec., 30⅝c; May, 32⅛c.

PROVISIONS—Mess Pork closed; Nov., $8.70; Dec., $8.77½; Jan., $11.57½. Lard—Closed; Nov., $6.20; Dec., $6.25; Jan., $6.40; May, $6.70.

CATTLE—Quotations range from $5.70@5.90 for good to choice cattle; $5.00@5.50 good shipping steers; $2.85@4.25 common to fair steers.

HOGS—Sales ranged from $3.50@3.90 for light; $3.60@4.15 for heavy.

SHEEP—Quotations range from $3.50@4.60 for Western; $3.00@5.00 for natives and $3.75@.25 for lambs.

WOOL—Quotations as follows:

Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana and Eastern Iowa.
Coarse tub	28@30c
Medium tub	31@33c
Fine unwashed	17@ 0c
Medium unwashed	22@26c
Coarse washed	28@30c
Nebraska, Dakota, Minnesota, Kansas and Western Iowa.
Fine unwashed	24@28c
Medium unwashed	17@20c
Coarse unwashed	14@16c

NEW YORK MONEY MARKET.

Money on call easy at 3 to 5 ℔ cent: closed offered at 3½ ℔ cent.

Sterling exchange quiet and easy at 480½ for 60-day bills and 483¾ for demand.

Government Bonds—Closing quotations: 4's, coupons, 116.

NEW YORK PRODUCE MARKET.

WHEAT—Closing prices: No. 2 red, Nov., $1.05¾; Dec., $1.07.

CORN—Market closed: No. 2, Nov., 66⅛c; Dec., 57⅞c.

OATS—Market closed for Mixed Western, 36@40c; White do., 39@44c.

MILWAUKEE.

WHEAT—Cash 90⅝c; Dec., 91⅛c.

CORN—No. [illegible] 5c.

OATS—No. 2 White, 33c.

ST. LOUIS.

WHEAT—Cash, 9 [illegible]c Nov., 93¼c.

CORN—Cash, 41¾c; Nov., 40⅝c.

OATS—Cash [illegible]c; Nov., 30⅝c.

PROVISIONS—Pork, $[illegible].35. Lard, $6.00.

"If We Might."

If we might, O if we might Turn back the wheels of time, my friend, to-night,
If to the vale of childhood we could go
And climb again from those warm depths below
To this steep hillside; live from day to day,
The past, just as we lived it once, O say
Would you be glad to tread the pathway o'er
The same old steps again, no less, no more?

If we might, yes, if we might Turn back the whirling wheels, my friend, to-night,
And slowly wind from youth to middle age,
The tangled road; if every blotted page
We could omit and let the good remain;
In life's brief book skip all the grief and pain;
Would you be willing then to live them o'er,
The backward years that can return no more?

"If I might, O if I might,
Perhaps I would, perhaps I should to-night;
I am not wise. Old friendships were so true,
Old loves so sweet, and even if I knew,
I must have all the sorrow, all the pain,
For love's dear sake I might go back again,
The thorny pathway to my willing feet
Would not be hard, I think it would be sweet."

But, if the spring, ah! if the spring
Lead on to summer; if the autumn bring
The winter snowflakes; if the joyous chime
Of wintry bells ring in the blossom time;
Why would you live again the same old year,
Knowing another spring will soon be here?
The dead May violets rather should you kiss,
And say, "Next year they will be sweet as this."

And if the life, ah, if the life
We live on earth, so full of restless strife,
So full of joyful life, or blessed peace
Is beautiful, why should you wish to cease
The onward journey? Do not wish again
To live life o'er, even without the pain,
For O, my friend, when life's last sun is set
The bright next day is Heaven, do not forget.

—Julia H. May, in the Boston Journal

WORTH KEEPING.

"Hallo, Kate!"

"Yes!" answered a voice above stairs, as Charley Grant called from the cosy little hall below.

"Come down here; I've got something to tell you."

Charley's handsome face was bright enough to tell anybody that his news pleased him greatly, as he stood waiting for his wife to come down. And why not, since his pretty cousin, Jessie Kingsbury, had come at one time very near filling the place which Kate had now?

But Kate was as sweet and pretty as ever Jess had been—at least, she used to be, before Baby Johnnie came—and—and—well, Kate appeared at the instant, and even Charley could not call her pretty now.

Her golden hair was all bunched up and tucked back with an ugly comb, her wrapper unbelted, no collar on, and her small feet thrust into clumsy old slippers.

Charley's friends used to say he was a perfect fiend on the subject of untidy women, and he couldn't help a shade crossing his face as he remembered how trim and nice Kate was when they were first married.

But the shade passed as swiftly as it came, and he stooped to give her the usual kiss, as he said:

"Busy to-day?"

"Yes. Hush, Charley! Don't speak so loud, you'll wake the baby."

"Oh, bother the baby! He's always going to sleep or waking up, or doing something to make life miserable for other folks."

"Why, Charles Grant! Aren't you ashamed to say that of your own blessed little son?"

And Kate's eyes began to fill, while her cheeks reddened.

Charley hastened to undo his mischief by saying, tenderly:

"Now, there! You know I was only joking, dear. He's the finest baby that ever lived, no doubt. Isn't supper ready? I'm as hungry as a hunter."

"Yes, it is waiting. I'll ring it up at once. What was it you wanted to tell me, Charley?"

"There! Bless my soul, if I hadn't forgotten. Who do you think is here?"

"I couldn't guess, so I won't try. Tell me?"

"Cousin Jessie Kingsbury. She is over at Brother John's now. Came to-day."

"Did she?"

There was no very intense interest in Kate's tone, for she was not over glad to hear of the young lady's arrival. Guests were troublesome, but she felt obliged to say, as Charley waited:

"Will we have to invite her here?"

"Why, of course, Kate. We'll do our part of the entertaining with Stella and John. We must call to-morrow and set a time for her to come to us. She will stay a month or two. Jess is so lively, we can't be dull while she is here."

Kate was just conscious of a queer twinge at Charley's words, but she led the way to the table, and poured the tea with her usual pleasant manner.

"There! I forgot something else, too," cried Charley, suddenly clapping his hand on his pocket. "I've got a treat for us to-night."

"What is it?" asked Kate.

Charley took two small squares of pasteboard from his pocket and held them up to her.

"What are they?" said she. "Theater tickets?"

"Yes. 'Faust,' by a splendid company. I knew you always wanted to hear 'Faust,' so I got 'em on purpose for you."

Charley looked pleased, but Kate's fair face clouded, as she answered:

"Well, I'm sorry you spent the money. I can't go."

"Can't go! Why in the world can't you, then? You are so fond of good opera. I thought this would be a real treat."

"So it would, Charley, if I could leave the baby."

"But I thought you had a good girl?"

"Well, I have; a perfect treasure."

"Well, don't you think she might manage to rock the baby for two hours on one occasion?" asked Charley, seriously.

"Oh, but, Charley, he might be taken sick or something."

"Yes, the house might burn down; but I don't think it will," returned Charley, more shortly than he often spoke to Kate. "I'm very sorry you won't go," he added, as he rose from the table, his appetite quite spoiled. "It is a disappointment to me."

"Why, you can go, I'm sure, Charley. I shall not care at all."

"No; I'll stay with you, and we can have our own music. I have not heard you sing for a month."

Kate hesitated a moment, then she said:

"But, Charley, I must stay up in the nursery. I never trust Johnnie to Sarah of evenings."

Charley frowned, stood irresolute an instant, and said:

"Oh, well, then, I don't see why I shouldn't get some pleasure, if I can. I'll just drop over to John's and see if they are going. As I have two tickets, if Jess cares to go we might all make a party of it."

"Yes, certainly; go, Charley. I don't want you to stay at home because I have to."

"You know I had rather be with you, my dear. But it's dull work sitting downstairs alone all the evening."

Then Charley kissed her, put on his overcoat and went away. But after he was gone Kate began to be conscious of a lonely, uneasy feeling, and to wish she had gone, too. Of course, Charley was as loyal and true-hearted as a man could be. But, to think of him sitting beside that dashing, black-eyed Jess all the evening, and showing her all the little attentions which he knew so well how to give a woman; it worried her, somehow, and she could not help it. She was not jealous. Oh, no! She had told him to go, and really hoped he would enjoy it. But—but—she did wish she had left Johnnie to Sarah for one evening, and made one of that opera party with the rest.

As for Charley, as he walked rapidly over to his brother's, he wondered if he wasn't a precious rascal for wishing that blessed baby had never come into his house. To be sure, it was a bright little thing, sweet and cute, and he would have loved it dearly and been very proud of it (as he was, after all, if he had only known it), but since it arrived Kate had been no companion at all for him. She was everlastingly up in that nursery, and she neglected her dress and her hair, and never read or sang to him or went out with him, and he was feeling the change sadly.

"Of course it is right to be a devoted mother," he said to himself; "but I do wish the mother had not so entirely displaced the wife. It's hard on a fellow, and I don't wonder men get tired of their wives, if they all do the same way."

Just then Charley ran against a passer-by, and as he glanced up to apologize saw his brother.

"Ah, John!" was his greeting. "I'm just on my way to your house."

"Well, I'm on my way to yours," replied John laughingly. "We want you and Kate to go with us to hear 'Faust' to-night."

"No use to go on," returned Charley. "I have been trying to induce Kate to go, but she won't."

"She won't! Why not?"

"She can't leave that precious youngster. I got her a ticket, but it was no go. So I was coming over to say if you want to hear the opera, my tickets are at your service."

"Not unless you go with us, Charley. Of course you will, though. And Jess can use one of your tickets."

"Why, I hardly know about going myself, John. I don't like to leave Kate at home alone, you know."

"Nonsense! It is her own fault. Come, I won't hear a word more. Forward, march! It's time to be off."

Charley submitted, feeling a little reproached, for, though he had set out with the intention of going to the play, when he took a second thought, he did not care to go without Kate. But Miss Jessie was very willing to be escorted by her handsome cousin.

And Charley did not see the laughing light in her eyes as she whispered to Stella:

"Mrs. Kate had better be careful of her property while I am here. I might take him away from her."

"For shame, Jess!" answered Stella; but in her heart she did wish Kate would give Charley a little more of her time.

"She is making a mistake," was her thought. "But people never get any thanks for interfering, so I won't do it. If she makes her bed she will have to lie in it."

There was plainly nothing to be done or said. And if in the flashes of Jess's dark eyes and brilliant wit, Charley almost forgot Kate sitting at home with the baby, there was no one to blame, unless it was Kate herself, for leaving her rightful place to be filled by another woman.

Kate had gone to bed before he got home, and he would not disturb her. But at breakfast next morning he told her what a grand time they had enjoyed.

"Ye-es? I am very glad, Charley," said Kate, rather faintly.

"Oh, yes. We only missed you, dear. But Jess is so lively one couldn't help having a gay time with her. By the way, Kate, she says, as you are so busy with the baby, she will not stand on ceremony and wait for you to call on her. She is coming over with Stella to-day. We must have her stay here, you know. If you can't spare time to entertain her, why, I can."

A sudden feeling, which she could not explain, fired Kate's heart, and made her say with some spirit:

"I shall do my part, of course, Charley."

"That's a good girl!" he returned, in tones of real pleasure. "I knew you would if—if that wretched——"

"Charles Grant!"

"Oh, excuse me—that precious baby—did not absorb all your time. Then you'll invite her to stay when they call?"

"Yes."

"You're a darling! Wish I could be here, too. But you can make them stay to dinner. Good-bye!"

A kiss, and he was off.

"Oh, yes! She'll stay fast enough!" sighed Kate, as she went upstairs. "But what I wish is that people would just stay at home as I do. However, as Miss Jess has no husband and baby to keep her at home, it is to be expected that she will go anywhere where she can find amusement, not to say anything of a nice little flirtation."

And then Mrs. Kate nodded her head, and her eyes had an unusual sparkle in them, as if she had suddenly come to some resolution which she was determined to carry out.

Jess Kingsbury was the very princess of pretty flirts, as Kate well knew, and Charley had once had a fancy for her. Who knew what she might take it into her head to do now, especially if she had the chance which Kate seemed bent on giving her to work her siren spells?

"Charley is as good as gold," said Kate; "but men are men, and women are women sometimes! Sometimes they are little fools. Perhaps I will be one, perhaps I won't, Miss Jess."

Kate flew around in her nursery that morning with a will; and before her callers could possibly be expected she had taken off her untidy wrapper, curled her hair, and made herself as pretty as she could. If she took a bit of a cry while she held the curling-iron it might have been because that small instrument of torture was too hot.

They came, and it seemed to Kate that Jess looked slightly surprised at her appearance.

"Why, they told me you had grown quite domestic, dear—given up society and all that," the young lady cried, settling her silken plumage in Kate's cosiest chair. "But I declare, you look as fresh and blooming as ever! I am quite vexed with Charley."

"I hope you enjoyed the opera last night?" observed Kate rather coolly, not replying to her words.

"Oh, yes, indeed! It seemed like old times to be with Charley again. Oh, by the way, did he tell you he was going to take me out riding this afternoon?" she rattled on. "I told him he ought to take you, but he said you wouldn't go."

"Not to-day. Some other time, with pleasure," answered Kate. But her usual "I couldn't leave the baby" was not spoken, and Stella stared a little, and then smiled and nodded her head, as if she had suddenly chanced upon a bright idea.

Kate gave the invitation Charley had suggested, but the visitors declined to remain to dinner that day. Miss Jessie promised to come in a few days and spend a week or two with them; and, as they were taking their leave, she said archly to Kate:

"Perhaps you will wish I had not come at all. What if I coax Charley away from you?"

Stella was absolutely frightened for a minute. But Kate only said, very calmly, and with a smile as bright as Jessie's:

"You may, if you can."

"Kate, you're a trump," whispered Stella, when she bent to kiss her sister-in-law good-bye. And Kate gave her hand a little squeeze, but said not a word.

She ran back to her nursery as soon as her callers had gone, and took little Johnnie on her lap with a thoughtful face.

"No, she shall not have my husband's heart," she murmured. "I have been at fault—I can see that now. If Charley were not just as good and true as he is—well—I'm thankful I have had my eyes opened in time. Thanks to you, too, Miss Jess! And now, my darling baby, you must be very, very good indeed, for you will have to divide your empire with papa after this. And I'll have a dressmaker in the house before to-morrow night."

At noon instead of Charley came the office-boy, bringing a little note to say that she need not wait, for he would not come to dinner. Had an engagement for the afternoon, but would come home early to supper.

"An engagement? Yes, to ride with his cousin," said Kate to herself, with a smile. "All right, Mr. Charley; the next time I rather think I will be of the party."

She was very busy that afternoon. But when Charley came up at tea-time it was the old Kate who met him in the hall with fluffy hair and faultless dress, as he had not seen her for months.

"Why, Kit!" he cried, his handsome face all aglow. "Has anyone come? Are you going out?"

"Yes, I thought if you cared to go we would run round to Stella's awhile this evening," she answered, putting her hand, on which her diamond ring again shone, on his broad shoulder.

"But the baby?" asked Charley, doubtingly.

"Sarah can do very well with the baby," said Kate, though her cheeks reddened under his glance.

"Sarah? Why Katie, what does it all mean? Is it possible——"

"Yes, it is quite possible that I am not going to neglect you any more, Charley, my dear," she interrupted, blushing redder.

"Hallelujah!"—and Charley caught her to him in a swift embrace. "Kate, I'm the happiest fellow in town just this minute!"

"Then I shall take care to keep you so," said Kate. "Come to supper, silly boy."

She kept her word—and her husband. Miss Jess found it of no avail to cast her sweetest spells around her handsome cousin, for his wife was wide awake, and learned, before it was too late to save a heart-break, that "worth winning was worth keeping"—especially when one has a home treasure to defend.

Strong Men.

"Talk about strong men," says Mr. Murphy, "I knew in Ireland wan of the strongest of them all, and I'll tell ye about him. He was a blacksmith, an' he ran a forge in the town where I used to live. His name was Pether McCoy. One day there was a sojer rode down to the forge from the barracks, and he was a powerful lad himself—was the sojer—an' he was always banterin' McCoy about lifting heavy loads. 'Well,' sez he, 'Pether, would ye give me a coal to light me pipe?' sez he to the blacksmith. 'I will,' sez McCoy, an' with that McCoy takes a live coal from the forge—oh! divil a lie in it—an' puttin' the coal on the anvil he takes the anvil by the horn of it an' with wan hand he lifted it up an' handed it over to the sojer. The red-coat tuck the anvil, raised it up an' lit his pipe with the coal, an' thin handed it back as if it was a faggot. 'Thank ye kindly,' sez the sojer. 'Indeed an' ye're welcome,' sez the blacksmith, and the sojer went away about his business. Oh! there wuz sthrong min where I kem from," concluded Murphy, and nobody disputed with him.—Bradford Era.

The oldest reigning dynasty is that of Japan.

LINCOLN AND SEWARD.

In December, 1861, President Lincoln and his Cabinet were anxiously considering the "Trent affair," the British Government having formally demanded the surrender of Mason and Slidell, over whose capture the North had been keenly exulting. The Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, was convinced that the demand was just. As he expressed it: "We are asked to do to the British nation just what we have always insisted that all nations ought to do to us."

The Cabinet meeting at which the question was considered, writes Mr. F. W. Seward, was an anxious and earnest one. Seward stated the case, and gave the substance of his views in regard to it.

Some of the other members, not having studied the subject, naturally shared the popular aversion to a compliance with the demand of Great Britain. "At least," said one, "we need not decide at once. Let us settle it that we wont surrender them to-day. We can meet again to-morrow." So the matter went over.

After the other gentlemen had retired, the President said:

"Governor Seward, you will go on, of course, preparing your answer, which, as I understand it, will state the reasons why the envoys ought to be given up. Now I have a mind to try my hand at stating the reasons why they ought not to be given up. We will prepare the points on each side."

Seward heartily assented. The mutual confidence between the two men was so great that each felt that the other would ask approval of nothing not sound.

On the next day the Cabinet came together again. Seward read his reply. There were some expressions of regret, on the part of the other members, that such a compliance with the demands of England was necessary, but the paper was adopted without a dissenting voice.

The council broke up, relieved to feel that war with England was averted, but not without misgivings as to the temper in which the people would receive the decision. The President expressed his approval.

When the others were gone, Seward alluded to the conversation of the day before. "You thought you might frame an argument for the other side?" Mr. Lincoln smiled and shook his head.

"I found I could not make an argument that would satisfy my own mind," he said; "and that proved to me that your ground was the right one."

This was characteristic of Lincoln. Presidents and kings are not apt to see flaws in their own arguments, but, fortunately for the Union, it had a President at this time who combined a logical intellect with an unselfish heart. —Youth's Companion.

VARIOUS WAYS OF TELLING IT.

THE VULGATE.

A lady slipped on a banana skin on School street yesterday afternoon and broke a leg.

THE STACCATO STYLE.

It is a job for a surgeon.

A banana skin did it.

There was a slide, a scream, and a dull thud.

The atmosphere was full of lingerie, frou frou, hair pins, and bric-a-brac.

It was laughable.

But only to a few.

A dozen men rushed gallantly to the rescue.

It was a woman who had fallen.

Horror!

A nether limb was broken.

She was in agony.

And all because of somebody's carelessness.

Saul has slain his thousands.

The banana skin has slain its ten thousands.

THE FLORID STYLE.

Tripping lightly down School street yesterday afternoon, her face all aglow with health, and her every muscle, nerve, vein, and artery in harmony with the invigorating autumnal atmosphere, a representative of the softer sex was seen suddenly to deflect from the perpendicular, and in another instant this one of God's last and best gifts to man came with crushing force to the hard, unyielding pavement. The immediate cause of the unfortunate lady's downfall was the greasy envelope of that now tropical fruit, the banana, which some thoughtless, if not malicious, individual had cast upon the public sidewalk. The victim of this carelessness, or worse, had sustained a fracture of a limb, and it will be many weary weeks ere she will again be able to walk erect and stately as heretofore.

THE FACETIOUS STYLE.

She will be careful how she treads on banana skins hereafter. She didn't know it was loaded, but it fired her. It is only a broken leg; not much comfort to her, but a good thing for the surgeon. There's money in it. People who throw away banana skins should be careful to so throw them that they will land with the slippery side down, unless they are in league with the bone-setting profession. In that case, of course, it is different.—Boston Transcript.

Spoons for the Spooney.

The latest outbreak of the souvenir spoon mania is a "love spoon." The bowl is heart-shaped and of bright gold, or, cynical suggestion of gilt. The handle is a silver arrow, its barbed point piercing the center of the heart and its shaft entwined with forget-me-nots. The spoon is intended primarily for an engagement token, but it can be inflicted in one dozen lots on a bride or used as a pledge of affection on any suitable provocation. Another new souvenir freak is the "old oaken bucket" spoon, a "souvenir of childhood." The bowl depicts the bottom of the well, with the bucket floating on the water. The chain runs up through the mouth of the well at the shoulder of the spoon and up the handle to an oak tree at the top.—N. Y. Sun.

The waters of Lake Erie are to be piped into Cincinnati, taking in other cities en route.

Pennsylvania Customs.

Among the old customs of the Pennsylvania Dutch was a peculiarly quaint one, in vogue in this city, says a Reading, Pa., correspondent, as recently as twenty-five years ago. From 10 o'clock at night until daybreak special watchmen patrolled each street every hour, announcing in a sing-song voice the time of night and the condition of the weather. The first patrol, for instance, would say in broken Berks as he marched:

"It's 10 o'clogk at neighdt, and the moon shines breighdt." Or, on the next trip, if the weather happened to change, he would drawl out: "It's 11 o'clogk at neighdt, and it's makin' sometings town like trizzle." That is to say, there was falling weather, and rain was beginning to come down in a drizzle.

In this fashion the Pennsylvania Dutch still render legitimate German idioms bodily into bad English. "I gif you reighdt," is their ordinary way of saying "I agree with you," or "I coincide in your opinion." "Tie that bag loose," is an expression often used here in lieu of "untie that bag."

Another quaint custom, presumably derived from the Fatherland, and still prevailing in many smaller towns in eastern Pennsylvania, and even westward beyond the center of the state, is the practice of sending men or boys up and down the streets with a bell to announce auction sales. The crier usually rings his bell continuously along half a block or so and then shouts:

"Oh, yes, oh, yes, auction, auction, reighdt away town at ——'s, at — o'clogk sharb; come von, come all, and brink your friends alongk!" Then the bell again. In the experience of nine-tenths of all who ever heard such announcements, all the words are clearly rendered except the important and essential ones giving the address, and these are abominably mumbled and made absolutely unintelligible. Doubtless Shakspeare had a like phenomenon in mind when he made Prince Hamlet say to the players, "I had as lief the town crier spoke my lines."

A college student was greatly amused recently on hearing the form of expression, "What fer," quite common hereabout, used in a novel connection in an adjoining county. He was making a pedestrian tour through the country with some companions, and the party had entered an ice cream garden in an out-of-way village for refreshments. Nobody was in attendance, but presently a bouncing Dutch girl came dancing forth through a doorway leaning into the garden, and after surveying the party for a moment, asked, with an awkward curtsy:

"Gentlemen, what fer plates'll you haf?"

The pedestrians were non-plussed at the question, but the joker of the party, eventually comprehending her meaning, which he afterward explained related to the nature or price of the orders for cream, responded:

"Bowls for plates."

This answer, in turn, was a puzzler to the Dutch girl, and the pedestrians had to make it clear to her that they wanted full-sized ten-cent plates, not three or five-cent ones, as it seemed she was accustomed to serving."—N. Y. Sun.

Going to Be Kin.

"Oh, Mr. Dusenbery" cried her little brother, "I am so glad you are going to be kin to me."

"Ah, Johnny, is that so," he gasped, a look of happiness flitting over his face. "How did you know? Come here and sit on my lap and tell me all you have heard."

"Sister's other fellow came here last night," began the boy after he was safely in the arms of the young man, devouring a quarter's worth of candy, "and I heard them talking 'bout you."

"What did they say?"

"He was mad," replied the terror, "'cause sis goes with you so much."

"And what was her reply to him?" continued the young man, the look of happiness spreading further across his features.

"She said," began the youth again, "that he needn't get mad 'cause you come to see her, as you was a soft snap and was saving him lots of money that would go to fixing up their house after they were married."

The look of contentment on the young man's face gave way to the pallor of despair as he gasped:

"Well, how is that going to make me kin to you?"

"Oh," went on the boy, "I'm comin' to that now. She said that when you proposed to her she would be a sister to you; and won't that make you my brother?"

As the child picked himself off the floor he beheld the form of the young man flit through the front door.—Atlanta Constitution.

Ben Butler's Grandma.

I was literally adopted by my grandmother, my grandfather having died several years before, says Benjamin F. Butler in the New England Magazine. She was a very remarkable-looking woman, who stood about five feet 11 inches in her stockings. She was then in the neighborhood of 80 years old, and walked with a stick, yet she was as erect as ever. She also taught me fully to understand her politics, which, so far as I could understand them, were that there ought not to be any kings, princes, barons, nobles, or knights. She never said anything against aristocrats, and my memory of her now is that if ever there was a high-priestess of the aristocracy she was one, and especially did she dilate upon the fact that her family, the Cilleys, was the best in the state. Can any one doubt where I learned my political status—democratic politics in government and personal aristocracy?

The Street Cable System.

Halliday, the inventor of the cable street-car system, states that the sight of six horses vainly endeavoring to draw a car up a steep hill at San Francisco first suggested to him the foundation for his invention.

He—"Are we going to have some music?" She—"No. Miss Van Howl is going to sing."—N. Y. Herald.

WIT AND HUMOR.

Crops that grow by the electric light—Wild oats.—Boston Journal.

An "intemperate home" is probably one that is always full.—Boston Transcript.

The woman who cannot keep a secret manages to hold her age all right.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Winding up makes a clock go, but it has an opposite effect upon an insolvent concern.—Lowell Courier.

Into each life some rain must fall, and you are sure to be caught out in it without an umbrella.—Atchison Globe.

"The law is my profession." "That may be, but it doesn't appear to be much of your practice."—Baltimore American.

Brines (incredulously)—"Is that man a typical New Yorker?" Jones—"Of course he is. He was born in Ireland."—Washington Star.

Teacher (in grammar class)—"Tommy, correct the sentence, 'I kissed Susan onct.'" Tommy (promptly)—"I kissed Susan twict."—Epoch.

Men judge a man's religion by his actions outside the church, and the women judge it by the brilliancy of his prayers within.—Atchison Globe.

It always spoils the effect of the sermon on a man when he intends to put a nickel on the plate and absent-mindedly puts on a quarter.—Buffalo Times.

The scamp who was treated to a coat of tar and feathers explained the matter by saying that he had been engaged in target practice.—Lowell Courier.

"Promises are like pie crust, made to be broken," says the old adage, but this saying originated before railroad station pie was invented.—Texas Siftings.

Miss Scadds (coyly)—"Do you love me for my intrinsic worth?" Mr. Hunker—"Yes, dear; I love you for your pa value."—Smith, Gray & Co.'s Monthly.

"Land Leaguer" writes to know where the first recorded eviction took place. The Eve-iction, we believe, was from the Garden of Eden.—Texas Siftings.

Jinks—"Cholly doesn't seem to have any presence of mind." Filkins—"No, but it's all his parents' fault. They didn't present him any."—N. Y. Herald.

Wife—"Do you remember, Henry, what the sermon was about this morning?" Husband—"I should say so. It was about forty minutes too long."—Boston Courier.

Mudge—"I hear that Timming's girl has induced him to give up his cigars." Yabsley—"H'mh! That's more than any of the boys could ever do."—Indianapolis Journal.

Primus—"Is the breach irreconcilable? Does the father cast off the son for marrying a typewriter?" Secundus—"Yes; it was the father's typewriter, you see."—Judge.

Mr. Benedick—"Will you be my wife?" Miss Beatrice—"Yes." Mr. Benedick—"O, Miss Beatrice, this is so sudden! Give me time to reconsider."—Harper's Bazar.

There are compensations for the want of riches. When a man is obliged to be his own valet it is his own fault if he hasn't the services of a gentleman.—Cape Cod Item.

Lieut. Starboard of the navy making a late call—"I notice the sea is going out." Miss Rocks (with a yawn)—"Yes; I thought you followed the sea, lieutenant?"—Yonkers Statesman.

Butcher—"How would a saddle of mutton suit you, ma'am?" Miss Batchem—"Very well; but let it be a side saddle, because it's for my sister and myself."—Binghamton Republican.

Ponsonby—"Is that Pompano coming this way, Arthur?" De Twiliger—"Yaas." Ponsonby—"Let's dodge down this street. I have every reason to believe that he has the first photograph of his first baby in his pocket."—Harper's Bazar.

Lady (at charity bazaar)—"Mr. Closefist, won't you buy this rose? It is only $5." Mr. Closefist—"Very sorry, madam, but it is rather too dear for me." Lady (kisses the rose)—"And now?" Mr. Closefist (with a low bow)—"Now it is priceless."—Truth.

Teacher—"Young ladies, George William Curtis is to lecture to-morrow on Washington Irving. How many of you wish me to secure tickets for you?" One of the young ladies—"Who is George William Curtis?" Teacher—"He is one of the foremost literary men of the day." Young lady—"Who are the other three?"—Life.

He Had to Swallow That—Miss Laymlow—"Really, Mr. Squirmley, I do not think that you had better take me out. You don't know what a perfect Jonah I am, and always will be." Mr. Squirmley (seizing a long-awaited chance)—"Oh, Miss Laym—Clara—let me be the whale." Miss Laymlow—"This is very sudden, Mr. Squirmley. But I have no desire for a three days' engagement."—Puck.

Ranchero—"I can t
some curious sights o
I left a woman was arr
ing her husband an children. She was t and sentenced to be mounted the scaffold
Before the black cap her head the sheriff as was any last word—
"Well?" Ranchero—
ished when I moved a

"Will you be min afford to dress me we you?" "It depends upon what you consider being well dressed. If you mean Worth dresses from Paris, I can't afford them; nor do you need them." "I don't?" "No. Your beauty needs no adornment and it will always eclipse any dress you wear, no matter how fine or how expensive it may be. No one that looks at you sees your dress. The beauty of face and perfection of figure only are noted. All finery sinks into insignificance beside them. What satin is there like your skin? What silk like your hair? What colors to compare with your lips cheeks and eyes?" "John, I am yours."—N. Y. Press.

THE NEWS.

Entered at the post office at Red Lake Falls as second-class mail matter.

Official Paper of the City.

Not far from the hayseed in the farmers' hair lingers a thought that supply and demand has more to do with prices than high protection.

If Blaine and Cleveland are nominated by their respective parties the political problem will resolve itself into a question of reciprocity vs corporosity.

The late murder of the Irish patriot Nally in an English prison far exceeds the Russian barbarities of Siberia. England's civilization is a glorious thing.

St. Paul is now after the democratic national convention. Its success would be centralization of influences not in accordance with the spirit of democratic insitutions.

It will require more than the enthusiasm of a national convention to explain to the farmers of Minnesota why the high protection of the McKinley bill does not enhance the values of farm products this year as well as last year.

When the congressman elect from the fifth district goes to Washington and hands in his card may it not be interpreted that he has adopted as a cognomen the tureen in which Messrs. Comstock and White took such a disastrous tumble?

What's the matter with McIntosh throwing out a bid for the national convention of the Peoples Party. The size of the town would doubtless be commensurate with the size of the crowd. Besides it has the distinction of having two well edited alliance papers within its borders.

We did not notice any particular effort on the part of Senator Davis to bring the national convention to Minneapois. While Gov. Merriam and other would be senators are laboring hard for the state, Senator Davis was at home sawing political wood and perhaps "button holing" some legislative wire puller.

In the list of Minnesota exhibits at the world's fair the resources of the Red River Valley will cut an important figure. Not alone of this valley but the northern part of the state will be sufficiently developed by '93 to furnish an amount of mineral and timber exhibits not at present considered available.

The cheering news comes from Washington that the pine on the White Earth and Red Lake reservations, as rapidly as the estimate is made, will be advertised and sold. The work of estimating the timber is being pushed rapidly and in two weeks the crews now on the White Earth will be at work on the Red Lake reservation.

The new electoral college amounts to 444 votes. The democrats must carry New York and Indiana along with the rock ribbed democratic states. The vote of the solid democratic states is as follows:

Alabama	11	Missouri	17
Arkansas	8	N. Carolina	11
Delaware	6	New Jersey	10
Florida	4	South Carolina	9
Georgia	13	Tennessee	12
Kentucky	13	Virginia	12
Louisiana	8	Texas	15
Maryland	8	West Virginia	6
Mississippi	9
Total			172

The votes of New York and Indiana, which amount to 51, would give the democrats 1 majority. The states of Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa may be considered good fighting ground, but all of these added to Indiana would not elect Grover Cleveland. But with New York and any two of those furnishing fighting ground Blaine would be relegated to the spruce forests of Maine. It will only be a short time until every republican and democrat will have the electoral vote pasted in his hat—here it is:

Alabama	11	Montana	3
Arkansas	8	Nebraska	8
California	9	Nevada	3
Colorado	4	New Hampshire	4
Connecticut	6	New Jersey	10
Delaware	3	New York	36
Florida	4	North Carolina	11
Georgia	13	North Dakota	3
Idaho	3	Ohio	23
Illinois	24	Oregon	4
Indiana	15	Pennsylvania	32
Iowa	13	Rhode Island	4
Kansas	10	South Carolina	9
Kentucky	13	South Dakota	4
Louisiana	8	Tennessee	12
Maine	6	Texas	15
Maryland	8	Vermont	4
Massachusetts	15	Virginia	12
Michigan	14	Washington	4
Minnesota	9	West Virginia	6
Mississippi	9	Wisconsin	12
Missouri	17	Wyoming	3
Total			444

Auction Sale.

Pierre Fontain, Lake Pleasant, township, sec. 18., will have an auction sale of his goods and chattels, on the 30th of Nov.

HIS SECOND CAMPAIGN

BY MAURICE THOMPSON

COPYRIGHTED BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION 1891

you that you shrink from me in this way?"

His grave, gentle voice was full of persuasive music. He stooped toward her, his eyes growing cloudy and soft. Suddenly he flung out his arms and clasped her close to him, kissing her hair and her forehead and murmuring unintelligible things. She wrung herself away from him, her physical elusiveness seeming quite as pronounced as that evasiveness which had always characterized her conversations with him.

"You must not!" she said, in a sort of breathless whisper. "I cannot permit it." She actually pushed him with her hand.

In an instant a flash of resentment flickered across his face and he made an impatient gesture.

"Rosalie, I did not expect this from you," said he, slowly recovering his full height.

"Oh!" she cried, her voice thin and dry, "I did not mean to offend you, I don't want you to be angry with me—you"——

"I love, love you!" he exclaimed, letting the words fall heavily from his ashy lips, as if he were beginning to anticipate a dreary failure.

She looked beseechingly at him, her hands hanging loosely intertwined before her.

"I love, love you!" he repeated.

"I wish you did not," she replied, something of the old freshness and naivete ringing through her troubled voice. "I am so sorry to see you suffering."

He stood awhile in a hesitating attitude, then with a great effort he said:

"So it has come to this! Rosalie, Rosalie, must I go away wounded to the heart and die all alone somewhere? I cannot believe you mean it; you will not kill me, Rosalie, will you?" The frenzy of despair rang through his shaking, appealing voice.

"No, no, you wrong me!" she cried; "you will not understand me. You refuse to see that I would have you be my friend—that I honor you—that I despise myself for having suspected you wrongfully—that I never can make amends for the injury I did you."

"I don't want to hear that," he said imperiously. "it displeases me. You cannot appease me in that way any more than you can satisfy your own true heart. Rosalie, you cannot spurn such love as mine. You will keep it—it is priceless."

He spread out his arms again. She fled through the doorway and stopped on the balcony in the bright, slanting moonlight. He, too, became motionless. As they stood thus confronting each other Ellis felt that all his bright hopes were wavering in the balance, and the ecstasy of his suspense brought out cold drops upon his forehead. He gathered all the passion of his nature, and his words came from his lips with thrilling power: "Rosalie, is this the end of it all? Don't you love me? Is my life at last to be a failure? Do you drive me away? Must I go? My God, and I love you so!"

"Must I go?" he repeated; "Rosalie, must I?"

"Yes—I—think you had better go," she said, her voice even and spiritless.

He staggered as if she had shot him, drew his hand across his forehead, turned and walked from her to the door. From there he looked back, wavered, then turned again and disappeared. Words cannot suggest the force of such passion as his—a tropical storm in violence, a mountain torrent in strength. He was wild, crazed, blind with despair. He tramped slowly along the hall, biting his lips, his eyes flashing. At the stairway he met Mr. Roosevelt, who, though evidently surprised to see him, held out his hand and greeted him cordially.

"Go to hell!" he muttered in response.

Mr. Roosevelt did not catch the words; he looked after Ellis in blank amazement as the latter mechanically descended the stair without having touched his hand.

Rosalie was crying when Mr. Roosevelt entered the parlor, and the old man guessed what was the matter. When he put his hand on her head she sobbed:

"Oh, uncle, take me home, please; I am very, very wretched."

"Don't cry, my dear," he gently said, still keeping his hand upon her head; "I have come to say get ready. Our train is due in a half hour."

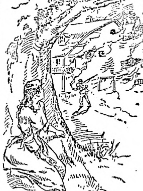
He could not think of any soothing phrase. He regarded her as a mere child, knowing at the same time that she was a woman and suffering now a trouble which besets the path of all beautiful women.

He procured her an apartment in a palace car, but she could not sleep. She reached Roosevelt Place pale, hollow eyed and nervous.

CHAPTER XXIII.

REALITY AND ROMANCE.

When Adelaide Chenier discovered that Edgar Julian was the man grown from the boy who had stabbed her and burned down the dear old Chenier homestead, the blow was a hard one. That Rosalie loved this man she could not doubt, and her own experience told her how disastrous disappointment might be; and yet how could she suffer this vandal, this murderous Hessian, this house burner to marry her sister? She had never known how to call a northern soldier by any milder name than robber. The scar on her arm where the fluted bayonet had passed through would burn like fire whenever she thought of that memorable, terrible day in May, [illegible], when weak and bleeding she sat under a tree hard by and saw that intrepid boy fiend apply the torch to the grand old home. He had already stabbed her and driven her mother, half frantic with terror, into the wood. Who could ever forget his face, his air, his energetic, forceful movements? His features were enthusiastically bright, he seemed to glory in destruction. To Adelaide's morbid imagination he seemed, as she looked back through the years, the type of all that was withering and blasting. She smelled again the bitter smoke from the mountain valleys where happy villages and embowered country seats were melting to ashes.



He seemed to glory in destruction.

Add to this, personal physical injury, disfigurement, the horrible insult to a sensitive nature of having home invaded and of seeing the old beloved rooftree in flames, and then the incomparable desolation to a household where a troop of handsome brothers and sons are swept away and a stalwart father and husband is rendered a miserable, hopeless cripple for life, without decent clothes with which to cover his poor wreck of a body. This is drawing the picture.

Adelaide kept silent and brooded over her discovery and its possible results. Her love for Rosalie was the flower of sisterly affection, intensified in its colors and perfume since the death of their mother. It was the thought of Rosalie that restrained her deep, burning resentment of this intimate nearness to Edgar Julian. Perhaps this resentment was intensified by Adelaide's knowledge of the young man's sterling character and her consciousness of a deep seated regard for him in her own breast. He seemed a proud, strong, energetic, manly man, with lofty aims and a keen contempt for trickery and insincerity—a man to be respected, even loved, without danger. His northern characteristerics, his vim, his moral intrepidity, his radical patriotism had a strong influence over this ultrasouthern girl, and she secretly dreaded to attempt to break it. She enjoyed his direct way of putting things, his hatred of shams, his assaults upon hereditary aristocracy; she even took a strange delight in the torture of his war reminiscences.

One day he said to her:

"It is a shame the way we had to destroy the lovely south in order to perpetuate the Union. Nothing short of the knowledge that the government is forever safe could console my conscience for the part I bore in that terrible but glorious work."

The lightness of his tone and the ease with which he escaped controversy made it impossible for Adelaide to find fault with him. Then he fell into generous praise of the south—its hospitality, its climate, its beautiful embowered cities. He made her forget the war and all its consequences. With him all this talk was idle pastime while he was impatiently waiting for Rosalie to return. He spent many hours with Colonel Chenier, mostly discussing the Provencal inheritance and the legal prospect of recovering it. Once when Colonel Chenier suggested the propriety of his going with them to France as their legal adviser Julian foolishly came near answering that if he could go as Rosalie's husband he would close with the proposition at once. What he did do was to frame an evasive response. He preferred to consult Rosalie in the matter.

Many times Adelaide was on the point of disclosing her secret to her father and to her Aunt Marguerite, but as often she recoiled from the task, uncertain as to what her duty was. The load grew heavier and heavier; the longer she carried it the more urgent became the necessity for throwing it off.

When Rosalie returned from Jacksonville she at once informed Adelaide of what had happened between her and Ellis.

"I am very sorry for him," she said; "he seemed so hurt, so desperate."

"Well, I am glad it is all over and you have sent him away," said Adelaide, quite earnestly. "He is a bad man, and his attentions to you have troubled papa and me a great deal."

Rosalie sighed, and for a moment covered her eyes with her hand. His voice was echoing in her ears; no other voice ever was so full of tenderness, so hauntingly persuasive, so pathetic, so despairing.

His face and form were before her in all the fascination of their evil beauty. To give him up was like parting with some forbidden thing whose chief charm lay in its subtle power to hurt. From her childhood or early girlhood he had been her knight. She had learned to watch for his coming and going in the valley, the clacking of his horse's feet and the clang of his spurs and pistols fulfilling her romantic dreams. The dusk of mystery had always hung about him.

"I shall never see him again," Rosalie said at last, lifting her face and looking at her sister with tearful eyes; "but I fear I never can feel sure that it was right for me to—to—for me to make him suffer so much."

"I think you have suffered more than he," responded Adelaide, "and he doesn't deserve your gracious solicitude. He will forget you entirely in a week."

"I wish he would—I should be happy if I could believe that," said Rosalie earnestly.

"Well, we must not pursue this hateful subject further," Adelaide said, rising and taking her sister's hand. "You haven't been treating Mr. Julian politely. He is anxious to see you; he has, I believe, come all the way from Chicago for no other purpose, and has been lingering here for a week impatiently waiting for your return. It is not right to avoid him in this way."

Here was a sacrifice of feeling on Adelaide's part worthy of a martyr—a suffering for another profoundly Christian in its purity of motive.

"I know it is wrong," said Rosalie, "but I have suffered so greatly that I have been unfit to see any one; and—and—oh, Adelaide, I dread to see him!"

"This will never do," persisted Adelaide; "you shall not shirk the responsibility. I have exhausted all my stock of expedients for entertaining him. He roams around over the house as if looking for you. Come, you must go down. I promised him I would fetch you."

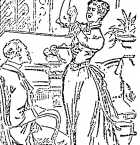
"Can't I have till morning? I am not fairly myself now. Tell him I am not quite well; that tomorrow I shall feel strong, I hope. You know what to say, —you will, won't you?" Rosalie's voice trembled and her eyes filled again.

Adelaide could not resist this appeal, so she went down alone and told Julian that Rosalie was indisposed and unable to see him; would be quite well by morning, she thought.

It was a bitter disappointment, but he had to bear it as best he could. No hours were ever heavier or slower. It seemed an age since he had seen her, and now this delay, with only a wall between them, had an ominous suggestiveness. When last they parted she had gone to her room leaving his passionate question unanswered. It seemed to him now that she had been in that room ever since.

CHAPTER XXIV.

A GLOOMY LOVER.



"How dare you come into my presence!"

When at last Julian saw Rosalie it was in some vague way a disappointment to him. She had changed, and yet the change was scarcely definable. Her mourning habit, a restraint and self consciousness in her bearing, and a shy, lurking, half suppressed look of dread in her face, affected him strangely. If possible, she was more beautiful than ever, but she seemed removed to a great distance from him, and suddenly the fear that he had lost her fell heavily upon him. Where were the smiles and the sweet words of welcome he had come so far to find? After all, it looked as if he been cheating himself with a rosy dream as baseless as ever a dream could be. His first conversation with Rosalie was tame enough. He framed awkward excuses for having come back so soon and with so little to encourage his visit, and slyly upbraided her for the paradoxical phrasing of her letter, but he could not get to his desire.

She was gentle and sweet as ever in voice and manner, the reserve and wariness adding to the charm of her mysteriously clouded eyes.

"I feared that you would be off to Provence before I could get here," he said, looking curiously at her, a hesitating smile on his genial, generous face. "I never did see cars lag so, and then when I at last got here and found you gone away I felt like a masterly failure."

"I did not know you were coming," Rosalie answered; "and I did not know you were here until I returned."

"Well, if you can forgive my unseemly haste to get back we shall be good friends," he lightly exclaimed, stumbling after some way to reach his old ease with her. "I feel guilty of accepting my own invitation to make this visit."

"Why, I am sure my letter was a model of"——

"Yes, I know," he interposed, laughing a little; "you urged me most eloquently, indeed, but I fear you did not mean all you wrote."

His voice had a ring of cruelty in it, as if a pain lay at its root. He was aware that she was setting herself to resist any attempt on his part to assume the old intimate relation.

"Yes, I meant all I wrote," she said; and, although she smiled, there was an unmistakable chilliness in her tone. "I really thought you ought not to come."

"Why?" he asked, putting up his hand to stroke his mustache.

"I hardly know," she replied a little nervously. "I thought you might regret it. You would be sure to be dis-

"Why should I be disappointed?" he exclaimed; "and if I am to be, the sooner I know it the better."

"You are disappointed, you know it now," she quickly said, looking up into his face; "you must not try to deceive yourself."

"That would be impossible. It is you who persist in blinding yourself. Suppose we quarrel," he went on, lightly chafing; "it would break up this ice between us. Coldness is not natural in this climate, is it?"

He wondered at his own artificiality as much as at her merciless directness.

"There is no ice," she gravely answered. "You imagine it, as you imagine—a good many other things."

"Do I?" he exclaimed. "Ah, you know too well I am not here mistaking myself. You know"——

"Come, I shall not listen. Let us talk as we used to—of what you have seen, of what you have read. In your letter you said there was something about Chateau Chenier you had forgotten to tell me."

And so she drew him away from himself.

When their talk was over and she had left him he sat for a long while in a state of doubt. It was hard for him to believe that she would thus turn him adrift, and yet he could discover no good reason why she should love him. He somehow felt as if he had allowed the golden time to go by, and that now she had slipped away beyond his reach.

Again and again he rose, shook himself and resolved to go to Rosalie with his love and his eloquence and win by the sheer torrent of his passion; but his resolution lapsed feebly and he returned to his moody silence.

"After all, I cannot endure this rich, intoxicating climate," he one day said to Adelaide; "I am too coarse and crude for its refinements of heat and bloom and fragrance. I must go back in time to see the yellow blossoms on the prairies."

"I am homesick too," she replied; "a breath of mountain air would be sweeter than all the sea breezes the Atlantic can afford. The dogwood trees are in bloom all over the foothills now, and I recall the odor of the sassafras buds."

"Were you in the mountains during the war?" he idly inquired.

"Not exactly in the mountains. Our home stood in the Oothcaloga valley, but within full view of the Pine Log and John's mountain ranges."

"Ah, I recollect that valley—a lovely stretch of undulating, rich red lands with a strong brook or rivulet meandering through it. We had some desperate skirmishing in that region." He did not note her sudden pallor. "I shall never [illegible]," he went on, "a great rambling [illegible] whose walls were covered with trumpet vines and Virginia creeper, a picturesque old home, set high on a knoll among broad armed oaks and gum trees. We had to burn it. It was the only house I ever burned with my own hand. Some rebels had taken refuge in it, and they fought like fiends. Even the women of the family were armed. A girl actually blazed away at me with a pistol as I smashed in the door. She slightly wounded me on the head, and was preparing to shoot me again when I pushed her off with my bayonet. I tell you she was a vixen!"

"If you should see that girl do you think you could recognize her?" said Adelaide, her voice peculiarly even and steady. He was not looking at her, and so did not observe the change that had come over her dark face. His carelessness of tone and manner had struck her like insolence, even brutality.

"Oh, no," he replied, "she was of about your size and appearance," turning toward her, "but I can't recollect much about her, save that she seemed bent on killing me."

"And you burned the house?"

"Oh, I guess we did. Under cover of the smoke we planted a battery on a hill hard by, and gave the rebels in the valley an awful pounding as they slowly withdrew."

"And you would be unable to recognize the girl?"

"I shouldn't care to meet her if she's yet alive—she might know me. If she hasn't greatly changed she'd kill me on sight."

"You ought to be killed," she exclaimed, standing up before him and gazing contemptuously down upon him; "you miserable coward!"

She slipped up the sleeve of her dress and, pointing to the jagged scar, smiled almost furiously as she added:

"How dare you come into my presence!"

It was as if he sprang out of sleep to see the incarnation of his dream before him. He actually rubbed his eyes. There she stood, just as she had on the day of that memorable adventure. He could not find a word. He rose to his feet and confronted her almost belligerently, staring and pale. For some moments his mind was dazed and inoperative; then, as he gathered himself together, he said:

"Miss Chenier, can it be possible—are you"——

"Yes, sir, I am"——

"Forgive me. I was a foolish, hotheaded boy—I would not do it now."

He stood like a statue. The situation was disclosing itself to him in all its hopelessness. He forgot that Adelaide stood before him. He reached out his heavy arms with his hands clinched together, and cried:

"Oh, Rosalie, Rosalie!"

There was something infinitely appealing in his voice that thrilled Adelaide and touched her heart. Her conscience rebuked her fiercely. A space of silence followed, and then she put her hand on his arm and said:

"I was too bitter—I was wicked just now—forgive me!" But her voice had not lost all its pinched harshness. Her face still wore that look of lofty contempt. It was as if the sound of her sister's name had turned aside the point of her anger.

"This is horrible!" exclaimed Julian, standing in an attitude of mingled surprise and despair, still ignoring Adelaide, his whole soul filled with the thought of how this strange discovery would affect Rosalie.

Adelaide saw his anguish, and with swift sympathy of a southern woman

Green Bay,
Winona
& St. Paul

Railroad. Best and most Direct Line Between

LaCROSSE,
WINONA,
Neillsville,
Eau Claire,
Grand Rapids,
Stevens Point,
New London,
Appelton,
Neenah,
Menasha,
Oshkosh,
Fon du Lac,
GREEN BAY,

And all Points in
EASTERN WISCONSIN,
Iron Districts of Northern Michigan and Lake Superior Regions.

Close Connections and Quick Time,

See That Your Ticket Reads Via
GREEN BAY, WINONA & ST. PAUL
Railroad.

S. W. Champion,
Superintendent, Green Bay, Wis.
J. B. Last,
Ass't Gen. Pass. Agt., Green Bay, Wis.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Edwin T Bigelow of Polk County, Minnesota, mortgagor, to William Plankinton, mortgagee, bearing date the 21st day of January, 1884, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 21st day of January, 1884, at 2:15 o'clock p. m., in book O of mortgages, on pages 575 to 576, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. The amount claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date hereof is the sum of eight hundred twenty-two dollars besides the sum of seventy-two and 93-100 dollars for taxes necessarily paid by said mortgagee and interest, and fifty dollars, attorney's fees, stipulated for in said mortgage.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in said mortgage, viz: The south east quarter of section thirty two in township one hundred and fifty four north of range forty seven west containing one hundred and sixty acres of land more or less in Polk county and state of Minnesota, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, or his deputy, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 28th day of November, 1891, at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day.

Dated Sept. 1st, A. D. 1891.

WILLIAM PLANKINTON, Mortgagee.
E. P. PIERCE, Attorney, Crookston, Minn.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the money secured by a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Silvester Johnson and Julia Johnson, his wife, of Polk county, Minnesota, mortgagors, to Francis W. Noyes, mortgagee, bearing date the 7th day of July 1882, and, with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 8th day of July, 1882, at 11:10 o'clock a. m. in book F of mortgages on pages 362 to 365 and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. The amount claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date hereof is the sum of four hundred and ninety seven dollars ($497) besides the sum of one hundred thirteen and 11-100 dollars for taxes necessarily paid by said mortgagee and interest, and twenty five dollars, attorney's fees, stipulated for in said mortgage.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in said mortgage, viz: The east half of the southeast quarter and the east half of the north east quarter of section number thirty two in township No. one hundred and forty nine north of range forty-five west, and containing one hundred and sixty acres of land more or less, according to the government survey thereof in Polk county, and state of Minnesota, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, or his deputy, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 28th day of November, 1891, at 2 o'clock p.m., of that day.

Dated October 1st, A. D. 1891.

Francis W. Noyes, Mortgagee.
E. P. PIERCE, Attorney, Crookston, Minn.

State of Minnesota, county of Polk—ss.

In Probate Court, Special Term, Nov. [illegible], 1891.

In the matter of the estate of [illegible], deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of [illegible]

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before this court [illegible]

Ordered further, that notice thereof be given to the heirs [illegible]

Dated at Crookston the 16th day of November, A. D. 1891.

By the Court,
C. M. Benson, Judge of Probate.

First National Bank

RED LAKE FALLS, MINN.

Jas. L. Wyer, Pres.
Jos. Smith, Vice Pres't.
Thos. [illegible], Cashier.

Capital.... $50,000.
Surplus..... $5,000.

Careful Attention and Prompt returns given all Collections.

ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

The Haynes Palace Studio Car has been at the N. P. depot the past days and attracted a large number of visitors. Manager Wilcox and lady preside. They display some fine work. Manager Wilcox is a pleasant fellow, liberal and affable.

J. Laframboise, the jolly Gentilly farmer, was in town Friday and made us a pleasant call. He states that the fair at Gentilly was a roaring success, the net proceeds being $700. The farmers have money this year, as is plain to be seen. Mr. Laframboise likes to come to Red Lake Falls to trade and talk with friends, and we are always pleased to see him.

Mrs. A. Hasstick, of Fergus Falls, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Burgdorf, is visiting here, under the parental roof and with Mrs. A. Hennings, her sister.

Joseph Helm's hardware emporium on Broadway will soon have a home of its own. The construction of the fine new store is progressing rapidly and when completed will make one of the best store rooms in the city—and we will make the prediction that Joe will fill it with a stock not excelled in the Northwest. We are pleased to see the evidences of prosperity among our merchants. And we want to let our country readers understand that they can't find a better market than Red Lake Falls.

Miss Josephine La Freniere was in from Ridge Tuesday to attend the Garceau-Provost nuptials.

The NEWS now has a regular correspondent at Terrebonne, capable and obliging, who will furnish us with an interesting weekly letter.

George La Bissoniere must be some relation to Jobe. We reached this conclusion Tuesday, and any one seeing his heroic tussle with an obstinate cow, which, tied to a sleigh, and coerced into following, chose to use her hoofs as skates, or her hide as a break as the mood struck her—will acquiesce. It was a laughable sight, and the way George kept his temper under the trying circumstances was a marvel. He is related to Jobe.

Yesterday's fall of the beautiful is just what was needed to put the finishing touches to our sleighing.

Charlie Mead's Star saloon draws large crowds—it is a populer resort.

Mr. Cogswell of Smith & Cogswell, who have done a large amount of the surveying on the Red Lake reservation, soon to be opened to market, passed through the city Saturday, having finished his contract east of Red Lake, and now commences work on the reservation about fifteen miles north of this place. Mr. Cogswell is of the opinion that mosst of the ceded lands will be surveyed by the autumn of '92.

This being Thanksgivings day we look back and realize that Red Lake Falls people have much to be grateful for. Not for many years has prosperity been so marked. Our town has advanced a long stride, and the prospects could not be brighter than they are to-day. With every hope for individual gains, such as the acquisition of the Great Northern road next summer, and the erection of several manufacturing enterprises we may in addition expect to share the universal prosperity of this section that has already cast its shadow before and that will attend the opening of the reservation accentuated by good crops in our magnificent Red River Valley, and of the state in general. Prosperity has made a call this year, and will settle and remain among us; while we give thanks for what has been, let us not forget the future, and as God helps those who help themselves let us make an effect to labor both individually and unanimously for the furtherance of progress in our city. Let us make up our minds to this, and remember that a good word for the town, or for any part of the town, is far better than no word at all; while a bad word for the town or for any part of the town is worse than none. Let us especially strive to work in harmony where our common interests are at stake. We wish our readers another happy and prosperous year.

Igna Hamrey the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Hamrey, died of dyphtheria Saturda . The bereaved parents have our sympathy.

The Crookston Daily Times is born. It is a model of neatness. Crookston may be proud of it as her representative and will act wisely by offering every encouragement.

Mrs. H. B. Davis gave a pleasant Tea at her home Tuesday evening.

S. Elstad, who has a blacksmith shop near the depot, has secured the services of a blacksmith and expert horseshoer of twenty-five years experience. He will guarantee all work to give entire satisfaction.

At S. Elstad's blacksmith shop near the depot, you can get guaranteed work. First-class horse shoing by an old experienced workman.

Aug. Erbstoesser brought in a deer from Brooks this week.

R. H. Abraham was up from Lake Park this week. He returned yesterday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Theo. La Point returned to East Grand Forks Tuesday morning.

Wm Wilkins had another settoo with his gray stallion in the Gjerberg stable. The horse had floored him when O. Carlson happened to come along and went to the rescue.

The West Hotel bus is flying around taking passengers to and from the Haynes Palace Studio Car.

We are in receipt of a wedding and at home card which announces the marriage of Mr. Francis E. Duncan and Miss Elizabeth A. Ralph, at Kansas City. We extend congratulations.

W. Flack has, as usual, a fine holiday stock. He and his fair assistant, Miss Mattie Gervais, are kept busy waiting on customers.

Lauritz appeared hale and hearty after the Thankgiving festival: 'Tis well.

Madame Dufour takes exceptions to our statements in regard to her a couple of weeks ago. We don't like to lose time, and it tries our patience to parley, with her ilk. If her mother was good and honorable, we regret having labored under a delusion—this the madame claims as the fact of the matter. We readily revise our statement—it was evidently an error. As to the madame herself—she don't object on her own account, but public opinion seems to demand this attitude. We wash our hands of the subject.

Theo. La Freniere and Louis T. Moreau, nephews of O. La Freniere, arrived in town Thursday. The latter has accepted a position as tinsmith in McClatchie & Co.'s hardware store. The boys are quite taken with our town.

Don't forget a newspaper when you have a news item. If your wife whips you, let us know and we will try and set you right before the public. If friends visit you tell us,—if you are not ashamed of them. If you have a social gathering bring around some cake, pie, a cold ham not necessarily for publication but as a guarantee of good faith. You needn't bother to invite us. If a youngster arrives at your home come around, and if you are a cash subscriber we will furnish a name for him or her as the case warrants. If you have a case of "two souls with but a single thought, two hearts that beat as one" bring her around and let the local spice box man interview her. He can spot a wild cat quicker than greased lightning. We mention these little things because we want news.

Special sevices were held to-day in the Presbey terian church.

E. A. Moran, the popular wheat buyer and all round hustler still remains with us, notwithstanding the fact that one of the troublesome miscreants, who has a faculty of attending to other peoples business better than his own, reported Ed for taking an occasional drive down town behind his trotting horse—being desirous thereby of getting Ed "fired" and out of the way. The dirty trick is now coming back very forcibly upon the perpetrator. Ed is the right man in the right place. His ancestors came from Tipperary and it is well to keep off the tail of his coat.

Joe Bourdon is considered pretty thoroughly Americaized, and a devotee of the Stars and Stripes, together with all national customs—but 'tis told on Joe that this last Thanksgiving saw not a turkey carcas on the farm, while he and his family were much taken aback when they learned they were desecrating Thanksgiving day—but thrashing kind of upset thrashing and they won't let it happen again.

Mat Skala's place on Broadway stil retains its popularity, and not without reason—Mat has dexterity and tact. A full stock of wines, liquors and cigars. When in need of liquors for medicinal purposes.

Don't forget, when about to lay in a suppiy of coal, that you may be supplied at P. & J. Meehan's yards on Main st.

DR. PRICE'S
Cream Baking Powder.
Used in Millions of Homes—40 Years the Standard.

DO YOU EAT

Candies, Nuts, Fruits? Ovide Emard sells such. Fresh and cheap, fresh and cheap. The finest and the best. When you think of Candy, or nuts or fruit or fancy groceries or

TOBACCO

Or pipes, or schoool supplies, or writing inks, or photograph albums or autograph albums,

OR PENS

Go to Ovide Emard and he will give you digestible prices that will please you.

The location of the republican national convention west of the Mississippi is an acknowledgement that several of the Western states which heretofore have been solidly republican are now classed as doubtful. This may in one sense redound to the purification of elections. Money, which has heretofore been so freely used in the corruption of voters is not sufficiently plentiful to be distributin all the doubtful states. The result will then naturally be the offspring of honest argument. If it were possible to eliminate this evil from elections every citizen of this republic should rejoice, that the evil, most dangeious to our institutions, had been driven out and the equality of public thought be thanked for bringing about such good results. Purity in elections will produce purity in legislation; just legislation will eliminate the only factor productive of new parties. This would do away with organizations whose fanciful legislation is certain to bring disaster to all classes of industry.

All kinds of COAL for sale at Hoskin's elevator.

33 W. T. SPILLANE.

WANTED.—A girl for general housework. Good wages. Small family. Must apply soon.

MRS. J. D. MARSHALL.

A POPULAR FAMILY.

JENNIE: "How is it, Kate, that you always seem to 'catch on' to the last new thing? Do what I may, you always seem to get ahead of me."

KATE: "I don't know: I certainly do not make any exertion in that direction."

JENNIE: "Well, during the last few months, for example, you have taken up painting, without any teacher; you came to the rescue when Miss Lafarge deserted her Delsarte class so suddenly, and certainly we are all improving in grace under your instruction; I heard you telling Tommy Eames last evening how his club made mistakes in playing baseball; you seem to be up on all the latest 'fads,' and know just what to do under all circumstances; you entertain beautifully; and in the last month you have improved so in health, owing, you tell me, to your physical culture exercises. Where do you get all of your information from in this little out-of-the way place?—for you never go to the city."

KATE: "Why, Jennie, you will make me vain. I have only one source of information, but it is surprising how it meets all wants. I very seldom hear of anything new but what the next few days bring me full information on the subject. Magic? No! Magazine! And a great treasure it is to us all, for it really furnishes the reading for the whole household: father has given up his magazine that he has taken for years, as he says this one gives more and better information on the subjects of the day; and mother says that it is that that makes her such a famous housekeeper. In fact, we all agree that it is the only really FAMILY magazine published, as we have sent for samples of all of them, and find that one is all for men, another all for women, and another for children only, while this one suits every one of us; so we only need to take one instead of several, and that is where the economy comes in, for it is only $2.00 a year. Perhaps you think I am too lavish in my praise; but I will let you see ours, or, better still, send 10 cents to the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th Street, New York, for a sample copy, and I shall always consider that I have done you a great favor; and may be you will be cutting us out, as you say we have the reputation of being the best informed family in town. If that be so, it is Demorest's Family Magazine that does it."

The Police Gazette

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper Barber or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends whereever it goes. Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send Five Cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX,
Franklin Square, New York City

A Standard Remedy.

Mezger's Pile Ointment has long proven a boon to suffering humanity, and is effective whenever used. Those in need of a remedy of this kind can find none better or more effective and should get a package of Metzger's Pile Ointment, that is warranted to cure. Price 50c. At Schreiter's drug store.

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Nov. 21, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on January 9th, 1892, viz, Paul Prul, hd 11856 for the s½ ne¼ and lots 1 and 2, sec 6, twp 149, r 42.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz.

Foussaint Bean , Joseph Benoit, Joseph Leroux, all of Te rebonne, Polk Co., Minn.; John Quesnell, of Mentor, Polk Co., Minn.

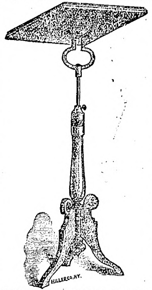
nov26d31 H. H. Dickmann, Register.

:- IMPERIAL -:
TONSORIAL HALL!
N. MORISETTE, PROP.
Everything First Class!

SHAVING,
HAIR-CUTTING,
SHAMPOOING!

Shaving 15 cents.
Haircutting 25 cents.
MainStreet. Red Lake Fall

Adjustable Extension Stand



MILLER CO. NY.

Uses: Book Stand, Music Stand, Atlas Stand, Album Stand, Bible Stand, Flower Stand, also Lamp, Lecture, Parlor, Library, Office, Dictionary and Checker Stand and Easel. Hard wood, rubbed finish, height 34 inches. Height extended, 50 inches. Weight 12 lbs.; size of top 14 x 18; shipped K. D. Price, $5. KELLER & CO., Furniture Man'f'rs, 21-31 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

I. LEMIEUX,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON,
Office in residence, First street, Red Lake Falls, Minn.

JOHN WATSON,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEGN,
Office in residence, Sixth street, Red Lake Falls Minn. 4

In Its Worst Form.

BENTON, Laf. Co., Wis., Dec., '88.

Rev. J. C. Bergen vouches for the following: James Rooney who was suffering from St. Vitus Dance in its worst form for about 1½ years was treated by several physicians without effect; two bottles of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic cured him.

Saved From the Grave.

NORTH WASHINGTON, Iowa, Mch., 1891.

The wonderful discovery of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic has evidently saved me from the grave or an insane asylum; and I and my kind old mother cannot thank you enough for the happiness you have bestowed upon us, for which we thank you many thousand times, and will remember you in our prayers.

VALENTINE BAPP.

Attention Canadians.

WINTER EXCURSIONS TO PRINCIPAL POINTS IN CANADA.

Will again be run from the Northest and all principles points in at the low rate of $40.00 for the round tirp. Tickets will be on sale in Manitoba daily from Tuesday December 1st to 30th inclusive and Northern Minnesota and North Dakota on Tuesday December 1st and 8th and daily from December 15th to 22nd inclusive and on Tuesday December 29th. Limit of tickets 90 days from date of sale. Those contemplate taking advantage of these low rate excursions should bear in mind that the Northern Pacific in connection with the Wisconsin central from the public highway from points in the Nortewest to Chicago On December 1st, 8th, 15thr22nd, anp 29th through Pullman furnised tourist sleeping cars will be run via those lenes to Chicago with out change, in which the rate for one dauble berth from starting point Chicago will be but $2.00.

Tickets, maps, time table and full information can be obtainet from any agent of the Northern Pacific R. R.

Canadian Round Trip Excurion Thicktets will be on sale from points in Minnesota and North Dakota on the following Dates: Dec. 1st, 8th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21nd and 29th at a rate of $40.00 for the round Trip to Montreal and all points west thereof in Quebec and Onterio limited to return 90 days. These tickets will also be sold to points east of Montreal in Cuebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince edward's Island at one fare for the round trip from Montreal. Tickeks will be extended at Destenation at following Rata: 15 days on payment of $5.00, 30 days 10.00, 45 days 15.00 and 60 days $20.00 excursion beyond the 60 days will be given on payment of $10.00 for each excursion of 30 days or part thereof beyond the 60 days.

Any inquiries regarding rates and connections will be cheerfuliy answered by the undersigned.

J. A. DUFFY, Agt.
CHAS. S. FEE,
G. P. T. A. St. Paul, Minn.

For Sale.

I HAVE FOR SALE THE FOLLOWING LANDS,

Improved and Unimproved

FARMS

IN POLK COUNTY, MINN.

Long Time, Small Payments, Low Rate of Interest.

	SECTION.	TOWN.	RANGE.	SETTLER
W½ o5 Nw¼	29	147	43	Wilson
Nw¼ of sw¼	23	147	43	Wilson
Se¼ of Ne¼	30	141	52	Wilson
Se¼	6	148	42	Sylvesterson
Se¼	8	146	45	Troxell
Ne¼	2	148	45	Dillon
Sw¼	2	148	44	LaDue
S½ of Nw¼	2	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Rivard
S½ of Sw¼	4	149	44	Bombardier
N½ of Nw¼	9	149	44	Bombardier
Se¼	7	146	44	Vaudrin
Nw¼	11	149	44	Tanasse
Ne¼	11	149	44	Emil Fontane
Ne¼	4	149	45	Beaudette
Sw¼	12	149	45	Herbert
E½ of Ne¼ & E½ of Se¼	23	149	45	Patnode
Sw¼	24	149	46	Chayer
Sw¼	20	149	46	Haber
Ne¼	26	149	48	Folk
Ne¼ of Nw¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
N½ of Ne¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
Nw¼ of nw¼	9	150	41	Lemieux
Ne¼	26	150	41	Gabourey
Ne¼	10	150	42	Dagneau
Se¼	13	150	42	Lajambe
Se¼	25	150	42	Sylvester
Nw¼	32	150	42	Lachapelle
Se¼	12	150	43	Deservo
W½ of Se¼	13	150	43	Marlow
N½ of Ne¼	24	150	43	Marlow
Nw¼	17	150	43	Desotelle
se¼	11	150	43	Lizee
Ne¼	23	150	43	Besson
Se¼	23	150	43	Valie
Se¼	29	150	43	Toepin
E½ of Nw¼	31	150	43	Rabillard
Lots 1 and 2	31	150	43	Rabillard
Nw¼	32	150	43	Dandenault
Ne¼	33	150	43	Gaudette
Ne¼	19	150	44	Boutellore
Se¼	31	150	44	Charron
Nw¼	33	150	44	Zaiser
Sw¼	34	150	44	Houlo
Ne¼	6	150	45	Garon
E½Sw¼	6	150	45	LaBelle
Lots 6 and 7	6	150	45	LaBelle
E½ of Sw¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
W½Se¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
Nw¼	12	150	46	Pare
Sw¼ of Tw¼	3	151	42	Doutre
S½ Se¼	4	151	42	Doutre
Se¼Sw¼	4	154	42	Doutre
Se¼ of Nw¼	4	150	42	Meilleur
Sw¼ of Ne¼	4	151	42	Meilleur
Lots 2 and 3	4	151	42	Meilleur
N½ of Se¼	18	151	42	Sotourneau
N½ of Sw¼	17	151	42	Sotourneau
Se¼	15	151	43	McIntire
Lots 1 2 and 3	17	151	43	Emard
E½ of Nw¼	17	151	43	Emard
Ne¼ of Nw¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
Nw¼ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
S½ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
W½ of W½	23	151	43	Page
Ne¼	33	151	43	Beausoleel
E½ of Nw¼	7	151	44	Blaire
Lots 1 and 2	7	151	44	Blaire
Nw¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Lots 8 9 and 12	15	151	44	Bottineau
Ne¼ Se¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Nw¼ Sw¼	23	151	44	Bottineau
S½ Ne¼	6	151	44	Muller
Lots 1 and 2	6	151	44	Muller
Se¼	4	151	45	Jones
Se¼	14	151	45	Ber y
Ne¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	32	151	45	Fleurie
Ne¼	20	150	46	McLean
Ne¼	24	151	46	Gauthier
Se¼	24	161	46	Tongas
Se¼	8	151	48	Lyle
Ne¼	25	152	42	Paussant
W½ of Ne¼ & w½ of se¼	28	152	43	Beaulieu
Nw¼	30	152	43	Turville
E½ of Nw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
Lot 1	31	152	43	Rourke
Ne¼ of Sw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
N½ of Sw	10	152	44	Loe
Sw¼ of Se¼	10	152	44	Loe
Ne¼	13	152	44	Sandon
Sw¼	15	152	44	Dahlbeck
Nw¼	25	152	44	Rourke
Sw¼	25	152	44	Comstock
Ne¼	34	152	44	Rourke
Nw¼	25	152	45	Carroll
Se¼	28	152	45	Pepin
Nw¼	32	152	45	Pilon
S½ of Ew¼	2	152	46	Kirsch
Lots 3 and 4	2	152	46	Kirsch
E½ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Ne¼ of Se¼	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼	20	152	46	Carlton
Tw¼	26	152	46	Billandeau
Sw¼	4	152	48	Feeny
Fe¼	24	152	49	Brownlee
Se¼	11	153	43	Ness
Nw¼	25	153	44	Ives
Sw¼ of Ne¼	2	152	45	Bray
Lot 2	2	153	45	Bray
W½ of Se¼	2	153	45	Bray
Nw¼ of Sw¼	10	153	45	Bray
Sw¼	4	153	45	Lucian
Nw¼	6	152	45	Lusia
Sw¼	12	153	45	Clement
E½ of E½	14	153	45	Clement
W½ of E½	14	153	45	Coe
Se¼	18	153	45	Labounta Sr.
Sw¼	18	153	45	Labounta
E½ of W½	2	153	46	Lusia
Nw¼	8	153	46	Kelly
Se¼	8	153	46	Hazeltine
Ne¼	14	153	46	Stacy
Nw¼	26	153	46	Cole
Se¼	26	153	46	Labounty
Se¼	28	154	45	Gooler
S.E of Ne	32	154	46	Bautain
Se¼	25	153	46	Lusian
Ne¼	34	154	46	Thamas
S½ Ne¼ & l 1,2	2	152	46	Fiibin
Nw¼	32	150	45	Brosseau
Ne¼	30	152	43	Miller
Ne¼	19	152	42	Borun
Ne¼	29	150	41	Stone
Sw¼	10	151	46	Benoit

A. D. Wishard,
RED LAKE FALLS,
Polk Co., Minn.

ma 21

NORTHERN PACIFIC
BETWEEN
Winnipeg, Gilby, Dayton, Grafton, Grand Forks-Crookston, Red Lake Falls.
AND ALL POINTS
EAST AND WEST.

There is nothing better than the service on
THE DINING CAR LINE

Through Pullman Sleeping Cars Daily Between Points in the
RED RIVER VALLEY
AND
ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS

PACIFIC COAST TRAINS
PASSING THROUGH
MINNESOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA
IDAHO, ORENON AND WASHINGTON,

CARRY COMPLETE EQUIPMENT OF
Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars,
First and Second Class Coaches,
Pullman Tourist and
Free Colonist Sleepers.
And Elegant Dining Cars.

THROUGH TICKETS Are sold at all coupon offices of the Northern Pacific Railroad to points North, East, South and west, in the United States and Canada.

For further information regarding rates, routes maps, etc., address

CHAS. S. FEE, G. P. & T. Agt., St. Paul, Minn.
J. A. DUFFY, Local Agt

CHICAGO & ATLANTIC

In conjunction with the Erie System operates Fast Vestibuled Trains between Chicago and the Atlantic Seaboard. you may travel in the most Elegant and complete Pullman Vestibuled Trains ever constructed and save $1.50 to Buffalo and Niagara Falls, $2.00 to New York $2.35 to Albany and Troy, and $3.00 to Boston and New England Cities.

No rival line offers the advantages of a system of throuh first and second-class day coaches and Pullman Dining cars chicago to New York.

It is the only line operating pullman cars to Boston and New England via Albany.

Entire trains are lighted by gas, heated by steam. Pullman dining cars run through in either direction.

Pullman chair and sleeping cars to Columbus, O., and Ashland, Ky., Daily.

No extra charge for fast time yeap insurpassed accommodations afforded on these luxurious trains.

Get an Estimate

Of the Cost of Your Building - From

JAMES BRADY,
CONTRACTOR AND BUILDER.

Foreman of the Construction of

North Side Roller Mill.
P.&J. Meehan's Saw Mill.
J.D. Marshall's residence.
And others

Office at residence on hamilton av.

HE Missed his Opportunity! DON'T Miss Yours, Reader. The majority neglect their opportunities, and from that cause live in poverty and die in obscurity! Harrowing despair is the lot of many, as they look back on lost, forever lost, opportunity. Life is passing! Reach out. Be up and doing. Improve your opportunity, and secure prosperity, prominence, peace. It was said by a philosopher, that "the Goddess of Fortune offers a golden opportunity to each person at some period of life; embrace the chance, and she pours out her riches; fail to do so and she departs, never to return." How shall you find the GOLDEN opportunity? Investigate every chance that appears worthy, and of fair promise; that is what all successful men do. Here is an opportunity, such as is not often within the reach of laboring people. Improved, it will give, at least, a grand start in life. The GOLDEN opportunity for many is here. Money to be made rapidly and honorably by any industrious person of either sex. All ages. You can do the work and live at home, wherever you are. Even beginners are easily earning from $5 to $10 per day. You can do as well if you will work, not too hard, but industriously; and you can increase your income as you go on. You can give spare time only, or all your time to the work. Easy to learn. Capital not required. We start you. All is comparatively new and really wonderful. We instruct and show you how, free. Failure unknown among our workers. No room to explain here. Write and learn all free, by return mail. Unwise to delay. Address at once, H. Hallett & Co., Box 880, Portland, Maine.

A Lady of a Laugh.

Here I am perched at my open basement
Enjoying the laugh of some unseen Miss
That comes rippling up from a room in the basement
Just below this.

Morn, noon and night I can hear her
Babbling away with her chatter and chaff,
And it seems as if all creation near her
Was just one laugh.

Picture her! Isn't her face just made for it!
Crinkled and curved for the laughing fit
Could she be solemn, d'ye think, if paid for it?
—Devil a bit!

I can fancy the dimples her cheeks imprinting,
And see the mouth corners upward run,
I can catch her eyes with the frolic glinting
Brimful of fun.

She must be pretty to laugh so prettily—
Such a laugh couldn't belong to a frump;
Humorous, too, to see things wittily—
Probably plump.

There now! she's off again. Peal upon peal of it
Clear as a carillon, soft as a bell,
Why it's infectious! I'm catching the feel of it!
Chuckling as well.

What was I dreaming? That musical melody
Trips up the scale, droog. lo,
So like—a voice that was hushed—ah! well-a-day,
Long, long ago.

Heigh-ho! to think of what little straws tickle us!
Just a girl's laugh—and my laughing one lies
Silent and I—well, now, this is ridiculous—
Tears in my eyes!
—R. B., in Pall Mall Gazette.

MY DEAR OLD FRIEND.

I had just come out of the post office, when I caught sight of a face that seemed familiar to me.

It was that of a man of about my own age, with bronzed features and a somewhat attenuated figure.

As I was trying to recall when and where I had seen him before our eyes met, I immediately perceived that our recognition had been mutual, for he came toward me with a frank expression of pleasure and held out his hand, saying:

"Halloa, old fellow, who'd have thought of seeing you here?" I don't know why he said this, and of course I don't attempt to defend it; but it is a style of address affected by some men who are as profoundly astonished if they meet you in a restaurant as if they had run across you in the mines of Siberia. I felt a little annoyed at his want of originality; however, I smiled pleasantly, and said, as I shook hands:

"Well, if you come to that, old fellow, who'd have thought of seeing you here?"

We stood opposite each other for a few seconds, simpering somewhat emptily at the nature of our greeting, and struggling to recall his name; and he, with his head slightly on one side, and an expression of courteously suppressed amusement on his face, as if my presence on the steps of the post office was one of those inexplicable freaks of chance for which it is hopeless to seek to assign any reasonable law.

I gave him a few seconds to digest his astonishment, and then, feeling that the silence was becoming a little embarrassing, I said inconsequently:

"Well, what have you been doing all this time?"

"Well," he replied, "I've been in Australia."

"Oh, ah!" I ejaculated, as if it had for a moment slipped my memory; "why, you went there"—and I hesitated, as though calculating within myself the exact day of his unknown departure—

"Three years ago," he put in shortly, "and quite long enough it is, too."

I ran over in my mind my acquaintances of three years ago, but could recall no trace of a recollection of my new companion; so, to gain time and to gather fresh information, I asked:

"And what sort of a time have you had?"

"Oh, much about the same as before," he answered, with a slightly puzzled air.

I candidly admit that the sensible thing for me to have done would have been to own up and admit that I had forgotten my friend's personality. Unfortunately, I am one of those painfully constituted people who shrink with nervous horror from anything in the nature of an explanation, and, in addition, I felt that I had gone too far to cry off without some appearance of insincerity. Besides, he seemed to congratulate himself so warmly upon what he insisted upon looking on as our providential meeting that my lips were sealed, and I felt confirmed in the idea that if I let things slide a little longer his name would recur to my mind.

He had slipped his arm through mine as we walked up town with an easy sense of good-fellowship, and said: "Of course, you'll dine with me this evening. Now, don't say you are engaged," he added, as I hesitated for an instant between my desire to have more of my companion and my disinclination to dine under false pretenses; "you know they'll be awfully disappointed if they hear I have met you and let you off without a long talk, and I join them to-morrow."

I felt constrained to consent against my better judgment, and added in a playfully solicitous manner:

"And how are they all?"

"Oh, they are all tip-top—all except the Colonel;" after a pause and with a slightly subdued air—"I don't think he has ever quite got over that affair."

"Ah," I responded, shaking my head sympathetically, "one doesn't get over that sort of thing in a day, you know; but the others?"

"What others?" he said, bluntly.

I hesitated, and rejoined, vaguely, "Were there not some others?"

He pondered heavily for a few seconds before replying: "Yes, I believe there were some others, but that made no difference."

I was just murmuring, "Very likely not;" when he turned to me abruptly and said: "I hope you don't think he came badly out of that business?"

His hand seemed to relax its pressure on my arm, as if he was preparing himself for some censure or act of coldness on my part.

I felt touched by this little proof of his sensitiveness to my good opinion, and pressed his fingers as I rejoined, warmly: "I never heard anyone speak otherwise than highly of his conduct in the matter."

He stopped and said, shortly:

"Why, who knows anything about it? I thought you and I had it all to ourselves."

"Yes, yes," I faltered, and added, "you know you have been away for some time, old fellow."

It did not seem to fit in very well; but he accepted it as an argument, and said:

"There is something in that; but don't let people talk about it. I know he relies upon you and me."

There was something so touching in the reliance of this unknown that a glow of sympathetic affection warmed my heart, and I resolved on the spot that this confidence should not be misplaced. Come what come might, the secret of that old man's life should never be betrayed by me. Others might make it a subject of club gossip or tea-table tittle-tattle, but no word of mine should add one drop to the cup of bitterness that had been placed to his lips. There are passages in the lives of all of us which we would wish to have buried in oblivion — the thoughtless follies of youth, the unworthy ambitions of manhood, and the selfish jealousies of old age; who is there that can stand up and say there is no episode in his life he would not have expunged, forgotten or condoned?

We had turned into a restaurant for a bit of dinner, and those thoughts passed through my mind as we ate our fish. My companion pondered sadly for a few seconds, and then shaking himself together as though to throw off an unpleasant train of thought, said:

"Now, tell me about yourself, your wife and family."

Before I had time to reflect upon what might be the result of my disclosure, I blurted out the simple truth:

"I have no wife."

He looked intensely surprised, as he said: "My dear fellow, I am very sorry. I never heard"— He paused, inquiringly, and again I blurted out:

"I never had one."

A look of extreme pain spread over his face as he heard this. He leaned across the table, and laying his hand on mine, said with infinite sympathy: "I see it all; I ought not to have asked you. Forgive me, old fellow, and forget that I have said those words."

I gave him a clammy hand and turned away lest he should detect the conscious guiltiness of my face. I had become confirmed in a suspicion that had been gradually dawning upon my mind, that I had never set eyes upon my host before that day, and that I had been carried away by some inexplicable chance resemblance to some remote acquaintance, and by his own apparent cordial recognition of myself. There was no blinking the facts, however. Everybody that he mentioned was a total stranger to me, while every incident that I mentioned, with a view to drawing him out, seemed to find his mind a blank. My sole object was to extricate myself from my false position without detection. I got absolutely and hopelessly involved in a fable and falsehood, and after having thus lightly taken away the good name of the suppositious mother of my children, a sort of despair took possession of me, and a wild desire to avoid exposure or explanation at any cost.

The dinner was good, the wine excellent, and my host geniality itself. We sat, ate and drank freely, and over our cups I blush to think of the people I married, the old friends I buried and the characters I took away. But he would have news, and what could I do? Much of my information seemed to afford him matter for astonishment, and often he ejaculated:

"You don't tell me so," as I conveyed some specially startling piece of personal news.

However, the time for departure came at last, and my mind was torn with conflicting desires to escape detection and to ascertain his identity.

"You'll come and see us," he said cordially, as we shook hands preliminary to leaving.

"Yes, certainly," I replied; "but where are you putting up now?"

"Oh, the same old quarters," he returned.

"What is the best way to get there?" I asked, as a last and altogether desperate hope.

"You can't do better than take a cab," he said, and we parted never to meet again.—Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette.

There Was Nothing in It.

John Johnson, the Milwaukee capitalist and philanthropist, says:

"What a fraud is perpetrated in the name of 'the dear old days when we were children.' You were cuffed around by your elder brother and bossed about by your younger sisters; you never caught a fish or shot a rabbit when the girls were along and you most desired to make a show of prowess; you were thrown into your seat and yanked out of it at school; you were obliged to go to church when you were young enough to enjoy roaming over the fields, and to stay at home and look after things when you had your first girl and wanted to be good; you were 'mother's oldest girl' when you wanted to be 'father's youngest boy'; you never dug a robber's cave in the woods, or stole a melon, but some weak-spirited boy told of it and got you thrashed; you never kissed Molly at parting that three or four old women were not scandalized at a scene which wasn't put on for their benefit.

"If you whipped John Jones your father whipped you, and if you let Jones get the best of it, your big brother gave you a yet worse hiding. When you fell in love with Kitty Marsh she laughed at your suit, because you were a paltry six years younger than she, and later married your younger brother. You never enjoyed yourself much after you left school, and about all the pleasure you got in school was in being held up as a frightful example to your fellow-students. It was worth something to have a record of two lickings per week where every one else was so monotonously good. There is nothing in the happy-childhood business. It is a delusion."

A temperature of 220 degrees below zero has been produced by a bath of carbon bisulphide and liquid nitrous acid.

WILLIAM L. SCOTT.

His Sale of $20,000,000 Railroad Stock for William H. Vanderbilt.

In business matters Mr. Scott was quick in his conclusions, sound in judgment, and inexhaustible in resources, says the Louisville Courier-Journal. The public remembers yet the sale by William H. Vanderbilt of $20,000,000 worth of stock in the New York Central at 120. That sale was made by William L. Scott.

Vanderbilt, harrassed and worried in the management of the property, vexed by public criticism and uncertain about his health, expressed in the presence of Scott a wish to be rid of the property.

"You are not in earnest," said Scott.

"I was never more in earnest in my life," was the reply.

"Why not sell it then?" the Pennsylvanian asked.

"Sell it?" exclaimed Vanderbilt; "where can I find a purchaser for $20,000,000 of the stock?"

"I can find such a purchaser," said Scott, "at a fair commission."

"Do it," was the response, "and I will pay you $500,000."

In a few days Scott had organized a syndicate among the bankers of New York to purchase the Vanderbilt stock at 120, and without any difficulty the transaction was concluded.

Then came Mr. Scott's demand for his commission of $500,000. Vanderbilt demurred; $500,000 was a big sum of money for such work. Mr. Scott insisted that it was a bargain made openly and seriously, and carried to a conclusion. Still Vanderbilt objected that it was too big a commission.

"What was it worth?" asked Mr. Scott.

"Oh," said Mr. Vanderbilt, "$200,000."

"Very well, then, let me have the $200,000," said the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the matter was settled. Had Mr. Scott insisted there is little doubt the $500,000 would have been forthcoming. As it was, the commission was as easily earned as any money Mr. Scott ever made.

His Name Is Moses.

Llewellyn Lloyd of the Welsh settlement owns a tame crow that cackles like a hen and crows like a rooster. His name is Moses. Early one July morning Mr. Lloyd heard a peculiar crowing in a tree near his bedroom window, and looking out he saw Moses sitting on a limb as dumb as a clam, says a Scranton dispatch to the N. Y. Sun. In a moment Moses stretched out his neck and crowed almost exactly like one of the roosters in Mr. Lloyd's flock, and ever since then he has been imitating that particular rooster, even to flying upon the fence and flapping his wings before he crows. Sometimes he struts around the barnyard and makes believe he is a real rooster. The cock that Moses had got in the notion of imitating soon became tired of being mocked by the crow, and whenever Moses started to crow on the ground near him he pitched at the black imitator and made him fly high. From the peak of the barn or the top of a tree Moses would then mock the rooster until he became hoarse, and during the rest of the day he would roost in silence in the shade.

A few weeks after Moses had learned to crow he took it into his head to cackle like a hen and after a little practice he did it to perfection. There was a black hen in the flock that Moses became very much attached to. She laid every day in some smartweeds in a corner of the barnyard, and while she was on her nest Moses lingered near and kept an eye on her. The moment Biddy stepped from her nest and started to cackle Moses cackled, too, and he kept cackling and walking by her side until she had finished her song and mingled with the general flock. Then Moses stole away and stopped his noise, going in a roundabout way to Biddy's nest, where he sucked the egg while it was warm. The shell he hid in another part of the yard. Mr. Lloyd found nineteen shells there one day and he put a stop to the crow's egg-eating habit by confining him in a cage for a month.

By that time the hen had changed her nest, but Moses soon found out where it was by tagging her around until she went to it under the fanning mill on the barn floor. Mr. Lloyd finally concluded to let the cunning black rascal have his own way and since then Moses has daily gobbled up his favorite hen's warm egg.

Wilcox Riley in the Hosiery Line.

The report going around that James Whitcomb Riley is going to write a comic opera libretto in collaboration with Sir Arthur Sullivan suggests the amusing story told by Francis Wilson's manager of the effect of Riley's humor on two matter-of-fact Britons who crossed to England in the City of Paris last May.

Riley and Canby were fellow passengers and at the ship's concert the humorist was introduced by the Chairman of the occasion as "America's Hoosier poet." His recitations made the hit of the evening, and he was kept on his feet for three-quarters of an hour amusing the audience.

The next morning at the breakfast table Mr. Canby overheard the following conversation between two Englishmen sitting opposite him:

"I say, what was the name of the little fellow with smooth face and glasses who seemed to afford so much merriment, though to tell the truth I couldn't quite comprehend what it was all about?"

"Riley, I think the gentleman who introduced him said; yet was it Riley? Yes, Riley — Wilcox Riley, he was called."

"Ah! Irish I presume. Some sort of a theatrical person, don't you think? A comedian or something of that kind?"

"No, I rather think he is in trade. Something in the hoisery line I understood the Chairman to say."

"Ah, indeed!"—N. Y. World.

"All that I am or ever hope to be I owe to my wife," said Marrowfat. "That's right," retorted Hicks. "Blame everything on your wife. It's the manly thing to do."—N. Y. Herald.

CROWS AND CRABS.

How the Sagacious Birds Catch and Devour the Palatable Shellfish.

Fishermen in Havre de Grace, at the mouth of the Susquehanna river, tell amusing stories of the way crows catch crabs and prepare them for eating, says the N. Y. Recorder. When the crows first come in the spring they visit the streams connecting bay and ponds every morning looking for crabs. They commonly arrive before crabs begin running, but the crows exhibit great patience, sometimes waiting ten or fifteen days.

The crows scan the stream from small tree-tops or mounds of sand. Others stand on the banks of the rivulet with heads cocked sidewise and an eye staring at the water. When the crabs begin running the crows dive into the water from any coign of vantage near by, clutch a crab, soar into the air, and drop their prey with great precision on the stone-covered beach which fringes the bay. By this means the crabs are reduced to pulp and the crows, with much wing flapping and discordant cawing, voraciously bolt the meat.

Capt. Tom Carroll of Chincoteague says he once saw five crows teasing a crab. One of the birds caught and carried it to a big dry sand-bar. There it was put down. The crow's cawing brought five of his tribe. They pulled it about, turned it upon its back, and fumed over it. These gymnastics were accompanied by hoarse chattering, and a gurgling sound which Carrol avers was laughter. To vary the sport they would make believe to fly away, but dropped softly to the sand forty or fifty feet off.

From that point the dusky quintet of practical jokers kept their eyes intently fixed on the crab rolling along in the direction of the water, 100 yards away. The crows, without a sound, craned their necks watching their hard-shell victim flopping laboriously through the soft, dry sand. Suddenly they broke into a wild chorus of caws and made after the crab. One picked it up and soared away to the beach, followed by his fellows. There he was dropped to death and the crows flew away to their roost.

Lost.

Stories are told of guides who have dropped sticks into streams to find which way they were flowing, and when the sticks went in a different direction from what they thought was right, disregarding their plain testimony, and avowing that the stream was running up hill, says Forest and Stream.

Other stories are told of hunters who have been found frozen to death in the depths of tangled swamps with compasses picked to pieces because they would not point the way the bewildered man thought they should, and so were plainly out of kilter.

These stories, though individually unreliable, bear witness to a general truth. The fact is that it is the easiest thing in the world under certain circumstances to become "turned around" in the woods, and no one is exempt from this failing.

Old hands know and understand this fact. It is only the tyros who do not, and who ridicule those who own up to having been lost. And when these scoffers go into the woods themselves, nine times out of ten there comes a night when they do not turn up at the camp. Then there is rejoicing among those who have borne their arrogance, for it is the turn of these to crow, and they who laugh last laugh best.

In a flat wooded country with the sun obscured and no compass to guide him, the best woodsman is apt to lose his way. Under less favorable conditions the same thing often happens from preoccupation. Interest in hunting or fishing drives away all thought of one's course till suddenly he is rudely roused to find that he is in an unknown wilderness with no notion of the way out.

How Beer Is Advertised.

A commercial drummer, one who had been on the road for more than twenty years, sees and hears more than the average man, and whose headquarters are in Chicago, told this the other evening at dinner: The big breweries of this country employ men to travel for them whose business it is to introduce their brew and cry down that of every other concern. These men are not like drummers in other professions, who go into a place and offer the goods. They are social in their temperment, and they must be men who understand how to handle people and make themselves agreeable. As an example: One of these men goes into a place that is frequented by people who sit about the tables and drink beer. If the place does not keep the brew of the agent he calls for it, and expresses his surprise that such a place does not keep the best beer made. He keeps this up until he sees the proprietor, and he tells him if he expects to get his trade he must keep So-and-So's brew. Meanwhile the agent has spent $3 or $4 at the table. That is a good deal of money for one man to spend in a beer saloon. The proprietor of the place wants to cater to such trade, and he orders the brew which the agent had spoken of so highly. This sort of thing is done in a variety of places during the day and night. The agent's expenses are paid by the concern for which he is working, of course. He has to do a good deal of treating, but he is too smart to drink very much himself. He must never loose his wits. I know two or three such men and they are paid big salaries.—Chicago Tribune.

A Persistent Mountain Lion.

A Colorado man killed a sheep, hung it up and dressed it. He was still at work when a mountain lion crept between his legs, pulled the mutton down, and, although given a good kicking, held it fast and got away with it.

Here is the prayer of the minister of the Cumbrays, two miserable islands in the mouth of the Clyde: "O Lord, bless and be gracious to the greater and the lesser Cumbrays, and in thy mercy do not forget the adjacent islands of Great Britain and Ireland."

FINDING A QUARTER.

The Colonel Was Generous with It Till He Found Who Lost It.

Col. Witherson of Austin, Tex., was not in the habit of being careless and spending money, says Texas Siftings. In fact, he was very stingy. He was never known to treat anybody. One day he was standing with some friends in front of a saloon, when a shining object on the sidewalk near his foot caught his eye. It was a small bonanza in the shape of a quarter. He didn't call out: "Hello, I have found a quarter. Did any of you gentlemen lose it?" Not much. He quietly put his foot on the coin. Then he called the attention of those around him to the peculiar color of the sky in the direction of Mount Bonnell, and while they were looking away he stooped down quickly without being observed by anybody and gathered in the quarter. Then he whispered in a joyous whisper to a confident friend:

"Don't say anything to the rest of the boys. I found a quarter and I'll set 'em up."

They went off sideways, unobserved, into a banquet hall. They drank and wiped off their mouths. Then the man who found a quarter put his hand in his pocket, and lo! it was gone. However, on the floor glittered another quarter, so he thought it was the same quarter. Then a change came o'er his spirits. It flashed over him in a second that there was a hole in his pocket, and the quarter on which he set 'em up was really his own. He also made the discovery that beside that quarter about $3 in change was missing. He then perceived how premature was his joy over the windfall.

There are some griefs too sacred to be tampered with and this is one of them. The occurrence was intended to be kept a secret, but like the $3 in change in the deceptive pocket, it leaked out. It was a total loss, there being no insurance.

She Never Hints.

"I like candid girls," remarked Fitzpercy to his friend. "Some girls are so double-faced, doncher know."

"That's true," replied young Dinwiddie. "They'll be as good as pie to you when you are with them, but will laugh at you behind your back."

"Yes, and even talk of a fellah and make fun of him to their fwiends."

"All girls are not like that, though," Dinwiddie went on. "Now there's Amy Gaswell. One thing that I like about her is that she is so outspoken. There's no beating about the bush with her. She never hints."

"I'm vewy glad to hear that," added Fitzpercy, eagerly. "She nevah hints at anything, doesn't she?"

"Never."

"I'm glad of that, doncher know, because something happened the last evening I called on her, which I thought might have been intended for a hint, but it welieves my mind to learn that she nevah does such a thing."

"What was it that happened?"

"Well, you see, it was neahly 12, and we were talking about push and enterpwise and that sort of thing, and Miss Amy wemarked: 'I do so like a man with some go to him,' and just as she said so she looked at the clock. I didn't think anything of it at the time, but it stwuck me since that possibly she intended it as a hint; but I am glad to be welieved of such doubts, doncher know."

"Did you leave at that time?"

"Oh, no; I stayed an hour or so longer, and didn't leave till she had yawned two or three times, and I thought perhaps she was sleepy. Then I had some considewation for her and went home."—Pittsburg Telegraph.

Little Curious Things.

Rattlesnakes are said to have a natural antipathy to white-ash leaves. Some naturalists assert that a rattlesnake placed in a circle of half ash leaves and half hot coals will cross the coals rather than encounter the leaves.

Astronomers say that a shot fired on the equator of Jupiter would travel with a rotary motion at a speed forty-six times greater than that of a cannon ball fired at the earth's equator.

Waves exert a force of one ton a square inch when they are twenty feet high. At Cassis, France, granite blocks of fifteen cubic meters have been moved by wave force.

A cubic foot of newly fallen snow weighs five and a half pounds and has twelve times the bulk of an equal weight of water.

A temperature of 220 degrees below zero has been produced by a bath of carbon bisulphide and liquid nitrous acid.

Darwin has said that a large per cent of all sweet-scented flowers are white; now Michelet has proved that there are no poisonous sea plants.

A wild goose killed in California had a grain of wheat in its crop which, when planted, produced a variety hitherto unknown.

Michelson has calculated the velocity light to be 186,360 miles a second.

Clear summer sunlight is said to penetrate the Mediterranean sea to a depth of 1,200 feet; winter sunlight to only 600 feet.

In the year 1635 a tulip bulb was sold in Holland for $2,200; it weighed but 200 grains.

Women Never See a Joke.

"Brown, do you know why you are like a donkey?"

"Like a donkey," echoed Brown, opening wide his eyes. "No, I don't."

"Do you give it up?"

"I do."

"Because your better half is stubborness itself."

"That's not bad. Ha! ha! I'll give that to my wife when I get home."

"Mrs. Brown," he asked, as he sat down to supper, "do you know why I am so much like a donkey?"

He waited a moment, expecting his wife to give it up. She looked at him somewhat commiseratingly as she answered:

"I suppose because you were born so."—Boston Beacon.

"No wine" is now frequently added at the bottom of invitations to dine in London, so that guests may know what to expect.

MISSING LINKS.

It is stated that 40,000 copies of Mr. Stockton's "Rudder Grange" have been sold.

The king of Siam is attended by a body guard composed exclusively of 4,000 of the prettiest young women in his realm.

Miss Florence Hartley has been appointed a court reporter at Wichita, Kan. She is the first woman to receive such an appointment.

It is a florist in Vermont who has secured the permission of President Harrison to call a new double white pink the "Mrs. Harrison pink."

A handbook of spoons is out—spoons that are being devised by various cities and points of interest—and the number thus far reported is 189.

By a recent manifesto of the pope, it is announced that all followers of the Catholic faith who are guilty of dueling shall be excommunicated.

Lord Salisbury, like Mr. Blaine, was a newspaper writer in his youth. Since he became a tory minister of state he has kept the fact from becoming notorious.

The Cornell School of Law has enrolled Mrs. Mary Kennedy Brown, a graduate of Wellesley and a young widow, as one of its students. She is the first lady who appears on the school list.

It is not so hard as is supposed to pronounce the name of the queen of the Sandwich Islands. That "u" in Liliuokalani has the value of a "w," and if one says "Lillee-woka-lanny" he will hit it about right.

Says Capt. O'Shea: "It was in the April of 1886 that I found Mr. Parnell out. He was never a man of ideas. His was not an original mind, but he was the most skillful assimilator of others' ideas I ever met."

Jefferson M. Levy says it is not true that Monticello, once Thomas Jefferson's home, is for sale. He says that no money could purchase the historic estate, which has been in the hands of the Levy family since Jefferson died.

M. Pasteur has now, by the grace of the emperor of Austria, become Baron von Pasteur, and been decorated with the Order of the Iron Crown. It is a big advertisement for him, even if it does not increase his reputation as a savant or his skill as a physician.

Walter H. Evans, a young Indiana botanist who spent the summer exploring the southwestern states in search of cacti for the agricultural department, says that he did not see a single rattlesnake or tarantula in that region, which is supposed to be their home.

Prince Christian Victor, of Schleswig-Holstein, is gaining military experience and finding pretty bits of fighting as an attache of the Black mountain expedition in India, where Gen. Ellis and his army are engaged in bringing the hill tribes into subjection.

Andrew Carnegie cherishes the doctrine that the young men of America should take their holidays away from their own country, so that the cobwebs may be entirely wiped away from their eyes. He doesn't, however, condescend to discuss the insignificant detail of the expense involved.

Judge Campbell, of Philadelphia, is not, as recently published, the only surviving ex-member of ante-bellum cabinets, Horatio King, who was first assistant postmaster general during Mr. Campbell's term, was appointed postmaster general, by President Buchanan when Gen. Joseph Holt, who is also living, was transferred to the war department.

Joseph Taper of Pittsburg got foolishly discouraged because he fancied that he was cumbering the earth for too long a span of years, and imagining that Nature was forgetting to call in his checks he gave her a gentle reminder by trying to hang himself. And yet Joseph is only a giddy youth of 107 mosquito-haunted summers and corrugated winters.

Sir Edwin Arnold, who is coming to this country to lecture, is an Englishman who is thoroughly English in his opinion of himself, and not overmodest in stating his own estimate of his powers. He has written about his first lecture here that it will be "an interesting discourse, with poetical illustrations of ancient and modern India," and says: "You need have no fear but that I can hold and please my audience."

The youthful queen of Holland, who is only 10 years old, has a little farm near the royal castle at Het Loo, where she is sole mistress. There is a prettily furnished drawing-room there for the lady of the house, and her numerous children—the dolls—and a kitchen, where the little queen learns how to make tarts. The child has her own poultry to feed, and her own garden, where everything has been planted and cultivated by her small royal hands. She trims her roses herself, and the flowers in her mother's apartments are always gathered and arranged by her.

John H. Parnell, a brother of the dead Irish leader, says he thinks the "uncrowned king" left a considerable estate, though much of it may have been consumed in the litigation forced upon him in his last years. At the time of his greatest affluence he was worth £150,000. He had an estate in County Wicklow, some stone quarries, copper mines and mills, but it is unknown whether they were mortgaged. John Parnell himself has a small fruit farm in Georgia. He is described as a rather seedy-looking man of 47, who dresses in a rough suit of brown goods and wears a faded slouch hat.

Should the new king of Wurtemburg die without male issue, his heir would be a distant relative, Duke Philip, grandson of Louis Philippe and husband, of a daughter of the Archduke Albrecht, of Austria. The children of the Duke Philip and the Archduchess Maria Theresa, have been brought up in the doctrines of the Roman Church, their religious training having been confided to the Jesuits. Wurtemburg, however, is essentially a Protestant country, only little more than one-fourth of the population being of the Catholic faith, and they look upon the matter of succession with much anxiety.

LOVE FOR A DAY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "DORA THORNE," "A DEAD HEART," "TWO KISSES," "THE FATAL LILIES," ETC.

CHAPTER III.

When the corn was cut down, and the ripe fruit gathered in from the orchards; when the "free and happy barley" lay under the scythe, Mark had gone.

When the hour of parting came, I believe Mark would have given up the appointment, with all its advantages, rather than leave me. Twenty times he kissed me with despairing passion and love, left me, and returned. He could not leave me; I could not let him go. My mother said that it was useless to prolong the agony of parting.

Mark looked at her with a white, set face.

"I cannot go," he said, hoarsely.

He had to leave Gracedieu by the last train that evening, and sail from Southampton on the morrow. He had spent the whole of the previous day with us, and he was at the cottage early on this the morning of his last day. Outside the very glory of summer lay over the land. We stood watching the golden sunshine, with the chill of our parting upon us, a chill more bitter than the chill of death. Mark had loosened my hair, and had cut off a long, shining tress.

"That shall lie next my heart, Nell, even when I am dead," he said. "Promise me that no hand but mine shall touch these golden curls of yours while I am away. You are very beautiful, Nell, though you do not seem to know anything about it; and men will admire you; but you must not listen to them. You are mine, all mine—only mine!"

I told him—truthfully—that all other men were to me like shadows.

"Promise me, Nell," he said, as he kissed my lips again and again, "that no one shall kiss you while I am away."

"Dear heart, what fear!" I cried. Then in my turn I began to exact a promise. "You will love and think of me too, Mark?"

"I shall think of no one else, Nell."

"And you will not call any one else beautiful, or——"

He interrupted me with a laugh.

"Perhaps I should be happier if I could think less of you, Nellie," he said. "My life will be one unceasing longing for you."

"My dear Mark," said my mother, "if you are to catch the 6:00 train, it is time you went."

His face grew white, and a dark shadow came into his eyes.

"Nellie, come just a little way with me," he said. "Let our last farewell be spoken where we first met."

Once more we stood by the lilac-trees; every flower was dead, but the green leaves were there still.

"I shall leave you here, my darling," said my lover, in a low voice. "I shall be four years away from you, Nellie. Promise me that when I return you will meet me here, in this same place. Here, where I met the sweetest love ever given to man—here I shall return to claim my wife. Good-bye, Nellie."

"Good-bye, Mark," I whispered.

For one brief moment he put his face on mine; he kissed my brow and my lips; for one moment, sweet and bitter as death, I lay with head upon his breast; and then he was gone. There was a blinding mist all round me, a surging as of great waters in my ears. A sharp and bitter pain seemed to pierce my heart, the trees and the river were all one, and I reeled and fell upon the grass. I could not weep; I could not cry out. No word came to relieve my dumb anguish and despair.

"Oh, child, be warned," said my mother that evening, "be warned! You must not give to any creature the love that belongs to One only."

I lived through it—through the rest of the long, bright days, through the sunny evenings, the moonlit nights. For some weeks I had no companion save despair. I wept whenever I was alone, but I dared not let my mother know how sorely I grieved.

Four years, four long, dreary years I must wait; but there was hope at the end. He would come again, my brave young lover. My mother helped me by setting me to work. I could make so many beautiful things for my future home in four years she said. I could paint; I could do a hundred things that would fill the time, and I should know that I was working for him.

One whole year passed by. Every mail brought me a letter, a glowing love-letter, and I was growing happy again. Only three years to wait now until I should see Mark under the lilacs again! Then clouds began to gather. Doctor Upton, who, although he had laughed at us as young lovers, had always been very kind to me, died suddenly. He fell down in the street, and was carried home senseless. He never spoke again. He died the same evening, to the grief and distress of every one who knew him. A chill of fear crept into my heart; I could not tell why, but his father's death seemed to take me farther from Mark. The lawyers managed everything. The Doctor's practice was sold, also his house, and furniture; and the sum of money realized was sent to Mark in far-off India. The good Doctor was buried at Gracedieu, a new practitioner came, and the world about us went on as of old; but whenever I passed the empty house a great pain seized me.

Mark felt his father's death keenly. He wrote to me more lovingly than ever. He said that I was all that he had in the world now, and that he must, if he could, love me even more.

It was in May that the Doctor died, and for one year afterward everything went on as of old. I had but two years more to wait. Time passed more quickly. Only two years! My mother had ceased to warn me. She said no more to me about caution in love.

Three years had passed. I reminded myself every hour in the day that I had but one more year to wait. Mark's letters were full of love, full of eagerness and hope. He had been prosperous beyond expectation. He had never missed writing to me, until a day came when the Indian mail brought me nothing from him—not one word, not one line. It was the first time such a thing had occurred, and my mother tried to comfort me. The next mail brought me a letter, but the one after that did not, and my confidence was gone—I no longer felt sure that by every mail I should have news from my lover. Like the sharp thrust of a sword, an idea came to me one day, that the letters were shorter and colder. I hated myself for my miserable fancy. How dared I think such treason of my lover Mark? Then in the month of October my mother died, and after that the Indian mail brought me no more news of Mark—not a single line.

My mother never knew that a great cloud had overshadowed me. She did not know that my heart was breaking because I had no news from Mark.

Let me tell it quickly. My dear mother was buried, and I was alone in the world, save for my lover so far away—alone, save for him; and, when July of the next year should come, the four years would be ended and he would return.

I thought deeply over my plans. It seemed useless now to leave the cottage; it was best for me to remain there until Mark came home again. Our old and faithful servant, Dorothy Clarke, was sufficient protection for me. I had money enough for one year, and I had my little income of twenty pounds per annum also. I had thought once of going away; but whither should I go—what could I do? And I must be here when Mark returned.

When Christmas came, I was still waiting, in dry-eyed, mute anguish, for the letter that I was never to receive. I wondered often that the golden hair of which my lover had been so proud had not turned gray. I was helpless in my great grief. I wrote to Mark. I told him that my mother was dead, and that I was alone in the cottage, waiting for him—that neither his silence nor his absence shook my faith. He might be ill; an accident might have happened to him—anything, everything would I believe, except that he had forgotten me. I never thought of that; it never occurred to me as a solution of the mystery of his silence. There was no one to whom I could appeal for news of Mark. His father was dead; the Rector of Gracedieu had not heard from him for many months; the lawyers who had forwarded the money realized by the sale of his father's property had not received any communication from him since he had sent the formal receipt for it. There was no one in Gracedieu who knew his present address. Mark had not seen much of Gracedieu. When the Doctor had bought his practice there, Mark was at school. He had made few acquaintances, and none of these had kept up a correspondence with him since he had left for India.

There was nothing to be done but to wait in patience as best I could. Every morning hope revived in my heart; every evening it died. Every morning I rose, praying wildly to Heaven that I might hear from Mark that day; every night I lay down to sleep with bitter tears because a letter had not come. Every morning, week after week, month after month, I went to the gate to meet the postman. He never had anything for me. He knew I wanted an Indian letter, and he would look at me with a piteous shake of the head, and pass on. But one morning, when the snow lay upon the ground and the bells were chiming, the postman came. He bade me no cheery "good-morning" as he placed a letter in my hands and hastened away. He seemed to know what had befallen me. Inside the envelope was my last letter to India, returned to me through the Dead-Letter Office, and on it was written in an official hand, "Gone away—left no address."

CHAPTER IV.

The words were ever before me in letters of fire—"Gone away—left no address!" Both by night and by day they beat upon my brain. Christmas passed; bright, lovely spring was coming. What was I to do?

Mark had gone away and left no address. No letter, no prayer from me could reach him. In all the wide world I did not know where to look for him, where to send to him. He seemed as lost to me as though he had gone into another sphere.

What could I do? In the July of this year he was to come home and marry me; I was waiting for him. I had no other future, no other home, nothing else to which I could look forward. Where was he—my handsome, brave young lover, who had loved so dearly and worshipped me so entirely? Was he living or dead? Hope, health, strength, everything failed me except my faith; that was undimmed and untouched. If he was lying ill, unable to write, I knew he was thinking of me, longing for me; if he had been suddenly sent to some distant place on business, from which perhaps he was unable to send news to me, he would be miserable, as I was. Even if he was lying dead in the depths of the sea, his last thought had been mine. Every hour of the day and night this one question met me—What must I do? There were times when the impulse was strong upon me to go out into the wide world and search for him. Then faith and patience came to my aid. They said, "Wait here for him. He will come with the lilies and roses; wait in hope and patience."

The spring came and went. I avoided looking at the lilacs. Their perfume filled the air—I could not help breathing it—but I avoided looking at them. My heart was sick, half dead with pain, and the sight of them would almost have killed me. Then June came with its roses. My little store of money was all gone, and I knew that I could not remain many weeks longer at the cottage. Mark would come in July, if he were living; and, if he did not come, I should know that he was dead. So, in desolation and anguish of heart, I counted the days. I dreaded at times to look in the mirror; I was so afraid my hair had grown gray. The color had left my face, the light had died from my eyes; but July was coming.

Ah, me, can I ever forget the slow torture of that month? Every day I went to the group of trees where we had parted, to wait as I had promised. One by one the sultry days went by, and then I felt sure that he was dead. He would have come to me had he been living. My handsome, brave, true young lover was dead.

I could only pray to Heaven with weeping eyes that I might die too. During those long months of suspense I had lived through the suffering of a lifetime.

When the month of August came, I saw that part of my life was ended. I put on mourning for my lover. The sun of my life had set; I would mourn for Mark as wives sorrow for a beloved husband. I never thought of another lover, or of future comfort, or hope, or happiness. Wherever he lay dead, there my heart was buried with him. The realities of life came upon me, and I believe, saved me from going mad. I sold all my furniture and books, every thing I possessed; I gave liberally to Dorothy, and bade farewell to my old home. I was twenty-one when I went to London to seek my fortune. The first post I obtained was that of teacher of English in a boarding-school in France. I did not like it, and through the influence of one of the elder pupils I obtained an engagement in England—not as governess this time, but as companion to Lady Yorke, who lived at a grand old place called Westwood, in Kent. I was glad enough to return to England. Before going to Westwood, I went to Gracedieu, with perhaps a forlorn hope that I might hear some news of Mark—of how he had died.

I went the old round—from the Rector to the lawyer, and from him to Mark's acquaintances. No one had heard one word. He was dead—Mark, my darling!—dead, and I was alone. There was but one thing before me—to live my life and pray that I might join him in Heaven.

The phase of feeling that came to me was a strange one. There were times when it seemed to me as if I hardly lived in this world. I could see very often that people looked at me as though they did not quite understand me. How could they, when my heart and my senses were always with Mark in another world?

It was whispered from one to another that my lover was dead; and then to those who cared most for me there came a gleam of pity for one who had no earthly ties.

It was in the month of July that I went to Westwood. Lady Yorke was very candid with me. She told me that the one complaint she suffered from was ennui. She was lonely; she wanted amusement; she needed a cheerful companion. She should require me to spend the greater part of my time with her. I must read to her, answer her letters, send out her invitations. She would expect me to spend my evenings in the drawing-room, to sing when needed, take a hand at whist. She wrote most unreservedly to me. The life would be tedious, she owned; but then I should have a large salary and a comfortable home. It mattered little to me how I passed the remaining years of my life; as well might it be with Lady Yorke as with any one else. If the lady were ill, were really an invalid, I could perhaps help to cheer her.

On the second of July—I shall never forget the date—I found myself at the pretty station of Woodheaton, the nearest town to Westwood. A luxurious carriage awaited me, and I enjoyed the drive. Every one knows how the sea washes the fair Kentish coast. Even amidst the odor of the flowers, the scent of the rich clover meadows, and the fragrance of the rose-covered hedges, I distinguished the sea-breeze. The park was a beautiful undulating expanse, full of fine old trees of every variety of form, and carpeted with wild flowers. The house was a grand old mansion that had been built in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The sunlight fell on the great gables and the large windows. My courage almost failed me when I saw what a magnificent home mine was to be. I felt some little curiosity as to what Lady Yorke was like. I pictured her an invalid—pale, delicate, quiet. Before long I was in her presence, and I perceived my mistake. I saw at once that her chief malady was due to having had all she wanted all her life. She had never known trouble or care. She was a slender woman, with dark blue eyes and dark hair. An expression of languid discontent marred the beauty of her face. There was a line across her white brow that betokened temper, and something in the expression of her lips told the same story. The room was beautifully decorated and furnished. The lady herself was lying on a couch, doing nothing, neither reading nor working. She looked up with a glance of relief as I entered.

"Miss Chester," she exclaimed, with something of surprise, "I am glad to see you! I was just feeling as though I did not know what to do with myself. Pray sit down."

Lady Yorke did not look like a person who was easily amused. I took a seat as requested.

"I was greatly pleased with your references, Miss Chester. Madame de Deffand tells me that you are devote. Is it true?" She did not wait for an answer. "I am glad you have come," she continued; "time hangs heavily on my hands. May I ask for whom you are in mourning?"

Oh, Mark, how little that mourning expressed my true sorrow for you. I felt my lips tremble when I answered—

"For the gentleman to whom I was engaged, Lady Yorke."

"How very sad!" she said, just in the same tone in which she would have cried, "How very pleasant!" Then she looked at me with a smile. "You did not tell me that you were a beauty, Miss Chester."

"I did not know it," I replied. The only voice that had ever called me beautiful was hushed for ever.

"People of your way of thinking do not value the gift of personal beauty, I suppose," she remarked.

It was my turn to smile.

"What do you mean by my way of thinking, Lady Yorke?"

"Madame tells me that your thoughts are more in heaven than on earth," she replied.

"The man I loved is in heaven," I said. "Where else could my thoughts be?"

"People are not often true to a dead love," said Lady Yorke, calmly. "For my part, I do not see much use in it."

"Truth to the dead and truth to the living are one and the same thing," I said, with the rash presumption of one ignorant and inexperienced. I had known only one love and one faith—how could I judge of others?

"I hope that you will like your rooms," said Lady Yorke. "I told Masham, the housekeeper, to give you the two most cheerful. They are in what we call the 'Queen's wing.' I hope you will be very comfortable, Miss Chester. I think you told me that you had no relatives?"

"No," I replied; "I am quite alone in the world."

"Ah, then," said Lady Yorke, with a pleasant smile, "you will be better able to devote all your time, thought, and attention to me."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Belles of Buda-Pesth.

In two days in Buda-Pesth I have encountered more pretty women, in face and figure, than in a whole month in other places. Their vivacity is also remarkable, and it is only natural that gallants are so numerous. Romeos and Juliets after sun-set pass you at every turn. To prim and precise individuals like myself it is positively startling to come unexpectedly upon two persons of opposite sexes with their arms around each other or hands tightly clasped. Somehow, when you recover your equanimity, the spectacle does not appear so shocking. However it might be with other nationalities, it has not the semblance of coarseness with these people. Their demonstrations are exhibited in such a spirit of unconsciousness and of Arcadian simplicity as to be exquisitely refreshing.—Baltimore Sun.

Thirty barrels of incense were burned during a three days' ceremonial in Siam recently.

HE WAS A "GENTLEMAN."

But He Would Hardly Pass Muster Among Honest Men.

There were ten of us who rode from the depot to a hotel in Charleston in the same 'bus, and as we entered the office a short, thick-set determined-looking man collared a young man wearing eyeglasses and said:

"I'll thank you to return my wallet."

"Certainly, sir, certainly. Let us conduct ourselves as becomes gentlemen."

"You picked my pocket on the way up, and I want my wallet back, or I'll mash you!" shouted the short man.

"Exactly. No need of raising your voice to a disagreeable pitch, no matter what the circumstances."

"Where is my wallet?"

"Here, sir, and I have great pleasure in returning it. I am sorry that we have had any misunderstanding."

An officer was sent for, and while waiting his appearance the young man said to the crowd:

"I never had any trouble with a gentleman, never. I am obliged to all of you for the courtesies which you have extended. Let us part as gentlemen should."

The officer soon arrived and walked him away to the station, but that evening about 9 o'clock, as I was walking on Meeting street, the prisoner halted me and said:

"I desire to thank you for your consideration in the affair. You treated me as a gentleman, sir, and I shall not forget it."

"But I thought you—you——"

"Oh, yes, I was locked up tight enough, but the officers at the station were no gentlemen, and they treated me in such a manner that I felt compelled to bid them good-night. I will now say au revoir."

I went up to the police station to inquire about it, and the sergeant in charge replied:

"What! That genteel fellow with eye-glasses? Oh, he's in there."

"But you didn't look."

He entered the corridor and looked into the cell. It was empty. The "gentleman" had sawed one of the window bars off and gone out by the way of the alley.—N. Y. Clipper.

The Boarding-House Table.

The table of a boarding-house should be made a special object of study. If that is a success one-half of the battle is won, writes Edward W. Bok in the Ladies' Home Journal. What appears there, and how it appears, either makes or retards the success of a house. There is nothing more uninviting to a boarder than to come to the same table with the same things on it day in and day out. To know this morning just what will be the breakfast three weeks hence: to come to the table in the morning—when everything should be fresh and sweet—to find last night's crumbs on the table-cloth; to be compelled to open the same napkin used throughout the previous day; to have charred and blackened chops served to tempt a morning appetite which it is difficult enough to coax with the most deliciously-browned chop laid in a bed of green parsley; to come to a cold and cheerless breakfast-room in winter, or a stuffy, unaired room in spring or summer; to know that at lunch you will have served up in cold the meats of the previous evening's supper; to see a vision of the same old dinner at night, repeated over and over again; to be asked to drink your coffee from a cup so thick as to make it an even thing between the vessel and the concoction in it—these are the things which make up the experience of a majority living today in boarding-houses. And they are all the very things easiest to avoid by just a little common sense and a trifle expenditure of trouble.

A Birthday Every Week.

There is an old saying that the sun always shines on his own birthday.

How many of you ever thought of the sun as having a birthday, or know what day of the week it comes on? Yet there is little doubt but that most of you have read all about it in the first chapter of Genesis, beginning at the 15th verse. If not, do so on the next anniversary, which always comes on a Wednesday.—Harpers Young People.

A woman who threw vitriol at a man in Brooklyn the other day got some of it on her own beauty and suffered dreadfully. Ladies can not be too careful in these indulgences.—Judge.

HOW'S THIS?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.

WEST & TRAUX, Wholesale Druggists Toledo, Ohio.

WALDING, KINNAN & MARAIN, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, Ohio.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price 75c per bottle. Sold by all Druggists.

MINING IN OLD MEXICO.

A Great Industry.

Mr. A. W. Gifford, an old Kansas newspaper man, who has spent ten years mining in the country, says: Few people in this country comprehend the magnitude of the developed mining interests of old Mexico, saying nothing of the thousands of unlocated claims lying dormant in well defined and proven leads that have yielded millions of dollars. A few enterprising Americans, Englishmen and Germans who can see the magnitude of the coming mining wave for Mexico have visited the country and purchased valuable properties that will undoubtedly yield handsome returns during the next three years. I am partial to mining in Mexico, I think it the greatest field on this continent. It offers greater inducements than all others. The bankers and business men of Pittsburg, Kansas have purchased a big gold mine recently, and organized the Pittsburg-Mexican Mining Co., and are offering the first twenty-five thousand shares at only $1 per share. In my judgement this stock will be worth from $3 to $5 per share within two years.—Ft. Scott Monitor.

FAT FOLKS REDUCED

Mrs. Alice Maple, Oregon, Mo., writes "My weight was 320 pounds, now it is 195 a reduction of 125 lbs." For circulars address, with 6c. Dr. O. W. F. SNYDER, McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, Ill.

"German Syrup"

Asthma.

"I have been a great sufferer from Asthma and severe Colds every Winter, and last Fall my friends as well as myself thought because of my feeble condition, and great distress from constant coughing, and inability to raise any of the accumulated matter from my lungs, that my time was close at hand. When nearly worn out for want of sleep and rest, a friend recommended me to try thy valuable medicine, Boschee's German Syrup. I am confident it saved my life. Almost the first dose gave me great relief and a gentle refreshing sleep, such as I had not had for weeks. My cough began immediately to loosen and pass away, and I found myself rapidly gaining in health and weight. I am pleased to inform thee—unsolicited—that I am in excellent health and do certainly attribute it to thy Boschee's German Syrup. C. B STICKNEY, Picton, Ontario" ®

Gentle, Refreshing Sleep.

Paper For Sale.

The leading Republican newspaper at a good county seat. Good job office. Address Y care M. C. Newspaper Co., Mason City, Ia.-1a*

The New Method.

☞ If you are Unwell send me your name and address and I will mail 9 Days' treatment of the Famous Australian Electric Pills. They quickly cure Liver, Kidney or Stomach trouble, Constipation, Indigestion, LaGrippe, Pimples and Skin Diseases. Address DR. E. J. WORST. Ashland. O FREE

The WEAK made STRONG

FREE TRIAL { In Nervous Debility, Lost Vitality, Weakness and Decay, sent free for 12 cents postage.

Address Dr. Ward Office, 117 N. 8th Street. St. Louis, Mo.

TUMORS

Internal or External, successfully Treated by New Method. No knife: no pain or shock. For pamphlet write The Sanitarium, Union Springs, N.Y.

Farm For Sale.

A No. 1 Improved Stock Farm of 365 Acres for Sale Cheap.

THE PORTLAND STOCK FARM.

Situated adjoining the village of Portland, on the C. M. & St. P. R. R., 5 miles east of Mason City, Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa. Farm fenced into 18 different fields and yards all hog tight and horse high. Farm buildings and all improvements are first class. Two large troughs soft spring water five rods from barn; farm also watered by Lime Creek and several springs. Twenty acres of timber surround buildings, also one thousand (1,000) rods of beautiful willow hedge on farm, 20 to 75 feet high, mostly bordering on the highways. Four large barns (hay capacity 200 tons) with five hundred (500) feet of basement walls. A large water-power roller mill and cheese and butter factory join farm. A large, modern, first class farm house, built in 1890.

Mason City, the county seat of Cerro Gordo county, and the Lexington of Iowa, is a beautiful little city of about five thousand (5,000) inhabitants. She has just completed one of the best mile tracks in the state, which, with the fair grounds, have been built at an expense of $20,000.

Price of farm, forty-five dollars ($45.00) per acre. For particulars and picture of farm and buildings, call on or address the owner at Portland, Cerro Gordo County, Iowa.

A. S. FELT, prop.

PILES

RUDY'S PILE SUPPOSITORY is a sovereign remedy for Piles (bleeding, itching, blind, inward, etc.) whether of recent or long standing. It gives instant relief, and effects a radical and permanent cure. No surgical operation required. Try it and relieve your sufferings. Send for circular and free sample. Only 50 cents a box. For sale by druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of price.

MARTIN RUDY, Lancaster, Pa.

THE OLD DOCTOR'S

Cotton Root Pills

LADIES' FAVORITE.

ALWAYS RELIABLE and perfectly SAFE. The same as used by thousands of woman all over the United States, in the OLD DOCTORS private mail practice, for 38 years, and not a single bad result. Money returned if not as represented. Send 4 cents (stamps) for sealed particulars. Dr. WARD & CO., 117 N. 8th St., St. Louis, Mo.

WANTED.

$15 A WEEK, ANY LADY, employed or unemployed, can make this for a few hours work each day. Salary or com. $10 samples free. Ad. H. BENJAMIN & CO., 115 N. 8th St., ST. LOUIS, MO.

☞ ANY LADY can get a valuable secret that cost me $5.00, and a rubber shield for 20 cents. Mrs. V. M. APP. CO. 115 N. 8th STREET, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mason City Newspaper Co-91-49

-:- BUY STOCK -:-

IN A

Good Gold Mine!

It will make you from 100 to 500 per cent. profit within two years. Don't wait; write for information now.

ADDRESS

Pittsburg-Mexican Mining Company,

PITTSBURG, KANSAS.

Mason City Business College

Institute of Short-Hand and Telegraphy gives two complete courses for $30. Five experienced instructors in Commercial and Short-Hand Departments. Gray's System of Short-Hand taught. We have the largest and best lighted school room. Our graduates succeed. Day board $1.50 per week; furnished rooms 50 cents per week. Write for information.

C. P. HEADINGTON, Principal, MASON CITY, IOWA.

MASON CITY, IOWA,

Cancer Infirmary

The Only Reliable Institution in the Northwest. Homelike and Pleasant,

DR. M. V. MAYFIELD, the Specialist, has been more than successful for thirteen years. No Knife. No Caustics.

H. E. MOORE, the President, GUARANTEES A CURE OR NO PAY.

Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co.

of Milwaukee. Wis.

Assets Jan. 1st, 1891, - - - - - $42,353,912.36

Surplus Jan. 1st, 1891, - - - - $ 6,532,324.98

I consider my policies in your company the cheapest insurance I have.

JOHN V. FARWELL, Merchant.

I consider the Northwestern incomparably the safest, best and cheapest institution of the kind in the country.

WM. STEVENS PERRY, Bishop of Iowa.

I have dropped my policies in the Equitable of New York and New York Life and take additional insurance in the Northwestern

R. M. STEEL, Banker.

H. A. MUNGER, GENERAL AGENT, Cedar Rapids Iowa.

D. R. HUBBARD, ASSOCIATE GENERAL AGENT, Mason City, I[illegible]

PISO'S REMEDY FOR CATARRH.—Best. Easiest to use. Cheapest. Relief is immediate. A cure is certain. For Cold in the Head it has no equal.

CATARRH

It is an Ointment, of which a small particle is applied to the nostrils. Price 50c. Sold by druggists or sent by mail. Address E. T. HAZELTINE, Warren, Pa.

A Complete Reference Library

AT ABOUT 2 CTS. A DAY.

REVISED ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA

20 Large Octavo Volumes, 7,000 Pages, 8,000,000 Words, and 97 Maps Printed in Colors, Bound in Jute Manilla.

AND THE WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS FOR ONE YEAR

ALL FOR $7.50!

This is the GREATEST OFFER ever made by any Newspaper. The Revised Encyclopædia Britannica is a Dictionary of Art, Science and Literature to which is added descriptions of American Cities with a History of their Origin and Growth, together with Accurate Information of their Situation, Population, Resources, etc., etc,

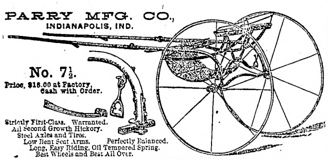
The Best, Cheapest, Completest and Latest Revised Encyclopædia and the Greatest Newspaper,

THE WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS FOR ONE YEAR FOR $7.50 !

AND WE PAY THE FREIGHT.

Address WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS, St. Paul, Minn.

PARRY MFG. CO.,
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.



No. 7½.
Price, $16.00 at Factory, Cash with Order.

Strictly First-Class. Warranted.
All Second Growth Hickory.
Steel Axles and Tires.
Low Bent Seat Arms. Perfectly Balanced.
Long, Easy Riding, Oil Tempered Spring.
Best Wheels and Best All Over.

IF YOU CAN'T FIND THEM FOR SALE BY YOUR MERCHANTS, WRITE US

WE are making a specialty this season of what we call our PARAGON HARNESS. Made of the FINEST STOCK and the very BEST WORKMANSHIP. Such a harness cannot be bought for less than $25. at retail. But we are willing, in order to introduce it, to SELL ONE SET ONLY to one person as a sample for $16.50.

$25.00 HARNESS FOR $16.50

IN GENUINE RUBBER $18.50.

DESCRIPTION OF HARNESS.

A fine Buggy Harness stitched twelve stitches to the inch, except traces which are stitched ten. Is made to represent a $50 harness. It has a 3 or 3½ hand laced, leather pad saddle, with covered seat and jockeys; is made from fine stock. Bridle is of usual dimensions, has fine blinds, nice leather front and beautiful rosettes with glass centers, nice nickel bit. Check-rein, either overdraw with nose piece, or side check. Nice russet or black reins. The breast-collar, neck-strap, breeching and hip straps are made either of patent enamel or plain harness leather, as may be preferred, and the layers on the same are cut wide and straight, and being stitched so very fine and nicely creased, give to the harness a costly custom-made appearance. The hip and back straps are doubled and stitched, nicely creased and finished throughout. Box loops of beautiful design as on custom-made work. Trimmings either Davis Rubber, Nickel Wire or Brass Wire, or a Fancy style. We refer you to the publishers of this paper as to our responsibility. Remit by Express or Money Order. Money refunded if goods are not satisfactory.

BOSTON HARNESS CO.
Concord Junction, Mass.

Red Lake Falls
Iron Works,

P. & J. MEEHAN, Proprietors.
J. Z PERRON, Manager.

SAW AND GRIST MILL

MACHINERY MADE AND REPAIRED.

Repairing Thresher Engines

AND BOILERS AND

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS

Circular Saws Hammered. Satisfaction Guaranteed, Correspondenc solicited.

BRING IN YOUR WORK

Scrap Brass and Copper Bought.

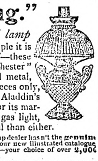
PERFECTION IN BUTTER MAKING.

The O. K. OUTFIT EXCELS THEM ALL.

THE O.K. CREAMERY

Has the largest cooling surface; takes less cooling materials less labor, and gives Best Results. All cream raised between milkings. Skimming Glass whole depth of can, showing condition of milk without touching Creamery. Send for O. K. Catalogue.
JOHN S. CARTER, Sole Manf'r, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

"Seeing is Believing."

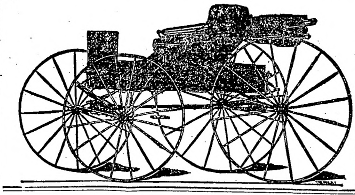


And a good lamp must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer hasn't the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue and we will send you a lamp safely by express—your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.

ROCHESTER LAMP CO., 42 Park Place, New York City.

"The Rochester."



WARRANTED WAGONS & BUGGIES

MANUFACTURED BY

EASY WAGON GEAR CO.

DETROIT, MICH.

If you wish the easiest riding, most durable and attractive Wagon or Buggy made, ask your Dealer to show you these goods. A written warranty furnished with every one. Take no other. You may as well have the BEST. It costs no more than an inferior article.

CATALOGUE SENT IF REQUESTED.

We Would Like to Call the Attention of

Capitalists

Manufacturers and Others Desiring a Place for

INVESTMENT

To the

Superior Advantages of

RED LAKE FALLS

Its Many WaterPowers and other natural advantages. It is only a question of a few years until this will be one of the leading cities of Minnesota. Investment in real estate or water privileges are sure to secure to the investors handsome returns.

WE RE

In the Cnter of Vast

Farming District.

Yearly consuming large amounts of imported products of manufactures. This vast tract of land is watered by the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers. Within the limits of the city are

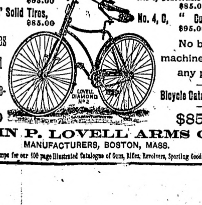
12 DISTINCT WATER POWERS.

The only natural water powers on these streams. There are fine openings for paper and pulp mills, woolen and other factories. Parties outside desiring any information concerning property, address

---

LOVELL DIAMOND CYCLES.

STRICTLY HIGH GRADE.



No. 1, Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 2, Cushion Tires, $95.00
No. 3, Ladies' Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 3 C, Ladies' Cushion Tires, $95.00
No. 4, Convertible Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 4, C, " Cushion Tires, $95.00

OUR Cushion Tires ARE Warranted
ALL PARTS Interchangeable.
$85.00

No better machine made at any price.

Bicycle Catalogue Free.

$85.00

JOHN P. LOVELL ARMS CO.,
MANUFACTURERS, BOSTON, MASS.

Send six cents in stamps for our 100 page Illustrated Catalogue of Guns, Rifles, Revolvers, Sporting Goods of all kinds, etc.

ANDERSON'S SHORTHAND TYPEWRITER
Prints A Word at One Stroke.

THIS is the machine that is used in the Office, Court-room, and for reporting lectures and sermons.

While its speed is greater than any other known method, it is so simple that any intelligent person can gain a speed of 100 or more words per minute, in five or six weeks, without the aid of an instructor. Circulars and testimonials sent to all who mention this paper.

E. T. PIERCE, FAYETTE, OHIO,
Sole Agent for U. S. and Canada.

THE NEW WEBSTER

JUST PUBLISHED—ENTIRELY NEW.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

A GRAND INVESTMENT
for the Family, the School, or the Library.

Revision has been in progress for over 10 Years. More than 100 editorial laborers employed. $300,000 expended before first copy was printed. Critical examination invited. Get the Best. Sold by all Booksellers. Illustrated pamphlet free.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Publishers,
Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

RALPH & BOURDON,

Proprietors of the

CITY
DRAY
LINE.

WOOD & COAL

Anything in our line done
Promptly and at very Reasonable
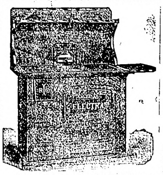
Rates.

GIVE US A CALL

INDIANA RANGE CO.

MANUFACTURERS
OF WROUGHT STEEL RANGES



Guaranteed to be the most economical, most durable and most perfect Range on the market. Suitable for hard or soft coal, or wood.

Send for catalogue to
INDIANA RANGE CO.
EVANSVILLE, IND.

Bucklin's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for cuts bruises, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores tter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25 cents per bottle. For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

The Mystery Solved.

A jockey overheard a conversation in a table that excited his curiosity and lead him to make a thorough investigation which resulted in the following valuable discovery. That Metzger's Angleworm and Wormwood Oil Liniment for horses has no equal as it keeps their joints limber and gives them good action, and for sprains, etc., it cures quickly, as every one is aware of the penetrating qualities of angle and wormwood oil. Call on W. A. Schreiter and get a bottle as he reports it's giving universal satisfaction. Price 50c and $1 per bottle.

His Curiosity Was Gratified.

A stranger stood alone in the street of a great city. His hat was napless his boots covered with the dust of travel. Around him on every side a hurrying throng pushed and jostled in mad haste. He turned to a friendly policeman and said: "Say: Where be all these people gwine"! The officer was dumfounded at such ignorance Where are they going? Why, to purchase tickets via the popular Wisconsin Central If you are going anywhere you want to go with the crowd and ride on the best track in the most comfortable cars and with the greatest ease you ever experienced". For tickets berths and further information apply to any ticket agent.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Armica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handle remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits W. A. Schreiter Druggists.

A Safe Investment.

Is one which is guaranteed to bring satisfactory results, or in case of failure purchase price. on this safe plan you can buy from our advertised Druggist a bottles of Dr. Kings' New Discovery for Consumption. It is guaranteed to bring relief in every case, when used for any affection of Throat, Lungs or Chest, such as Consumption, Inflammation of Lungs, Bronchitis Asthma, Whooping Cough, Croup, colic can always be depended upon. Trial bottles free at W. A. Schreiter's. Drugstore.

Notice.

To the owners of following described lots and parcels of land situate lying and being in the Village of Red Lake Falls Minn., viz.

Lot 13, 14, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24 in block 7 of Champagne & Dow's add. Also lots 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 Blk 23, Lots 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 Blk 32. Lots 13 & N 50 ft lot 1 Blk 43, Lot 9 Blk 44, lot 1 Blk 65, lots 10, 11, 12 Blk 70 and lot 9 Blk 83 in Kretzschmar's addition.

You are notified to repair the sidewalks in front of said above described lots and parcels of and within fourteen days from date of this notice or the same will be done by the village and assessed against said lots as provided by law.

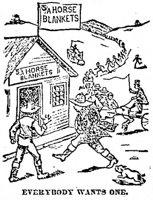
Dated Red Lake Falls, Minn., Nov. 16th, 1891.

H. B. DAVIS,
Recorder.

ADAM SCHMITZ

DEALER IN

Horse Furnishing Goods,



EVERYBODY WANTS ONE.

Two or three dollars for a 5/A Horse Blanket will save double its cost. Your horse will eat less to keep warm and be worth fifty dollars more.

LIGHT AND HEAVY HARNESS, Whips, Combs, Brushes, Trunks, Valises.

The celebrated STANDARD HORSE AND CATTLE FOOD. Every stock owner should test its merits. For sale by ADAM SCHMITZ.

Broadway - Red Lake Falls

Librarian
Minnesota State
Historical Soc

RED LAKE FALLS NEWS.

JAS. MEEHAN JR. P. MEEHAN { EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS. OFFICIAL PAPER OF CITY

Vol. VIII No. 49. RED LAKE FALLS, POLK COUNTY, MINNESOTA, DECEMBER 3, 1891. TERMS, $1.50 PER YEAR

CHRISTMAS - IS - COMING!

AND AS USUAL SANTA CLAUS IS MAKING HIS HEADQUARTERS AT

The Drug and Jewelry Store,

Where can be found the finest assortment of

Toys and Holiday Goods, ALBUMS TOILET CASES, WORK BOXES, DOLLS, CUPS AND SAUCERS, ROCKING HORSES, ETC, ETC. Something Nice and Cheap

Remember, we have the goods. Call and and see us at the old stand

W. J. Flack, Proprietor; Miss Mattie Cervais, Assistant.

☞P. S.—Also Watches, Jewelry and Musical Goods in Large Variety.

Joseph Smith & Co.

HAVE, AS USUAL, A COMPLETE Stock of General Merchandise, Including a Fine Assortmen tof Goods Suitable For Holiday Gifts.

A large stock of Ladies Winter Dress Goods, Cloaks, etc. and general furnishing goods.

A Large Stock of Gents Furnishings. Call and Examine Stock.

Frank E. Hunt,

DEALER IN

GENERAL : HARDWARE.

P & J MEEHAN,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. J. HOWE & CO)

Manufacturers and Dealers in

LUMBER,

LATH,

SHINGLES

Sash, Doors, Moldings, Building Paper,

Yards and Office on Main St.

Flax Fibre Works.

Minneapolis has a prosperous factory for the manfacture of flax fibre into linen fabrics, says the Minneapolis Tribune, and Minnesota raised this year nearly 500,000 acres of flax. But the intermediate process of flax of retting the flax-straw into a fibre suitable for final manufacture into linen products was something in which not only Minnesota, but the country at large, was sadly at loss. But in the new and expeditions microbe retting process which is going, into practical operation for the first time at the flax fibre works opened at Austin, Minnesota, last Friday, a long felt want seems finally about to be supplied.

Without this invention Minnesota's 500,000 acres of flax straw would have been burned or allowed to rot in the field, and the Minneapolis linen factory would have been obliged to import most of its fibre. The new process makes every stalk of Minnesota flax straw available as linen material. If the process proves as successful as it promises, the Northwest will be master of the linen industry from the dropping of the seed into the soil to the cutting of the fabric into garment or the turning of the pulp into paper.

According to the old Europe n method it took from six to eight weeks of a careful and laborious process to properly ret the straw into fibre. The new chemical microbe process does the work in 48 hours. The micropes, bred by the billions in chemical tanks, and turned upon the straw, cut away the gum and woody substances as food, leaving the clean and free fibre ready for the machines. The process so cheapens the cast of fibre, that the American Flax Fibre Company, which is operating the Austin plant, claims to be able to easily undersell all competitors and cut short all fibre importations. The company claims a capital stocks of $15,000,000 and therefore is prepared to widely extend its business.

Tributary to Austin are 60,000 acres of flax. In Minnesota, Iowa and the Dakotas upwards of a millions acres of flax straw were cut during the past season. The sucess of the new retting process will lead to the building of fibre factories throughout the Nortwest, and will double and quadruple both the flax acreage and linen manufacture. On the sucess of the process there hangs, therefore, for the Northwest, the building up of a new agricultural and manufacturing industry second in importance only to the growing of wheat and manufacture of flour.

Specimen Cases.

S H Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was trouble with Neuralgia and Rheumatism, his Stomach was disordered, his Liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shipherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight year's standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large Fever sores on his leg ,doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely. Sold at W. A. Schreiter Drug Store.

Read "Love For a Day."

Something A b o ut inds.

To the American, with his practical views and iconoclastic materialism, wind is simply an agitation of the atmosphere. Before the advent of steam, he ground the meal for his daily bread with the aid of wind; he avails himself of it yet to waft his trading vessels across the seas. If it is gentle, he calls it a breeze; if it comes with a sudden rush, roar and whirl, depositing his house on the next quarter section, his cattle in the next township, and makes him hunt for the cellar in a hurry, he names it a cyclone—and proceeds to get himself together again. The ancients, however, with their tendency to "see sermons in stones and books in running brooks," personified all things in nature and named the winds—Boreas, the North wind: Eurus the East wind; Zephyrus, the West wind; and Notus, the South wind. These were the sons of Astræa (the star-man) and Eos (the dawn). Just at this time people in the Northwestern states are (some of them) dreading the piercing blasts at Boreas and thinking about a flight to the orange groves of Florida or California. The line for the south bound traveler to take is "The Burlington" which has its own tracks to Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Joseph and Omaha, where close connections are made with the railways leading South, South-West and West. Through tickets and full information can be had from agents of "The Burlington," or by addressing W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen Pass, Agent C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

A Republican Exponent.

Every man will wish to be well up on tariff points the coming year, and he can get the prospective views at the lowest possible cost by taking the Home Market Bulletin of Boston which we furnish at half price in connection with the NEWS. Governor McKinley says the Bulletin is admirable, and he wishes it might go to every voter.

Will be Open for Settlement.

The surveys of four townships in the Red Lake Reservation have been approved by the commissioner of the general land office, and the surveyor general of Minnesota ordered to file the plats in the Crookston land office. The lands will be disposed of as agricultural lands instead of timber lands. They are on the west side of the reservation. A contract was signed last week with Bernard Keegen for the survey of three more townships of land in the same vicinity.—Ada Index.

The Excitement Not Over.

The rush at Schreiter's drug store still continues on account of persons afflicted with Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scrofula, Soreness and inflammation of eyes, sores, pains, etc., etc., to procure a package of Metzger's Pain Eradicator which is sold on a guarantee and is giving entire satisfaction. It is a standard family remedy. Price 50 cents. Trial size free.

A Remarkable Good Man.

He who attends to the comfort of his family and will not suffer himself or allow them to, with that most dreadful of pains, rheumatism. Metzger's Angle and Wormwood oil Liniment is a positive cure for rheumatism and sprains. It is he best external application on earth. One bottle is better than any amount of porous plaster. Price 50 cents per bottle. For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

Terrebonne Items.

Lovely weather.

Messrs. A. and D. Clement and R. Gagnon left Monday for Chippewa Falls, Wis.

Mr. and Mrs. Marcil came from Gentilly Tuesday to attend the funeral service of Mrs. Fournier.

J. Page and R. Laframboise were up from Gentilly Sunday, through the windy weather—to attend to some important business, we suppose.

Mrs. Isaac Fournier breathed her last Sunday at 1 P. M. surrounded by her husband and near relatives. She was buried Tuesday at 10 o'clock in the Terrebonne cemetery, Rev. Fr. Feige officiating. Mrs. Fournier was followed to her last resting place by her many friends and relatives.

Deceased, whose maiden name was Aicelie Clearmont, was twenty years of age. She came to Terrebonne five years ago with her parents; was married to Isaac Fournier in Jan, 1891, and presented him with a son Nov. 4. Thus one life is forfeited for the other, and the motherless babe and the bereaved husband must bear the heavy lost. They have our deepest sympathy.

Lambert Letter.

I drop you a few lines to let you know I am still among the living, and to post a few news items.

A gentleman named Joseph Laggard will open a store in the Dammoney place and promises to make it popular.

Samuel Gibeau, one of the popular boys here, has set a telephone from his store to his boarding place. It works admirably.

The thrashing in this vicinity is far from done and farmers are in straits over the matter. The lack of straw compels them to keep their stock in barns and feed hay. Hay is a very scarce article already. The fine weather of this week is encouraging, however, and thrashing will be resumed.

L. Dault, the blacksmith, met with a severe accident, which happened in the same manner as many before—an ax and a clothesline. He was splitting wood at night under a clothes line, when the ax coming in contact with the line, sprung back, cutting a fearful gash on the head. He is alright again, however.

Now Try This.

It will cost you nothing and will surely do you good, if you have a Cough, Cold, or any trouble with throath, chest or Lungs. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds is guaranted to give relief, or money will be paid back. Sufferers from LaGrippe found it just the thing and under its use had a speedy and perfect recovery. Try a sample bottle at our expense and learn for yourself just how good a thing it is. Trial bottles free at W. A. Schreiter's Drug Store, Large size 50c. and $100.

Caution. Barbed Wire.

What that barbed wire fence has done to your horses Metzger's Veterinary Ointment will heal at once not leaving a scar, and will grow the hair as before. It is natures own remedy, and is warranted to heal any and all cases of scratches, Grease heal, collar and saddle gall, speed cracks, cracked heels, cuts, wounds, stiff or inflamed joints, frost bites, sore eyes, sore teats, mud fever, inflamed and diseased feet, and will grow a new hoof in the quickest possible time. Call at W. A. Screiter's and get a box and try it price 50c and full lbs. $1.00.

A Fact

WORTH KNOWING.

AT

Wells' Confectionery Stand.

On Main st
You can secure rare bargains in Toys and Books as I am closing out My present stock

AT COST

To make room for

Christmas Goods

Don't Forget

That I carry a fine line of Fancy Groceries, Fresh

Maple Syrup, Fine Jellies, Canned Pine-Apples, All kinds of Canned Goods.

Potted Hams, Canned Beef, Boston Baked Beans. Etc.

CIGARS
The Finest and Favorite Brands.
CANDY
Fresh, the Finest Quality.

(I supply this couple with sweets.)

Don't forget to call at

C. B. WELLS.

Red Lake Falls News

TERMS, $1.50 PER YEAR.

P. & JAS. MEEHAN, PROPRIETORS.

MINNESOTA NOTES.

Stillwater citizens are taking steps rganize a board of trade.

A new volunteer fire department has been organized at Hastings.

Temporary insanity is assigned as the cause of the Chaska murder.

There is a prospect of a national bank being started at Waterville.

At a special meeting Madelia voted to issue $29,000 to build a new school house.

At Red Lake Falls St. Joseph's parish is building a new church edifice to cost $8,000.

The house of John Nisbile was burned at Waterville; loss, $1,000; insured for $800.

Gov. Swineford has retired from the Duluth Leader, and it is now a republican organ.

The grand jury at Fergus Falls indicted Peter Webb for larceny, and he has pleaded guilty.

Brandahort & Martins flouring mill at Rushford was burned. The loss is $4,000; insurance $2,000.

J. A. Doll was indicted at Fergus Falls for an attempt at train wrecking on the Northern Pacific.

The thresher company at Stillwater will start up about December 1, and will employ a large force of men.

Rev. Lewis Llewellyn, late of England, has been installed pastor of the First Baptist church at Hastings.

The new union depot at Mankato will be 160 feet long, be built of pressed brick and heated by steam.

The city schools at Moorhead have been closed on account of scarlet fever, except the high and grammar schools.

The jury in the Derdowski libel suit disagreed. There were nine for acquittal and three for conviction of the editor.

Albert Erdani, a young German living near Center City, was drowned in Duck Lake, Franconia, while coasting on the ice

J. J. Green, of the Le Sueur Sentinel has sold that paper, which he has published 19 years, to C. F. Barrett, of the Aiken Age.

Mrs. Eva McDonald-Valesh, the state lecturer of the alliance, will lecture before the Knights of labor at St. Cloud tonight.

At Brainerd ex-City Clerk Patrick Murphy, under arrest for embezzling city funds, was unable to secure bondsmen and committed to jail.

There is talk of removing the pressed brick manufactory of Austin to Minneapolis or St. Paul, unless the citizens take $10.000 stock.

Mrs. Roach, who has once been at Rochester, was examined by the probate court at Fairbault and again committed to the asylum.

Mrs. George Harders, of Minnesota City, died from swallowing match heads with suicidal intent. Domestic trouble is given as the reason.

The little son of William Sume, of Waseca, drank half a can of concentrated lye mixed with water. There are hopes of his recovery.

The Northfield building and loan association has just made a statement. It has assets to the amount of $99,783, and is in a flourishing condition.

The store of K. H. Brondvoldt, at Dalton, was burglarized to the extent of $50. The safe contained $800, which the burglars were unable to get.

Capt. White has presented a beautiful flag to the Albert Lea school district, and the emblem of liberty will float from a fine flag staff on the largest school building.

Louis Thompson, a slater from Minneapolis, fell 100 feet from the cupola of the new city hall at La Crosse. When picked up he was dead and horribly mangled.

The American carving and manufacturing company, organized at Winona during the summer, has now one machine at work and others in course of construction.

Sheriffs Hammerel, of Stearns county and Quinn, of Benton county, are disputing over a bill for making an arrest. The county commissioners, unable to decide, will refer the matter to the attorney general.

Cupt, of Milwaukee, has decided not to build an opera house at Winona but the board of trade of that city are not discouraged and will still persevere in their efforts to give Winona a good opera house.

The incorporators of the Albert Lea high school will hold a meeting to take steps toward the consolidation of the Lutheran school at Sioux Falls with theirs. The consolidated school will be at Albert Lea.

A band of Sisseton Indians visited the Mille Lacs Chippewas and invited them to come the Sisseton and Wahpeton reservation and share in the allotments. Some say they will accept the invitation and go to the South Dakota reservation.

The Catholic priest at New Prague has proposed to the school board that the parochial school there be turned over to the public schools a part of the year, that the district may get its full share of public money, from which it is now deprived, by reason of the non-attendance of Catholic children.

Judge Mills has issued a circular to attorneys, stating that the district court for Marshall county will be postponed until the second Monday of February. The reason assigned was that he had received numerous petitions from farmers saying they could not attend on account of the threshing and other fall work.

At a meeting of the city school board, at Stillwater, a committee of Protestant ministers presented a document signed by every Protestant minister in the city, protesting against the recent action of the school board in accepting the proposition of St. Michael's church to take charge of the parochial school. They objected to the employment of sisters of charity as teachers, and called attention to an alleged fact that none but Catholic children are sent to that school.

EVENTS OF A WEEK

Interesting Digest of the Happenings of the Past week

State, Criminal, Foreign, Personal, Casualty, and Other News.

The four members of the firm of Swift & Co., the packers of Chicago, and General Freight Agent Spriggs, of the Nickel Plate Railroad, were all indicted by the Federal Grand Jury for violating the Inter-State Commerce law.

Bloody results due to the famine are reported in Charkoff and Ekarermoslay, Russia. It is said the government is considering the advisability of engaging thousands of the peasants to work on the Siberian road during the winter.

A call has been issued by the Commercial Club of Oklahoma City for a convention to be held Dec. 15, composed of delegates from each political division of Oklahoma and Indian Territory to discuss the advisability of statehood.

Three Yuma Indians were sentenced to death at Los Angeles, Cal., Tuesday. They murdered a medicine man who failed to produce rain at the request of the tribe. According to the laws of the tribe, such a failure is punished with death.

The National Sporting Club, of London, has offered a $10,000 purse for a fight between Jackson and Slavin, to come off during Derby week, in June. The California Club, of San Francisco, has offered the two men a purse of $12,000.

The Supreme Court of Washington has affirmed the decision of the lower court in the case of Charles K. Hammond of Cleveland street, London, notoriety, who was convicted of larceny at Seattle, and has served two years in the penitentiary.

The report having been telegraphed from Sioux Falls, S. D., that Mrs. James G. Blaine, Jr., had abandoned her residence in that state and with it her suit for divorce, Mrs. Blaine expresses a most emphatic and sweeping denial of such report.

Three prospectors have reported an immense find of free aluminum in the San Mateo Mountains. Samples have been brought in and assayed in Denver, returning 27 per bent of aluminum. The prospector declare that the ground is covered with ore.

The general Northern lumber season is over, and the cut for the year reaches 447,713,253 feet, 217,221,000 shingles, and 97,697,390 lath. This beats all records, and exceeds the output of 1890 by 403,-138,893 feet of lumber, 44,003,500 shingles, and 17,422,250 lath.

George Gage of Cortland, N. Y., said he was tired of life. His fellow-workmen said they would hang him if he liked. They got a rope and pulled Gage up. The rope caught and they couldn't let him down. When released he was nearly dead, but will recover.

Fragmentary returns from the special election held in the Knoxville (Tenn.) District to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Congressman L. C. Houk, indicate the election of his son, John C. Houk, over S. C. J. Williams, democrat, by a majority of between 6,000 and 7,000.

Commander-in-Chief Palmer of the Grand Army of the Republic in general orders No. 6 urges that the cases of suspended members in arrears be examined by post committee, and when worthy arrears be remitted all save the per capita tax.

The Exchange Telegraph Company furnishes advices from Rio de Janeiro to the effect that everywhere discontent and disaffection with the present regime are becoming more pronounced. In general terms, the political condition of Brazil is described as closely bordering on anarchy.

One of the largest deals in pine stumpage ever recorded was consummated at Ashland, Wis., Saturday. It involved 50,000,000 feet and was sold for a consideration of $176,000 by A. A. Bigelow & Co. to the Shores Lumber company. The lumber will be manufactured in Ashland at the Shores mill.

One thousand coal-miners employed in the mines near Washington, Ind., quit work Saturday and resolved to remain out until the trouble in the Brazil district has been adjusted. The men had no grievance, but struck in order to prevent the output of the mines here from relieving the coal famine caused by the Brazil strike.

Contrary to the announcement made a few days ago that nothing further would be done in connection with the question of exporting wheat from Russia until the Czar's return from Livadia early in December, an ukase from his Majesty was issued Saturday prohibiting the exports of wheat and wheat products from Russia.

Mrs. William Oldham, of Independence, Mo., gave birth to three bright baby boys who tip the beam at four, five and six pounds each. The triplets are well-formed little citizens and from general appearance have come to stay. Mrs. Oldham's husband is a farmer and is apparently overjoyed at the unusual increase in his family.

The immense crop of Florida oranges, variously estimated from 2,800,000 to 4,-500,000 boxes, has begun to flow in a golden stream northward. The last steamer from Savannah that reached New York brought 15,000 boxes, and Friday the price touched $1.15 a box in the wholesale market, though first-class fruit is still held at higher figures.

Nelson P. Cook, who claims to represent a Boston newspaper syndicate, has been arrested at Berlin, and is awaiting trial. He is charged with fraud by the proprietors of the Pfaff Minerva Hotel, where he lived for a month without any financial resources. Cook states that he started from Boston with 1 cent in his possession, meaning to work his way around the world.

The effort to remove the body of Gen Grant from Riverside to Arlington National Cemetery will be renewed at the coming session of Congress. The advocates of the removal also maintain that all great military leaders of the union armies—Sherman, Thomas, Meade, McClellan, McPherson, Logan and all the rest—should, like Sheridan, be buried at Arlington, within view of the capitol of the nation.

A tradition exists in Crawford county, Ind., that the Wyandottes buried treasures of gold and silver, which they stole from the early missionaries and settlers, and occasionally the treasure-hunters become a plague. One of these fevers is now on, and, as the county is underlaid with iron, the divining rods are leading the owners to dig until some of the fields look like an artichoke patch that has been visited by hogs.

The Secretary of the Treasury and the Controller of the Currency have been requested by Senator Chandler of New Hampshire to give out for publication the report of the late Bank Examiner, showing the result in connection with his last examination of the affairs of the defunct Maverick National Bank of Boston. Senator Chandler says there ought to be no secrecy about the affairs of a national bank after its failure.

A New York Sunday paper says: "Grover Cleveland authorizes the statement that he is taking no part in the contest for the speakership of the house; that he is as much the friend of each candidate as he is of any other; that he has never declared himself as favoring Mr. Mills more than Mr. Crisp or Mr. Springer or Mr. McMillin, and that he has not made and does not intend making any suggestions in regard to the organization of the house of representatives."

B. Cornelisen and T. D. Stephens, two old miners, have struck the richest lead unearthed in the Galena, Ill., region in years. The mine is located on ground that has been little worked heretofore and the ore was unexpectedly found at a depth of eighteen feet. Drifts were made and a rich and seemingly exhaustless vein of ore has been unearthed. The men are confident they have a fortune, and as the ore lies in such shape that no expensive machinery will be required they will have the full benefit of their discovery.

The Rev. Dr. Ezra Marsh Boring, or "Father" Boring, as he was familiarly known, took his own life Saturday afternoon at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Jones, in Evanston, Ill. He was temporarily insane from the effects of ill health, aggravated by ivy-vine poisoning received last summer. Father Boring was 78 years old and was one of the best-known members of the Rock river conference, having preached at Galena when Gen. Grant was a member of the congregation. He was presiding elder of the Chicago district for four years and was one of the founders of the Des Plaines camp-meeting.

The waterways convention has been called to meet in Detroit Dec. 17. The convention will consider the best means of securing a twenty-one foot channel from Duluth and Chicago to Buffalo, and also how a ship canal to the sea might be constructed. The co-operation of all commercial organizations in the cities along the lakes, and such cities as Minneapolis and St. Paul, peculiarly interested in the transportation, is invited. These cities will be asked to send five delegates each. The governor of each state bordering on the lakes will be invited to be present at the meeting, and also to appoint five other delegates each from their respective territories.

WILL NOW BE THE FAD.

The First Suicide From the Brooklyn Bridge Has Occurred.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—Shortly after noon today, when the big Brooklyn bridge was covered with promenaders, a stranger jumped from the center of the main space to the East river, 140 feet below, and was drowned. It was a clear case of suicide. James Ross, a peddler, of 232 York street, Brooklyn, was driving upon the New York end of the bridge roadway, when a stranger stepped up and begged permission to ride across. He was a medium sized man in middle life, clad in the garb of a longshoreman. As he rode along he conversed rationally with the peddler and two boys who were with him. On reaching the center of the main span the man jumped up and said, "I guess I'll jump overboard." Ross thinking he was joking, replied, "All right; you jump and I'll follow." He did jump, going down half the distance as straight as an arrow, feet first, then turning struck the water face first and was lost to view for some seconds. He rose once, his head just showing, and sank for the last time. His body has not been recovered. This is the first suicide from the bridge.

By Order of the Czar.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 25.—Contrary to the announcement made a few days ago that nothing further would be done in connection with the question of exporting wheat from Russia until the czar returns from Livadia late in December, a ukase from his majesty was issued today prohibiting the export of wheat and wheat products from Russia. This prohibition, which will go into effect Monday next, will be executed under the same conditions as those governing the prohibition recently decreed against the export of oats.

Poisoned by Nicotine.

CALEDONIA, Minn., Nov. 25.—Nicholas Ellens, an old resident of Houston county, aged 72 is dead as a result of a peculiar accident. While carrying swill to his hogs and smoking the while he slipped and falling, drove the stem of his pipe into his throat. It broke and with difficulty extracted. Blood poisoning resulted from the nicotine and death resulted as stated.

The Pope in Poor Health.

ROME, Nov. 24.—All the personages who have recently had interviews with the pope assert that he frequently complains of declining health and strength and speaks of his death as not being far distant. He complains much of his position, being kept in what is practically a state of imprisonment, not being able to leave the vatican grounds.

WASHINGTON NOTES

Latest Telegraph News from the National Capital Condensed.

Doings of the Supreme Court the Executive and Other Departments.

PENSIONS AND PENSION APPEALS.

Assistant Secretary Bussey has submitted to Secretary Noble his report of the work done by the board of pension appeals during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1891:

Appeals pending July 1, 1890, 4,850; new appeals filed, 3,272; appeals wherein pension office was sustained, 2,243; appeals wherein pension office was reversed, 339; appeals reconsidered, 302; dismissed, 141; pending July 1, 1891, 5,030; motions for reconsideration pending July 1, 1890, 511; motions filed during year, 176; overruled, 3:0; sustained, 38; allowed, 11; dismissed, 11; motions for reconsideration pending July 1, 1891, 317. Fee appeals filed, 64; pending July 1, 1891, 165. Letters referred to the commissioner of pensions, 10,491; letters sent, 6,491. From July 1, 1891, to Oct. 1, 1891, there were: Appeals filed, 952; adjudicated, 1,122; motions for reconsideration filed, 37; adjudicated, 68; fee appeals filed, 141; adjudicated, 241; letters referred to the commissioner of pensions, 3.041; letters sent, 1,417. The assistant secretary makes several recommendations.

VICTORY FOR THE BELL TELEPHONE CO.

The United States patent office has issued a patent to Emile Berliner, assignor to the Bell Telephone Company, for a combined telegraph and telephone, which has been pending in that office since June 4, 1877. It is understood that the Bell Telephone Company believes that this patent covers features which are necessary to the practical use of telephones. Inventors do not take this view of the patent. They think that when Bell's basic patent expires, March 7, 1893, they will be able to produce practical telephones not infringing the Berliner patent. The issue of this patent is the second step taken by Commissioner Simonds, and possibly the last which it will be necessary to take, to practically dispose of a long existing tangle of telephone litigation in the patent office. The first step was his decision of Oct. 29, 1891, lately published, denying a telephone patent to Daniel Drawbaugh on his 1880 application, because that invention had been in public use for more than two years prior to that application, and also because the Supreme court had decided that Drawbaugh did not invent the telephone.

SPRINGER HOLDING HIS OWN.

The election of the officers of the next house is the live topic of the hour, and the interest is daily becoming stronger. In the speakership canvass the really effective work will not begin until after Thanksgiving. Few members will come to Washington to remain before then. Immediately after that time, however, the candidates for all the places will open headquarters and make the most vigorous fight possible. This preliminary campaign will really constitute the decisive work in the contest, and it is believed that when the caucus convenes there will be a comparatively short fight. No one anticipates a deadlock, and in whatever way the forces may line up at the start not more than three or four ballots, it is thought, will be necessary to make all the nominations.

It is certain that Mr. Springer is holding his own. His great personal popularity and the ability he displayed as presiding officer for nearly three months while the Mills bill was before the house for consideration indicate most clearly his admirable acquaintance with parliamentary law and usage. It was a most trying position, for the republicans exhausted every device known to legislative bodies in their filibustering against the bill. In all this long and most trying period Mr. Springer did not once become entangled in the mazes of motion after motion, and the perfect fairness of his rulings was conceded by Mr. McKinley and the other republicans who led the opposition.

ARBITRATION AS TO BERING SEA.

Two propositions are under consideration by the governments of the United States and Great Britain as to the proper course to pursue in the choice of an arbitrator or arbitrators to settle the vexed question of sealing in Bering sea. King Oscar of Sweden and Norway is the latest name presented by Great Britain if a single arbitrator is to be selected. On the other hand it has been suggested by the United States that a civilian commissioner would be a more satisfactory tribunal for the settlement of the problem. While nothing definite has been agreed upon, it is understood that the president and Secretary Blaine lean toward a commission similar to the famous Geneva "high jinks," when the Alabama claim cases were discussed and settled. For the United States it is contended that the whole matter is one of consideration by lawyers, and especially those versed in international law, and not for a crowned head who might not be so unbiased when a friendly power's interest is involved.

Opponents of arbitration assert that even if America and England should come to a satisfactory agreement, poaching would not thereby be prevented or the extinction of the seals. All that would be necessary would be for a vessel-owner to obtain a register for his craft in Germany, France, or even one of the South American republics, and pursue seal-killing right under the noses of the two big governments whose hands would be tied by arbitration, and the same vessels now engaged in the seal trade would pursue their calling although under a different flag. But with an agreement between the United States and Great Britain, and the co-operation of Russia, no country would interfere in behalf of poachers flying its flag. No country could afford to do so, and ocean patrol could be established which would shut the poachers out of Bering waters.

Sir Julian Pauncefote and Secretary Blaine have by mutual consent suspended consideration of this matter, pending a decision by the United States Supreme court in the schooners Sayward and Sylvia Hardy cases.

MINNEAPOLIS GETS IT.

Republican National Convention Meets There June 7, 1892.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—Minneapolis had twenty-nine votes on the seventh and last ballot and gets the convention.

The National Republican committee was called to order at 11:30 a. m. by Chairman Clarkson, immediately after which they went into secret session and elected General James S. Clarkson, of Iowa, chairman to succeed Senator Quay; Parrett A. Hobart, of New Jersey, vice chairman to succeed Mr. Clarkson; Wm. Borbour, of New York, treasurer, to succeed W. W. Dudley. All the elections were by acclamation. A roll call developed the presence of 48 out of 49 members of the committee, the only absentee being W. L. Ryerson, of New Mexico, and he had no proxy. After the executive session Representative McKenna and M. H. DeYoung, members of the committee from California, addressed the committee with arguments in behalf of San Francisco.

They spoke of the arguments that had been made in entertaining delegates, should San Francisco be selected, and presented a bond guaranteeing $50,000 for the expenses of the national convention.

Congressman-elect Campbell, of Illinois, spoke briefly for Chicago. He confined himself merely to reading resolutions passed by business men of Chicago disclaiming any desire on the part of that city to make a contest for the convention, but promised to do all that could be done to entertain the delegates should Chicago be chosen.

Michigan delegates were given the next hearing and ex-Congressman Brewer spoke in favor of Detroit. He was followed by ex-Congressman Allen in a brief address, endorsing what all his colleagues had said for Detroit. Senator Stockbridge closed for Detroit.

A recess was then taken, after which the call of states was proceeded with. Minnesota was called and Senator Washburne made appeals for Minneapolis. He made political addresses telling of hotel and hall accommodations, and presented a guarantee bond of the citizens of Minneapolis to defray the expenses of the convention. Governor Merriam, of Minnesota, and Charles W. Johnson, chief clerk of the United States senate, also spoke in favor of Minneapolis, as did Senator Casey, of North Dakota.

The other cities then had their claims presented by their different champions, after which the committee went into secret session and took an informal ballot. After the first informal ballot in secret session the committee took seven more ballots when Minneapolis received 29 votes and got the convention. June 7 is the day fixed upon for holding it.

FONSECA STEPS DOWN.

The Dictator of Brazil Said to Have Resigned.

LONDON, Nov. 24.—A dispatch just received from Rio de Janeiro says Da Fonseca has resigned in favor of Floriano Peixotte.

LONDON, Nov. 24.—Intelligence has just been received here that a revolution broke out in Rio de Janeiro. The object is to overthrow Da Fonseca. The insurrection seems to have been well planned and to have many adherents. The streets are filled with armed mobs, and the military are deserting the government. All is tumult and confusion. Foreign residents are endeavoring to leave the city. No particulars are yet obtainable.

GENERAL MARKETS.

CHICAGO.

WHEAT—Closed Nov., 93½c; Dec., 94¼c; May, $1.01¾.

CORN—Closed; Nov., 58c; Dec., 46⅝c; May, 43⅝c.

OATS—Closed; Nov., 33⅜c; Dec., 32c; May, 37c.

PROVISIONS—Mess Pork closed; Dec., $8.45; Jan., $11.27½; May, $11.62½. Lard—Closed; Dec., $6.20; Jan., $6.30; May, $6.60.

CATTLE—Quotations range from $5.50@5.85 for good to choice cattle; $5.00@5.40 good shipping steers; $2.85@4.10 common to fair steers.

HOGS—Sales ranged from $3.50@3.60 for light; $3.85@3.95 for heavy.

SHEEP—Quotations range from $3.75@4.75 for Western; $3.50@5.00 for natives and $4.00@5.30 for lambs.

WOOL—Quotations as follows:

Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana and Eastern Iowa.

Coarse tub	28@30c
Medium tub	31@33c
Fine unwashed	17@20c
Medium unwashed	22@26c
Coarse washed	28@30c

Nebraska, Dakota, Minnesota, Kansas and Western Iowa.

Fine unwashed	24@28c
Medium unwashed	17@20c
Coarse unwashed	14@18c

NEW YORK MONEY MARKET.

Money on call easy at 3 to 4 ⅌ cent: closed offered at 3 ⅌ cent.

Sterling exchange quiet and easy at 480¼ for 60-day bills and 483¼ for demand.

Government Bonds—Closing quotationss 4's, coupons, 116¾.

NEW YORK PRODUCE MARKET.

WHEAT—Closing prices: No. 2 red, Dec., $1.06½; Jan., $1.08¼.

CORN—Market closed: No. 2, Nov., 70c; Dec., 58¾c.

OATS—Market closed for Mixed Western, 38@41c; White do., 40@44c.

BUFFALO.

WHEAT—No. 1, hard, $1.05⅜.
CORN—No. 2, 55½c.

MILWAUKEE.

WHEAT—Cash, 91c; Dec., 90½c.
CORN—No. 3, 47c.
OATS—No. 2 White, 33c.

ST. LOUIS.

WHEAT—Cash, 92⅝c; Nov., 92⅞c.
CORN—Cash, 42½c; Nov., 42c.
OATS—Cash, 31c; Nov., 30⅝c.
PROVISIONS—Pork, $9.05. Lard, $6.05.

THE PROFESSIONAL MAGICIAN.

Modern Prestidigitateurs Are the Inventors of Few Tricks.

"Very few additions of importance have been made to the repertory of the professional magician within recent years," said an expert in prestidigitation to a reporter of the Washington Star. "The new tricks all require elaborate mechanical contrivances. It may be that they draw the public for awhile, but they do not furnish lasting attaactions.

"Take the 'vanishing lady' for example. In its way it was a wonderful thing, and the mechanism necessary was elaborate and costly; but every one knew that the woman must necessarily disappear through a trap in the stage, and the only mystery lay in the cleverness with which the feat was accomplished.

"Here was no illusion, properly speaking, nor anything to excite wonder. A trick to be really worth anything must be seemingly a miracle, inexplicable to the mind of the spectator.

"The best tricks are those requiring the least apparatus. No feat of magic ever attempted on the stage has created a more profound sensation than did the famous 'sphynx' when it first appeared in Europe. Even the scientific men went wild over it.

"It was the first thing of the kind ever seen, and for a long time no one suspected that the body to which the talking head belonged was concealed behind two mirrors that stood at an angle with each other beneath the table. The extreme simplicity of the means used for deceiving was the most effective point.

"But the performer is most successful when he employs for the purpose of legerdemain every-day articles such as people are accustomed to. Audiences are always entertained to see rabbits, guinea pigs, and other articles taken off-hand out of the hat of the fat gentleman who has been so imprudent as to take a front seat near the middle aisle.

"This sort of trick is much more simple and easily performed than you might suppose. I descend from the stage and borrow a silk hat from any gentleman who will give me one. The first things to be taken from the hat are already concealed on the inside of my coat.

"As I turn and regain the stage, with my back for a moment to the spectators, I quickly drop these articles into the hat. Then I face the audience once more, and draw the things out one by one, exhibiting much surprise.

"Some live animal may come first, because it is desirable to dispose of that as quickly as possible. Next, perchance, I pull out a wig, which always excites a roar of laughter. The other articles to be brought forth have been previously done up in many compact little bundles.

"Sometimes a single small package contains a quantity of hen feathers, so tightly done up that when they are taken out there seems to be enough of them to fill a mattress. Each bundle is so fixed that its wrapping can be disengaged in a second."

"Having pulled out of the hat all the things which had been previously taken from under my coat and put into it, I go to a shelf under pretense of brushing the tile and incidentally slip a number of other articles into it.

Then I come down toward the audience as if for the purpose of restoring the borrowed stovepipe, but suddenly pause and begin to draw out of it many things several times the size of the hat, such as bird-cages, trunks, etc., all of which are so made that they close up in very small compass. The springs that hold them in shape are released as each one is taken out.

"Of course, a trick like this requires a great deal of practice and skill, but its effectiveness is almost wholly due to the fact that it is performed with so commonplace an object as a borrowed silk hat. Perform a seeming miracle with a broom, a brick, or anything else that is exceeding commonplace and familiar and your feat excites infinitely more wonderment than if it were accomplished with an elaborate mechanical contrivance.

"When Pharaoh's magicians turned their walking-sticks into snakes they knew how to impress most strongly the minds of observers."

Remarkable Feat of Strength.

E. P. Kendall gave a remarkable exhibition of his skill and strength with a ten-pound dumbbell at noontime today. He matched himself against eight strong men employed upon the grade work about the county courthouse and agreed to put up from shoulder to arm's length a ten-pound dumbbell more times than the eight men could. Kendall has a limb which makes it necessary for him to use crutches, and, as he is of very slight build, the result of the contest appeared to be a foregone conclusion. One after another the eight men took their places, Kendall keeping time with each one, and after the eighth had dropped his arm from sheer exhaustion Kendall smiled pleasantly and ran up his score of consecutive lifts to an even 1,000. His best score with a twelve-pound bell is 2,600 lifts, and he has a brother who holds the world's championship.—Seattle Press-Times.

A Clock That Sounds "Taps."

An alarm clock is usually used for getting people up, not for sending them to bed, but I know of at least one authentic case in which the latter end was attained by it. A nervous, active woman who refused to take an afternoon nap because she "couldn't think of it until it was too late" was astonished by the gift of an alarm clock with the dial set exactly at three. It sounded a daily summons to a daily rest. Its imperative call could not be disregarded, and in a short time she found health and spirits much improved by this fantastic use of a familiar convenience.—Kate Field's Washington.

She (sternly)—"What was that noise I heard early in the hall this morning when you came in?" He (hastily)—"It must have been the day breaking, darling."—Baltimore American.

Decoration Day.

Read by James Whitcomb Riley at Army of Tennessee banquet, Chicago.

It's lonesome, sort o' lonesome—it's a Sunday to me,
It 'pears like, more'n any day I nearly ever see!
Yit with the stars and stripes above a-flutterin' in the air,
On every soldier's grave I'd love to lay a lily there.

They say, though, Decoration days is ginerlly observed
Most everywheres, especially by soldier boys that served,
But me and mother's never went—we seldom git away;
In p'int o' fact, we're allus to home on Decoration day.

They say the old boys marches through the streets in columns grand
A-follerin' the old war tunes they're playin' on the band,
And folks all j'inin' in—and little children, too,
All marchin' under shelter of the red, white and blue.

With roses, roses, roses; everybody in the town;
And crowds of little girls in white, jest fairly loaded down.
Oh, don't the boys know it, from their camp across the hill?
Don't they see their comrades comin' and the old flag wavin' still?

Oh, can't they hear the bugle and the rattle of the drum?
Ain't there no way under heaven they can ricochet us some?
Ain't there no way we can coax 'em, through roses, just to say
They know that every day on earth is their decoration day.

We've tried that, me and mother, where Elias takes his rest.
In the orchard, in his uniform and hands acrost his breast,
And the flag he died for, smilin' and a ripplin' in the breeze
Above his grave, and over that, the robin in the trees!

And yet it's lonesome, lonesome—it's a Sunday day to me,
It 'pears like, more'n any day I nearly ever see.
Yit, with the stars and stripes above a-flutterin' in the air,
On every soldier's grave I love to lay a lily there.

LIFE IN MINING REGIONS.

It Possesses a Fascination That Can Not Be Easily Shaken Off—Less Dangerous Than Supposed.

Mr. Albert Williams, Jr., a distinguished mining engineer of Denver, contributes an exceedingly interesting paper to the October number of the Engineering Magazine, under the caption "Modern Types of Gold and Silver Miners." It is replete with authentic information upon a subject which has been largely overdrawn by imaginative writers and he reveals a great deal that is worth knowing of the interesting career of precious metal miners as a class.

The traditional prospector will soon be as extinct as the dodo. He was a picturesque character in fiction and in reality, and he will be missed. His disappearance will not be due to the absence of ground to be prospected, but to the different conditions under which such work is now done. In early times the prospectors were literally gold-seekers; they were after surface placers. It takes but little time for enterprising, hardy men to overrun a considerable territory in the search for this class of deposits, easily discoverable by simple panning tests here and there, and only to be looked for in certain topographical situations, and the country has been so thoroughly gone over that the likelihood of finding anything of importance in the way of placers has been steadily lessened. The prospectors of to-day give their attention mainly to veins and lodes—deposits "in place," which are much more difficult to locate. The pioneers used to cover great distances, undergo almost inconceivable privations and hardships, and at times face dangers from hostile Indians. Now it is found that the immediate neighborhood of one's own camp is about as likely a place to prospect in as one farther away, and many of the best lode strikes have been made in the heart of districts where mining has been going on for years.

There is a fascination about mining life which, once having possessed a man, cannot easily be shaken off. A miner who has made a good stake by selling his locations at first proposes to himself to travel, then to settle down in his own original home; but after a little while he discovers that he himself has changed, that old ties have been broken and that he is disappointed in his former associations. Things at home seem to have inexplicably dwindled. An almost irresistible impulse, a transferred nostalgia, a longing for the clear, bracing mountain air and the liberal ways of the mines, then seizes him. It is difficult to content one's self with the monotonous life of the staider communities after having tasted a more exhilarating one. The attraction of the mines is not all in the hope of gain, though that of course has much to do with it. The friendships formed, the freedom of thought and custom, the spirit of camaraderie, and the entire absence of commercial competition have their influence as well. So numbers of men, having acquired a competence in mining, make their headquarters still in the mining country as a matter of preference, not necessity. Such men are much in the habit of taking short trips away, and are to be met with all through the highways and byways of travel. To be able to lead this pleasant, independent life is the dream of the less fortunate ones. Miners are very apt to disparage their calling while they are actively engaged in it; they may term it "a dog's life," but let them once be freed, mark how they hanker after it!

Some people suppose that a mining-camp is an unusually dangerous sort of place, full of desperadoes and "hold-ups," where every man carries his life in his hand. The misconception has been handed down from rougher, wilder times, and has been kept alive by the romancing of tenderfoot newspaper correspondents. A man is far safer in a mining-camp than on Cherry Hill, New York; Tar Flat, San Francisco, or large areas in any of our cities; much more indeed than in any parts of London or Paris. So far as robbery is concerned one is not safe anywhere, in the mountains or in the towns. As to affrays of other kinds a man who is sober, minds his own business and does not set up as a fighter would always be let alone. If he does not carry a "gun," so much the better for him, for there is among the roughest characters a certain sense of chivalry, which they would call "squareness," that prevents attack upon an unarmed man. The practice of carrying arms is not at all universal in the mountains. When pistols are worn they are kept out of sight. Indeed, there is not much use to a peaceful man in carrying arms at all. If he is "held up" by the "road agents" he is always at a disadvantage, being taken unexpectedly, and when they have the drop on him a motion toward the hip pocket would be to take large chances. If the custom—so far as it goes—of carrying weapons may sometimes lead to unpremeditated fatal encounters, it also has the effect of making men quiet in manner and cautious about giving offense, so that even "when whisky is talking" there is less noise and certainly less disposition for a rough-and-tumble fight than under similar circumstances in cities.

GULLS IN THE CLOUDS.

The gulls constitute the feathered ornaments of our harbors and shores, their singularly graceful flight, long slender wings and striking contrast in black and white rendering them particularly attractive, says the San Francisco Chronicle. On the various portions of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts their breeding places are found, but it is in the South, in isolated regions, that they are seen to the best advantage and in greatest numbers. Those who are familiar with the occasional white winged form flashing over the waters of the harbor or bay can form but little conception of the appearance of these birds en masse in the homes of their choice. On the southern borders of the United States there are several localities famous as bird collecting places, but none more interesting than Bird Key, in the Gulf of Mexico.

My first visit to the key was made while examining the wreck of a large ship that had grounded in years before and was a conspicuous object about two miles from the key. From the old wreck I noticed a singular dark cloud hanging low over the island, as though some mysterious smoke had risen from an invisible source and now floated over the spot. Poling the boat over the reef in that direction I soon solved the mystery. The cloud was alive, a mass of active fuss and feathers; birds, birds by the million, so it seemed. One or two came to meet us, and now a distinct murmuring sound was heard, growing louder and louder as we approached, until soon the roar was deafening.

The terns now left the island by scores and hundreds, flying about the boat with wild cries, darting down with menacing gestures. Myriads that had been upon the ground rose, and what had been an indefinite cloud became an almost solid mass of birds, creating a noise like thunder, so that as our boat crunched on the sandy beach our voices were lost and we could only hear each other by screaming. This had a singular effect, as on the second every individual ceased its clatter, silence profound seemed to reign and the birds dived or swooped down as if in fear, to rise again and continue the avian uproar

The sight was a most remarkable one. The birds were of two kinds—the blade-headed tern and the noddy—the former beautiful creatures, with dark heads and bright intelligent eyes, veritable spirits in the air and gale as they flitted about; while the noddies, which were sparsely represented, were dark, with a pale light patch upon the head. The gulls laid their eggs upon the ground, the noddies in rude nests upon the trees.

The island or key occupied several acres, perhaps twenty, and was covered with a low scrub of bay cedar nowhere more than ten feet in height, with here and there a patch of cactus or prickly pear. The birds had preempted every foot of ground, so that it was difficult to step or move in the bush without treading upon the attractive speckled eggs.

The domestic arrangements were simple enough, as the eggs were hatched by the sun and hot sand that cooled but little during the night from the baking it received during the day. The only enemies the birds had were the hermit crabs, that constitute the permanent settlers of the island.

A Paralyzed Bishop.

There is a good story told of the late archbishop of Dublin, Dr. Trench. In his latter years the good archbishop had the idea that he was suffering from incipient paralysis and was always fancying that he detected more or less of a numbness in his limbs. On one occasion he was at a dinner party, says the Irish Times and it was noticed that he was quite silent for awhile and looked grave. At the same time it was observed that the lady at his right-hand side was blushing deeply. At last his grace said in a lamentable voice:

"My worst fears are realized; there can be no longer any doubt of it."

"Of what?" asked the sympathetic hostess.

"That paralysis has really taken hold of me," answered the archbishop. "I am sure of it. I have been pinching my right knee for several minutes and I cannot feel the least sensation."

The lady on his right was able to comfort him.

"I hope it is not so bad as you think," she said; "it was my knee you were pinching."

A silk dress feels very like a silk apron, hence the archbishop's mistake.

Making Taffy at Home.

Some excellent taffy may be made by taking one quart of molasses and half a pound of butter, and boiling the two until the mass thickens. This will take about half an hour. Then stir with a spoon until, on taking out a little taffy, it becomes hard on immersion in cold water. Take half a teacup of vinegar, pour into the mass, and stir for half a minute. Then pour the taffy into buttered tins or dishes, and set aside to cool.—The Ladies' Home Journal.

Prince George of Wales the second son of the Prince of Wales, is an officer of the navy. He has lately been promoted to the rank of commander.

MISSED HIS CALLING.

He Couldn't Explain the Difference Between Rat-Traps and Potatoes.

A woman sat by the open basement window of a house on West Thirty-fifth street when a man came along with seven rat-traps and eight mouse-traps slung over his shoulder on a cord, says the N. Y. Evening World. He leaned on the fence, wiped his perspiring brow with a crippled handkerchief, and said:

"Madam, no lengthy explanation is demanded. I am selling mouse and rat traps. My stock is right here. Sell you a trap warranted to catch the cutest old rat in New York city for a quarter. These mouse-traps, warranted to entice the most bashful mouse in the state to his destruction, are only 15 cents. Might make the two 35 cents to you."

The woman was darning a hole in the heel of a long-handled black stocking. She darned and looked up, and darned and looked down, but she made no reply.

"Of course," said the man, as he detached one of the traps from the cord and held it out, "if you have no rats here you want no traps; but I take it you have rats. We all have 'em. That's where the rich can get no advantage over the poor. I don't say that it isn't cheaper to lay for a rat with a sledstake, but as a matter of convenience the trap is cheap. Savey, ma'am?"

She looked up again, turned the stocking wrong side out and back, and said nothing.

"A person not in the rat-and-mouse business gives little or no thought to statistics," continued the man as he rested one foot on the fence. "Have you any idea of the appalling increase of the rodent population? Probably not. I have met poets, editors, financiers, and statesmen who had given it no thought. As a matter of fact, ma'am, one pair of rats will multiply themselves 1,000 times in two years. One thousand rats will consume an average of $5,000 worth of provisions per year. One of my traps will catch 6,000 rats every 365 days. It is, therefore, a question whether you will invest 25 cents or lose $5,000. Could anything be plainer, ma'am?"

By this time she had got through with the hole in the heel and found one in the toe of the stocking. She looked up at him as she threaded the darning-needle again, but was silent.

"Mind you," said the man, after looking up and down the street, "I don't say that the rat shouldn't have a show. He was created for a purpose, the same as man, and simply because we happen to have the most intelligence we have no right to wipe him of existence. What I do contend, however, is that he must be kept within certain limits. Whenever, owing to number and rapaciousness, he becomes a menace to men's welfare he must go to the wall. It is with that end in view that rat-traps were invented, and that I come down from Yonkers to offer these traps at the low price of 25 cents each. I trust I have defined my position clearly, ma'am."

She bit off the yarn close to the stocking, turned it right side out, and passed her fingers over the spot, but her eyes were not even raised to his.

"I think I see how it is," he said, as he refastened the trap to the cord and prepared to move on. "I think I do. You have not made finance and domestic economy a study. You look at 25 cents paid out for a rat-trap as so much capital invested in a non-dividend paying investment. You do not figger"——

"Don't want any! We never buy potatoes of peddlers, anyhow."

He stood up and looked at her a minute with mouth wide open, and then, as the sash went down the curtain was drawn, he turned away with:

"I'll never make a living at it in the world! My line is windmills or sewing machines, or something that runs with a drive-wheel and does its own talking!"

Fading.

In a small town of northern Vermont the inhabitants are noted for their early marriages. An unmarried young woman who has passed her 25th birthday is universally regarded as an "old maid" and a young man who has reached the same age in an unwedded state is pronounced a confirmed bachelor, and the young people themselves appear to accept the current opinion.

One handsome young fellow, 26 years old, was a great trial to his mother, a bustling, energetic farmer's wife. As she lamented to a summer boarder, "it did seem as if Hiram was possessed to stay single," no matter what she could say.

"An' 'tain't likely," she would add, fretfully, "that any girl will be takin' up with him after a year or two, when he's settled down an' beginnin' to look old!"

Hiram himself was not given to sentiment, and furthermore was quite unconscious of his own attractions. He showed the summer boarder some dreadful photographs of himself, which had been taken the previous winter to please his mother, and remarked gravely:

"Mother was set onh avin' 'em, an' I only waited to see if I wa'n't likely to get any better lookin'. But come last winter I see I was beginnin' to fade, so I had 'em took right away!"

The contrast between the speaker's youthful appearance and his words was almost too much for his hearer.

Economy is Wealth.

Uncle Reub—"If them two sandwitches cost you 70 cents what in the name o' Shylock would they waut for a square meal?"

Fitts—"But 50 cents of that amount went to the waiter, you know."

Uncle Reub—"Dinged if it wouldn't have been a good scheme for us to have waited on ourselves, and then the house would have owed us 30 cents."—Indianapolis Journal.

"That little fellow deserves great credit to work as hard as he does to support his mother." "Perhaps he does, but then you can't very well give credit to a cash boy."—Baltimore American.

LINKVILLE LIKES SNAKES.

And According to This Account Linkville Has Any Number of Them.

The most unique locality to be found by the sportsman is probably that surrounding the town of Linkville, in Klamath county, Ore., says Forest and Stream. The town nestles at the foot of a large mountain, and lies right on the bank of what is locally known as Link river. This stream, which is quite large, connects the Upper and Lower Klamath lakes, is alive with thousands and probably millions of large fish, which are constantly passing to and fro between the two lakes, and are as constantly jumping out of water in sight of the town. They are of all sorts and sizes. Some of them appear to be cutting up these antics for the fun of the thing, and some to shake some kind of an eel-looking creature which attacks them in the water and becomes attached to their sides, causing the fish apparently much suffering. It is no uncommon thing for large fish to be taken there whose sides are all scarred up in consequence of these attacks.

It would not be surprising if many fish were thus destroyed. Probably there are not in the world two lakes more numerously stocked with trout than the Upper and Lower Klamath lakes. Judging by map measurement, they each average thirty miles in length by ten miles in width. Many large streams empty into them, affording splendid fishing and spawning grounds. Lying east of the Cascade range of mountains, where genuine winter prevails in the season for it, the water is better and the fish healthy and solid—features which do not prevail on the western side of the mountains, where an almanac has to be consulted to ascertain accurately the season of the year.

But to revert to Link river. There is another and very peculiar feature about its banks; they are a snake paradise. The blue ribbon—though it may have been consistently worn by the sportsman for the last decade of his life—will not prevent the seeing of tens of thousands of snakes in a walk of a mile from the town. They are of a harmless variety, and of all colors and sizes, six inches to six feet in length. On warm, sunny days they lie twisted together in heaps of hundreds, and it is not uncommon to see 3,000 of them in fifteen minutes' walk. If disturbed while taking their siesta, in their effort to get away they become twisted into the form of a cable as large as a man's body and can not move. According to an estimate made by one of the oldest and most intelligent inhabitants of that vicinity, there are snakes enough in that country to build a wall four feet wide and four feet high at least a mile long. Some of the farms there are fenced with walls laid up with round, water-worn stones. These walls constitute the home of thousands of these reptiles. If one of these walls is approached, from nearly every insterstice a snake's head will be projected with forked tongue forbidding trespass on their domain. What is singular about this whole affair is the protection afforded to these reptiles by the inhabitants there. They will not allow them to be killed or injured. Their children, familiarized with them from their birth, have no loathing or fear of the reptiles, but pick them up and play with them as any child does with a toy, under caution of the parents not to hurt them. The reasons given by the farmers and others for this protection are three. First, the farmers could raise no crops without their aid in destroying various bugs, insects, and vermin which would otherwise overrun the whole region with destruction of all living vegetation; second, the reptiles smell sickening enough living, but their stench is intolerable when dead; and third, they devour and reduce the number of frogs, and hereby hangs a tale.

Annually there descend upon Linkville and the surrounding country untold millions of little creatures, resembling a frog, and about the size of a small one, which are reminders of the biblical frogs of Egypt. Where they come from no one seems to know, but it is probable that they come from the rivers and lakes and Klamath marshes. Upon their arrival every door and window has to be closed against them, or they will invade the houses in countless numbers and dispute possession of every part thereof, even to the bed. There is no standing upon politeness at these times. The entrance to and exit from a house is done with instantaneous celerity and a resounding slam to the door, which, under ordinary circumstances, would betray a passionate mood. Of course the streets of the town are full of them. And now the snake takes his annual feast. And thus is nature's law of supply and demand fulfilled.

George Gould's Domestic Wife.

Mrs. George J. Gould, who was a Miss Edith Kingdon, is a famous young housekeeper, says The Ladies' Home Journal. She cares nothing for society—none of the Goulds do, no matter what is said to the contrary—but devotes all her time to her husband, her children and her home. She does all her own marketing, knows how to select a good joint, and, better still, knows how to cook it. Mrs. Gould is the wife of the prospectively richest man in America. She has millions at her command, yet she does not squander a penny. Her husband gives her a fixed income for household expenses, and a liberal allowance each year for clothing. She keeps a little book in which is set down the sums of money she receives and spends; and once each month she balances it, pays all bills, and begins a new account. She purchases every piece of clothing worn by her children, and often makes a special article of wear for them herself. Mrs. Gould is a firm believer that all wives should have a fixed allowance from their husbands for household and clothing expenses. It may be much or little, just as the husband can afford.

"Can I see Mr. X—— this morning?" "Mr. X—— went to a blow-out last night and is not yet presentable." "Indeed; what kind of a blow-out?" "Gas."—Buffalo Express.

BOOBIES, SURE ENOUGH.

Birds That Catch Fish for the Negroes of the African Coast.

A number of interested spectators were standing at the seawall at North Beach watching a party of youngsters who were angling for mud porgies through holes bored in the planking, says the San Francisco Examiner. The fish bit quite eagerly, and several were pulled through the holes and laid on the wharf within a few minutes. Finally one of the bystanders, turning to a companion, said:

"The queerest way to catch fish that I ever saw was on the African coast, where the natives do it by proxy."

"How is that?" inquired the other.

"Didn't you ever hear of it? No? Well, I'll tell you. One day we were cruising just above St. Paul de Loando, and were quite close in shore, when the mate, who had the glass screwed up to his eye as he looked toward the land, said: 'I wonder what those natives are doing in those canoes, sir?' pointing to a couple of canoes two or three miles off our lee bow.

"I took the glass, and, after looking a moment, I said they were either fishing or catching boobies. 'Making boobies do their fishing, I guess,' chimed in the second mate. I had heard about the natives making use of these stupid birds for such a purpose, but had never seen it, so I motioned to the man at the wheel to keep the ship away, and we ran down toward the canoes. It was a lovely day, and we had just a light breeze from the northward and westward, with a sea as smooth as a mill-pond. We were soon near enough to see the fishing operation distinctly.

"There was a flock of boobies hovering around and once in a while one of them would dart into the water and seize a fish. As soon as he got to the surface he would give it a toss in the air and as it came down catch it in his open bill. It would then be part way down his throat, with half the body and the tail sticking out. If left alone the bird would gradually work it down his gullet and dispose of it, but this he was not permitted to do. The moment he appeared on the top of the water one of the canoes was alongside and the poor booby was seized and dragged on board. One of the negroes would catch him by the throat, and, applying pressure, compel him to disgorge his prey, when he was at once released with the request—I presume that is what it was, for the rascals jabbered something very fast—that he go and catch another.

"The natives had been quite successful, as each of the canoes was well loaded with fish. After awhile I made signs to them to come alongside, and I bought about a bushel of the fish, giving them a ten-pound chunk of salt horse in return. The fish were mostly sea bass, weighing four or five pounds apiece, with a few pike among them."

A Conclusive Explanation.

"Philadelphia's a queer town," said the drummer at the Cadilac the other evening to the usual crowd of listeners. "Of course the grass doesn't grow knee-deep on Chestnut street, as the New Yorkers would have you believe, but, all the same, it is a fearfully quiet place, if you've been used to hustling. I was there on my last trip and had to go to the postoffice for a letter I was expecting. There was a yap evidently from Jersey at the general delivery window, and I had to wait for him. He was having a dispute with a very saucy young clerk, who was doing his best to queer the Jerseyman.

"'Did you say,' inquired the clerk, 'that you wanted a letter for Miss Philadelphia Pickling?'

"'Yes,' said the yap, 'I said Philadelphy Picklin'.'

"The clerk took out a pile of letters, ran over them, and tossed one onto the window-sill.

"'Is that right?' he asked.

"'Course,' replied the man studying the address a minute. 'Is that all?'

"'Course,' mimicked the clerk. 'You don't want the earth, do you?'

"'Yes, ef I can git it,' said the other unexpectedly. 'Got any more questions to ask?'

"'Well, yes, I have,' said the clerk slowly. 'Will you tell me if "Philadelphia" is that ladies real name, or is it a nickname? I never heard such a name for anybody.'

"'It's her nickname.'

"'And what in thunder did they give her such a name as that for?'

"'Cause she's so doggoned quiet that folks don't know half the time whether she's dead or asleep.

"As he got out to let me to the window he grinned till the back of his neck showed through, and the clerk's face was a study."—Detroit Free Press.

A Singular Horse.

A funny story is told of Dean Swift, who was a witty man, and fond of a joke at the expense of other people, as most witty people are. One very cold night, when he was travelling, he stopped at a little inn. There was only one fire in the house, and the guests of the inn, crowding about it, left no place for the new-comer.

With a solemn face Dean Swift called to the hostler, and told him to get a peck of oysters immediately and take them out to his horse.

"Will your horse eat oysters, sir?" asked the astonished man.

"Just take them out and see," said the horse's master.

The people around the fire stared at the man who owned this curious horse, and nearly every one of them left his seat and went out to see the remarkable horse eating oysters.

Then the cunning Dean made himself comfortable in the warmest corner, and ordered his supper.

Presently back came the hostler, with the disappointed crowd after him.

"He won't touch them, sir!" cried the hostler.

"Then take the foolish animal all the oats he can eat," replied Dean Swift. "You can bring the oysters here. I'll eat them for supper myself."—Harper's Young People.

There are 700 Americans residing in the City of Mexico, some of whom own the houses they occupy.

MISSING LINKS.

Experiments in growing tea plant are now being tried in southern California.

A cargo of copper recently carried out of Lake Superior was valued at $610,000.

The value of the timber in Fresno county, California, is estimated at $96,000,000.

At the time of birth the octopus, the renowned devil fish, is not larger than a common flea.

The population of Greece is increasing at a greater ratio than that of any other European country.

Paris publishes 1,998 papers, of which 105 are illustrated journals and twenty-one are devoted to the theatres.

Emperor William will not have a stenographer about him. He does his own shorthand writing with his left hand.

A torpedo has been tried at Horsea Island that can cut through a net without exploding. It is the invention of an Italian firm.

The directors of one of the principal railway companies in Great Britain are considering the proposal for the entire removal of the class system.

One of the largest hospitals in the world, containing accommodation for from 1,000 to 1,500 patients, has been opened at Constantinople, Turkey.

The British poacher is now being followed by the electric search light. A light several miles away recently detected and identified a couple of them.

There are 161 important steam navigation companies in the world, of which the English own 64, the French 35 and the Germans 12. In the United States there are 15.

The crown prince of Greece has not emerged from his palace since the death of his sister, the Grand Duchess Paul of Russia, as his devotion to her was almost idolatry.

The average age of British soldiers is twenty-seven years; their death rate is nine per 1,000, and of every 100 seventy are English, twenty Irish, eight Scotch and two colonial.

Black potatoes called "cetewajo" are raised in Zululand. Some philologist should explain whether the famous king gave them their name or took his own appellation from them.

Densely populated as it is in some places, the earth has room for a great many more people. It is estimated that there are twenty-two and a half acres for every living person.

Along the creole coast, between Mobile and New Orleans, roses of the Marechal Niel, Jacqueminot and other rare varieties are abloom all winter, no matter what the weather is.

Browning's organized devotees in London have concluded that their work of elucidating his work is about done; and the society has voted to dissolve after this month's session.

A French critic, Mirabeau, says Maurice Maeterlinck, a new writer in Belgium, has put into his "Princess Maleine" things more beautiful than the most beautiful things in Shakspeare.

The famous violinist, Dr. Joachim, recently patronized a Berlin barber, who, not recognizing his customer, remarked: 'Really, sir, you must allow me to cut your hair a good deal shorter; otherwise you will be taken for a fiddler."

Some one has discovered a book in Dublin with the words of "The Messiah" as sold at the first performance in that city in 1741. It shows that "He shall feed his flock" was taken right through by one voice, the contralto, who was Mrs. Cibber.

After thirty years' struggle against an adverse destiny the leviathan steamship Great Eastern was beached on the shores of the Mersey, near Liverpool, and for many months past a dozen men have been knocking her to pieces. Her bones sold for $100,000.

According to an Italian professor, our beautiful blonde sisters are rapidly disappearing, owing to the too hearty indulgence of the meat diet. Our informer further says that in the next few centuries golden tresses will vanish from the face of the globe.

The young countess of Dudley has the credit of owning the richest collection of jewels in England—not including diamond eyes, ruby lips, a mouthful of pearls, and the other gems that novelists are in the habit of bestowing upon their heroines.

Among the recent products of wire manufacturing is one having a measurement of 1-500th of an inch in diameter—much finer, of course, than the hair of one's head. The wire is drawn through what is practically a hole in a diamond, to which there is no wear.

An Indiana man while fishing recently found a very fine pearl. It had fallen from a mussel shell and was lying on the bar. It weighs two and a half pennyweights, and was pronounced a very fine specimen. The man claims that he was offered $300 for it.

The weasels are said to be killing off the rabbits in Tulare county, California. The creature comes up behind bunny as he sits at peace with all the world, and, springing upon his back, clings and sucks his life-blood as he runs, until he drops dead from exhaustion.

Little Sammy's grandmother was not a very old lady, but had a deeply wrinkled face. She had taught him to call her Mrs. Baker, but never told him the reason why. One day Sammy was talking about Mrs. Baker. Some one asked him, "Who is Mrs. Baker?" He replied: "Don't you know Mrs. Baker? Why, she is that lady over there with the cracked face."

The dome of the new city hall in Philadelphia will be constructed of aluminum instead of iron, as at first proposed. It will save the expense of frequent painting and reduce the weight of the tower about four hundred tons. The bronze statue of Penn that is to surmount the tower is to be thirty-seven feet in height and about forty thousand pounds in weight. The clock face is to be twenty-three feet in diameter.

THE NEWS.

[illegible]

A POPULAR FAMILY.

JENNIE: "How is it, Kate, that you always seem to 'catch on' to the last new thing? Do what I may, you always seem to get ahead of me."

KATE: "I don't know; I certainly do not make any exertion in that direction."

JENNIE: "Well, during the last few months, for example, you have taken up painting, without any teacher; you came to the rescue when Miss Lafarge deserted her Delsarte class so suddenly, and certainly we are all improving in grace under your instruction; I heard you telling Tommy Eames last evening how his club made mistakes in playing baseball; you seem to be up on all the latest 'fads,' and know just what to do under all circumstances; you entertain beautifully; and in the last month you have improved so in health, owing, you tell me, to your physical culture exercises. Where do you get all of your information from in this little out-of-the way place?—for you never go to the city."

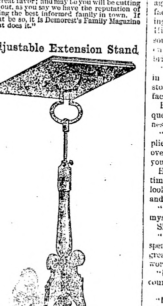
KATE: "Why, Jennie, you will make me vain. I have only one source of information, but it is surprising how it meets all wants. I very seldom hear of anything new but what the next few days bring me full information on the subject. Magic? No! Magazine! And a great treasure it is to us all, for it really furnishes the reading for the whole household: father has given up his magazine that he has taken for years, as he says this one gives more and better information on the subjects of the day; and mother says that it is that that makes her such a famous housekeeper. In fact, we all agree that it is the only really FAMILY magazine published, as we have sent for samples of all of them, and find that one is all for men, another all for women, and another for children only, while this one suits every one of us; so we only need to take one instead of several, and that is where the economy comes in, for it is only $2.00 a year. Perhaps you think I am too lavish in my praise; but I will let you see ours, or, better still, send 10 cents to the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th Street, New York, for a sample copy, and I shall always consider that I have done you a great favor; and may be you will be cutting us out, as you say we have the reputation of being the best informed family in town. If that be so, it is Demorest's Family Magazine that does it."

Adjustable Extension Stand



Book Stand, Music Stand, Atlas Stand, Album [illegible] Stand, Flower Stand, also Lamp, Lecture, [illegible] Library, Office, [illegible] and Checker Stand [illegible] Hard wood, rubbed finish, height 24 inches [illegible] Weight 12 lbs, size of top [illegible] Price $5. KEELER & CO., Fur[illegible] 81-91 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

[illegible] Service,

[illegible] St. P. M. [illegible] of this line [illegible] St. Paul and [illegible]

[illegible] Vestibuled [illegible] at 7:30 p. m. [illegible] Chicago in 13½ [illegible] to St. Paul in 13 [illegible]

[illegible] St Paul at [illegible] to Chicago [illegible] to and from Chicago [illegible] in 13 hours and 45 [illegible]

[illegible] line running all its [illegible] 14 hour between St. [illegible] Chicago, and while this [illegible] don't have to run at [illegible] to make their time [illegible] this is shorter [illegible]

[illegible] this is the only [illegible] connections are assure[illegible] all fast time trains from [illegible] East and South in the [illegible] night.

[illegible] by this line are always [illegible] other.

[illegible] Gen'l Passenger Agent

Consumption Cured.

[illegible] physician, retired from practice, [illegible] in his hands by [illegible] missionary the formula [illegible] vegetable remedy for the [illegible] permanent cure of Consumption, [illegible] Catarrh, Asthma and all [illegible] Lung Affections, also a positive [illegible] for Nervous Debility [illegible] complaints, after [illegible] wonderful curative powers [illegible] has felt it his [illegible] to his suffering [illegible] this motive and [illegible] suffering I will [illegible] who desire it, [illegible] French or English, [illegible] preparing and using [illegible] by mail, by addressing with [illegible] this paper. W. A. NOYES, [illegible] Block, Rochester, N. Y.

[illegible] can be earned at our NEW line of work, rapidly and honorably, by those of either sex, young or old, and in their own localities, wherever they live. Any one can do the work. Easy to learn. [illegible] everything. We start you. No risk. You can devote [illegible] or all your time to the work. This is an [illegible] success to every worker [illegible] from $25 to $50 per week and upwards, [illegible] We can furnish you the employment [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] hurried to soften it.

HIS SECOND CAMPAIGN

BY MAURICE THOMPSON

COPYRIGHTED BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION 1891

"I will keep the secret—I have kept it. Rosalie shall never know. Pardon my bitter mood just now—it took me unawares."

Her voice had recovered its gentleness almost as suddenly as it had lost it. This served to recall him to his immediate surroundings and to a sense of the generous sacrifice this injured woman was making. At the same time, by some indirect action, Adelaide's impulse of kindness fanned to flame a sudden hope in his breast that all was not lost. His hungry heart caught at something in her voice that seemed to come from Rosalie.

"Miss Chenier, have you known this all the while?" he presently inquired.

"I had not meant to tell it," she said. "I am sorry I have allowed my feelings to get control of me. You will try to forget all about it, won't you?"

"And Rosalie," he murmured; "what will she say?"

"She must never, never know it," said Adelaide earnestly.

He took a hasty turn or two across the floor.

"And your father?" he added, stopping short and looking anxiously at her.

She made a quick gesture.

"He could not bear it," she exclaimed; "he would be terrible." She came close to him, and almost in a whisper added:

"We must never tell any one."

Julian began to walk back and forth again, his hands locked behind him, his face pale and creased with intense feeling. She followed him with her eyes. His suffering appealed to her impulsive southern heart, more strongly perhaps on account of the share she had taken in bringing it on.

"Do you think it would be honorable in me to hold this a secret?" he said, stopping again and turning his clouded face inquiringly toward her.

Her cheeks flushed as the reflex of his question reached her own self consciousness.

"I cannot say," she immediately replied. "I have thought it all over and over, and I have not decided. What do you think?"

He lowered his eyes and stood for a time gazing at the floor. Presently he looked up quickly, almost resentfully, and said:

"I shall tell your father and Rosalie myself."

She started a little.

"I believe I would not," she said, speaking slowly, as if thinking with great care; "you might make it all the worse for everybody concerned."

"But I must," he urged; "no other course would satisfy my conscience."

"I suppose you are right," she said with a sigh, "but I dread the result. Wouldn't it be better to wait awhile and"——

"No, at once. I should be afraid to brood over it; the temptation to hide the whole thing might overcome me. But you, Miss Chenier—what shall I ever do to win back your respect? I cannot allow you to hate me if I can help it. I feel your situation, and"——

"Let us not discuss that further," she hurried to say; "we cannot change the past."

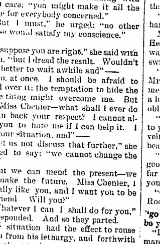
"But we can mend the present—we can make the future. Miss Chenier, I cordially like you, and I want you to be my friend. Will you?"

"Whatever I can I shall do for you," she responded. And so they parted.

The situation had the effect to rouse Julian from his lethargy, and forthwith he set about trying to overcome the obstacles in his way.

CHAPTER XXV.

A DRIVE.



Falling heavily outstretched upon some rails beside the road.

Mrs. Roosevelt saw that something had gone wrong. It was plain to her that Julian's return to her house could have but one meaning, and she had hoped to see Rosalie become his wife, if she loved him. She did not inquire into the cause of the trouble which seemed obscurely at work, thinking that it would probably be of short duration.

One morning Mr. Roosevelt invited Julian to drive with him to a certain house, some miles in the country, where a trivial business affair demanded his attention. The vehicle was an open buggy drawn by a span of fast bay horses. Mr. Roosevelt drove.

"I shall show you some wild jungles and some beautiful open country," he said as they started from before the gate at Roosevelt Place. "If it were not so late in the season we might take the guns. Quails are abundant in the old fields."

"I shouldn't care to shoot today," said Julian; "somehow I feel averse to exercise of any active sort. This climate, it seems, has enervated me."

"That is what all northern men say after they have been here awhile. How do you account for it?"

"I did not feel it when I was a soldier," responded Julian.

"But then you were not this far south, were you?"

"Oh, yes; I was here with Sherman's raiders, prowling about in the city for several days."

"Ah, I was not aware."

"I had forgotten to tell you," said Julian; "I ought to have told you at first, so that you could have exercised your right to refuse hospitality to one who"——

"Not at all, sir—do not mention it," said Mr. Roosevelt quickly. "I hold no grudge against a Union soldier; I respect him, I assure you, sir."

"So many things were done by our soldiery," responded Julian; "things calculated to make southern folk bitterly hate us."

"Oh, yes; but an army is scarcely expected to have drawing room manners. It would be wicked folly for us to allow what a man did as a soldier to be weighed against him as a citizen and a friend."

"Yours is a noble view, Mr. Roosevelt," said Julian. "I cordially agree with you, but there were special cases, like burning houses and destroying homes"——

"I know, I know," Mr. Roosevelt hastened to say, "but where one does not hesitate to kill a man, why ought he turn aside from burning a house or sacking a town? Murder is said to be a higher crime than arson."

"True, but I doubt if it is ever more bitterly resented."

"Our southern people, I believe, have thought more of their homes than the northern people have of theirs; and the reason may be found in the fact that we are not so thickly settled, and consequently live more exclusively domestic lives."

"I had not thought of that," said Julian.

"Our wealthy planters and their families suffered dreadfully in the line of Sherman's march," said Mr. Roosevelt. "They lost their homes, their slaves, their plantations—everything—and came out at the end of the war even poorer than the crackers."

"Yes, I readily see their peculiarly hard fate," Julian said thoughtfully.

Mr. Roosevelt did not respond to this. He leaned to one side and silently watched the graceful movements of his swiftly going horses.

"I have just discovered something, Mr. Roosevelt, which greatly troubles me," Julian abruptly began again after a long space of silence; "and it would oblige me if you would counsel me."

"I shall be very glad to be of service to you, sir, I assure you," said Mr. Roosevelt looking up, with cordial generosity beaming from his face.

"I don't know that you can do me any good," Julian continued, "it may be too far gone for that, but I desire to have your opinion."

"Certainly, sir, certainly," said Mr. Roosevelt, as Julian seemed to hesitate; "go on freely; anything I can offer will be yours."

"In the first place, then," the young man said, "I love your niece, Miss Rosalie Chenier."

"That would seem quite natural and proper, sir," said Mr. Roosevelt, smiling pleasantly and speaking gently and slowly.

"In the next place," added Julian, "I have discovered that I am the very man who burned down Colonel Chenier's mansion in North Georgia as we were tramping and fighting through that region."

Mr. Roosevelt looked steadily and kindly at his companion, but said nothing.

"But worst of all," continued Julian, "I ran a bayonet through Miss Adelaide Chenier's arm."

Mr. Roosevelt drew up the horses so suddenly at these last words that they came to a standstill in the middle of the street.

"You cannot mean to say"—he slowly began; but Julian interrupted him.

"Yes, I do mean to say that I bayoneted a woman—Adelaide Chenier—and she has recognized me. Now, Mr. Roosevelt, what shall I do?"

This was so sudden and startling a revelation that Mr Roosevelt could not respond at once. He touched the horses and shook the lines a little. They sped forth from the street into a shaded lane where the perfume of wild flowers loaded the air. Jasmine vines covered the broken fences, violets purpled the ground, mocking birds were everywhere. A gaunt old negro, with a dilapidated army musket on his shoulder, stood withdrawn among the tree shadows gazing at them as they passed.

"Can you fully realize my case, do you think?" Julian added.

"No, sir, I cannot. I never stabbed a woman in my life," responded Mr. Roosevelt. He shook the lines again, and the horses went still faster.

Julian's face darkened and reddened. He bit his mustache and glared at the dashboard.

"Mr. Roosevelt, I have spoken to you as a gentleman and a friend," he presently said; "I am in trouble and need counsel. I do not"——

"How can I advise you, sir?" said the old man interrupted. "True advice presupposes sympathy."

"And you cannot sympathize with me, of course."

"I can hardly say; but I have liked you very much, sir. It is hard for me to couple you with acts of downright vandalism. You have impressed me as a chivalrous and spotless gentleman."

"I am not a soldier now, and I do not think and feel and act as a soldier. Of course in the wild excitement of war I was a zealot in the Union cause. I am not sorry that I was, but I do regret that one act. I wish I could recall it."

As he spoke Julian felt the emptiness of his words. They were flat and fell dead on the air, as does the report of a fowling piece on an open prairie.

"I should think it would not be a pleasant thing to remember," said Mr. Roosevelt, urging the horses a little more, as if this shaking of the lines served in some way to relieve his feelings.

"But how can I help it now?" he presently said, putting his hand on the old man's arm.

Mr. Roosevelt did not answer; he only shook the lines again.

The horses were now going very fast, making the buggy bound and sway and its wheels sing keenly.

"One oughtn't to be hated for what he did"——

A loud report rang out beside the road just ahead. The negro had fired at a bird. The horses reared together and whirled short about with the buggy before Mr. Roosevelt could check them. Under the sudden strain the spring over which Julian sat snapped in two, and the young man was sent whirling a rod away, falling heavily outstretched on some rails beside the road. A line also parted, and then the horses became unmanageable. They ran and kicked like demons, dragging Mr. Roosevelt, in the midst of the wrecked vehicle, back along the road toward the city. Julian was senseless.

The farther the horses ran the wilder and more furious they grew. They dashed the buggy into shreds, and left Mr. Roosevelt wounded and bleeding a half mile from where they started.

The negro who fired the shot had a hard time of it, wandering about in Savannah hunting a physician. Luck had seemed against him. He was twice directed wrong, and then when he did at last find a physician's office the doctor himself was gone. But it chanced that when, after great tribulation, he found a doctor, Mr. Roosevelt's family physician was the one.

Julian had somewhat revived when they reached him. At the same time a welcome sound of wheels and horses' feet greeted their ears. Two vehicles, a buggy and a carriage, came swiftly up, and a spry, smooth faced old man descended from the former.

"Ah, bless me, bless me, how's this?" he quietly ejaculated, glancing from Mr. Roosevelt to Julian and back again, with the quick, keen look of a trained surgeon. Then he pounced upon Julian and began testing his pulse. He motioned to a young man who had accompanied him, and gave an order in an undertone. A medicine case was produced, and a few drops of liquid from a phial were put into Julian's mouth.

It was a terrible shock to the household at Roosevelt Place when the injured men were brought in. Julian was carried to his room in an almost insensible state. Mr. Roosevelt's hurts were comparatively light—mere cuts and bruises that might keep him indoors for a few days.

Rosalie was standing on the stairway when the carriages came to the gate. She turned and ran up to her room, and from the window saw Ellis and three or four others lifting Julian, pale and apparently dead, down from the cushioned couch in the carriage. The first thought that entered her mind was that Ellis had killed Julian in a duel. All her blood seemed to flow in upon her heart, and she gripped the window frame for support. She saw, as through a glass darkly, that group of laboring forms pass into the house bearing the heavy, solemn load, and then she slid down to the floor and lay in a little dark heap over which her yellow hair strayed in loose, shining curls. She had not swooned—she was too strong for that—but a feeling of utter horror and despair had crushed her down as if by its mere weight.

When, after a long while, Adelaide came to look for her she was still there, silent, tearless, numb, with the intensity of her suffering.

When she learned that it had been an accident and not a duel, and that Julian was not dead, her relief was very great; but there remained a nameless dread, and something in Adelaide's voice and manner added to her distress.

Adelaide had tears in her eyes, and she was wringing her hands slowly as she began walking to and fro in the room.

"It is awful!" she exclaimed, in her calm, suppressed way; "and oh, Rosalie, if he should die without knowing that I have forgiven him!"

"Forgiven him?" echoed Rosalie, "forgiven him for what?"

Adelaide stopped and looked strangely at her sister. True enough, Rosalie did not know. Ought she to tell her? Perhaps it would be best; but she could not.

"We had a foolish disagreement," she presently said; "I will tell you sometime, not now."

"But he will not die—oh, Adelaide, he will not die, will he?" cried Rosalie, with a sudden gush of tears.

"I do not know, dear," the sister replied, her voice struggling to hold its even, gentle flow.

They stood there facing each other, their faces pale, their lips trembling and their eyes shining with intense distress. They did not heed the balmy wind tide flowing through the room, nor the song of the mocking bird gayly falling from the tree by the window.

CHAPTER XXVI.

JULIAN INTRODUCES HIMSELF TO COLONEL CHENIER.

Edgar Julian's hurts proved very serious, though the physician from the first pronounced them not necessarily dangerous to his life. He was compelled to lie in a constrained attitude and submit to any amount of poulticing and dosing, which was very hard for him to bear. Colonel Chenier of his own choice became Julian's nurse and companion through his season of pain. When the young man was well enough to bear conversation they retold together their war reminiscences and adventures, Julian all the time circling around, without ever quite reaching, the one memory which of all others was bitterest to him. He tried from every direction to pave the way for a full confession; but whenever he neared the point Colonel Chenier would frighten him away by some indication of resentfulness.

"I am the man."

Julian's training as a lawyer had taught him the art of approaching a point by every manner of indirection and circumlocutory device. He tried to educate Colonel Chenier by gradual approaches, so that finally the strange and ugly truth, when it should be disclosed, would not excite any undue passion. He was patient, and he strove to be both wise and cunning. Of course Colonel Chenier did not dream of Julian's object. But all the same he was quite refractory; he refused to be educated up to Julian's notion of what was pardonable on the score of being military necessity or the legitimate result of the excitement and prejudice of civil war. He was a southerner of the old school—a believer in the antebellum past, a worshiper of chivalry and the Lost Cause, a good hater of innovation. His pride went on high, old fashioned stilts, from which it would not come down for anything. When at last Julian did disclose his secret it was with all the heroic swiftness and mercilessness of a surgical operation.

"Colonel Chenier," he said, "I am going to be well before long, and then I suppose I shall have to go back to Chicago. I feel that I ought to say to you before I go that I love your daughter Rosalie and desire to marry her."

Colonel Chenier looked grave, and did not reply at once. He was not taken by surprise, but the matter was of such vast import that in his judgment it ought to be proceeded with slowly.

"Have you Rosalie's consent?" he at last very deliberately inquired.

Julian moved painfully upon his bolsters, and thus gained time to consider of his answer; but he could frame no evasive phrase; he simply said:

"No, but I hope to get it."

Colonel Chenier smiled grimly.

"Girls are very uncertain, sir; very uncertain. Perhaps I would better reserve consideration of the question until you are sure."

"No," responded Julian quickly, "that is just what I do not want you to do. I am sure, from reasons of my own, that I ought to know, before I speak further to her, how you would regard my marriage with your daughter."

"I regard you very highly, sir," said Colonel Chenier, "and, so far as I am concerned, should be proud to call you my son. It is for Rosalie herself to decide the matter."

Julian lay for a few delicious minutes reveling in the exquisite charm of this announcement, forgetful for the time of all that lay between him and his heart's desire. Since his accident he had spent most of his waking hours, when alone, in thinking of Rosalie and conjuring up a thousand absurd reasons for her strange elusiveness. Sometimes he caught the sound of her voice coming from other rooms as she went about the house. She sent flowers to him every day, but as yet she had not come to see him, though Adelaide often had.

"I am glad you are not against me," he presently said; "I have been dreading you, terribly dreading you. It seemed to me so probable that you would oppose me—so natural that you would not like to have your daughter marry a—a—marry one of Sherman's men."

Colonel Chenier had been looking out of the window which opened near Julian's couch; he now turned his eyes upon the young man's face, and in a tone of warm good fellowship said:

"I am a southerner, sir, but I hope I am no fanatic. Why should I object to you on the ground that you were on the other side? The war is over and that issue is settled forever. A soldier, sir, honors those who honorably fought him."

"It is doubly noble in you to talk like this, Colonel Chenier," exclaimed Julian, "when personally you have suffered so much. Your home burned up, your fortune torn from you and your physique wrecked; and then your dead sons, and"——

Colonel Chenier interrupted him with a gesture of command and said:

"All that fell from the hand of fate. War is a calamity. I hold no grudge. Let the dead past bury its dead."

"Can you make that sentiment good, Colonel Chenier? Can you bear up against every temptation to hold a grudge?" said Julian, trembling as he spoke.

"Yes, sir, I should call it unmanly to rake over the embers of the war now to gratify personal spite. I hope I am on a higher plane," said Colonel Chenier.

"Then you can forgive the man who burned your house and bayoneted your daughter?" cried Julian excitedly.

Colonel Chenier's face darkened. He

Green Bay, Winona & St. Paul

Railroad. Best and most Direct Line Between

LACROSSE,
WINONA,
Neillsville,
Eau Claire,
Grand Rapids,
Stevens Point,
New London,
Appelton,
Neenah,
Menasha,
Oshkosh,
Fon du Lac,
GREEN BAY,

And all Points in
EASTERN WISCONSIN,
Iron Districts of Northern Michigan and Lake Superior Regions.

Close Connections and Quick Time.

See That Your Ticket Reads Via
GREEN BAY, WINONA & ST. PAUL Railroad,

S. W. Champion,
Superintendent, Green Bay, Wis.
J. B. Last,
Ass't Gen. Pass. Agt., Green Bay, Wis.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

(First publication Dec. 3.)

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of fifty and 25-100 dollars, interest, which became due on the twenty-first day of November 1891, which default has continued to the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Luc Dumas, mortgagor, to D. S. B. Johnston Land Mortgage Company, a corporation duly incorporated and organized under the laws of the state of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the twenty-first day of November, 1887, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 22nd day of November, A.D. 1887, at 4:15 o'clock p. m., in book 58 of mortgages, on page 122.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said D. S. B. Johnston Land Mortgage Company, mortgagee, to William J. Peck, by written assignment, dated the twenty-fourth day of April, A.D. 1888, and recorded in the office of said register of deeds, on the ninth day of May, A. D. 1888, at 1 o'clock p. m., in book 36 of said mortgage records, on page 95;

And whereas, the said William J. Peck, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of six hundred fifty and 25-100 dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent per annum from the twenty-first day of November, A. D. 1891, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz:

The south west quarter (sw¼) of section twenty two (22), in township one hundred forty nine (149) of range forty-five (45) containing one hundred [illegible] acres more or less, according to [illegible] government survey thereof, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and [illegible] which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, or his deputy, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the [illegible] day of January, 1892, at [illegible] o'clock p. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of six hundred fifty and 25-100 dollars and interest, and eighty-six and 15-100 dollars taxes paid by said assignee on said premises, and [illegible] dollars, attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 3, 1891.

WILLIAM J. PECK, Assignee of Mortgagee.

D. [illegible] Attorney for Assignee of Mortgagee, 322 Hennepin ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Nov. 27th 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named [illegible] has filed notice of his intention to make final [illegible] in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register or Receiver U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on January [illegible], 1892, viz: [illegible] for the N E [illegible] Twp 151 R 44.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:

John T. Beaudry, Crookston, Louis Arbert, Ambroise Delorme, Louis Guillemette all of Red Lake Falls, Minn.

dec. 3-jan 6

Hugh Thompson Register

State of Minnesota, county of Polk—ss.

In Probate Court, Special Term, Nov. 16th, 1891.

In the matter of the estate of Pierre Montbriant ceased:

On reading and filing the petition of Esther Dubuque of the town of Gentilly in the county of Polk, representing, among other things, that Pierre Montbriant, late of the county of Polk in the state of Minnesota, on the 11th day of April, A. D. 1890, at the county of Polk died intestate and being an inhabitant of this county at the time of his death, leaving goods, chattels and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is the widow of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to Esther Dubuque granted.

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before this court, on Tuesday, the 8th day of December, A. D. 1891, at 2 o'clock p. m., at the probate office, in the city of Crookston in said county.

Ordered further, that notice thereof be given to the heirs of said deceased, and to all persons interested, by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Red Lake Falls News, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 16th day of November, A. D. 1891.

By the Court,
C. M. Ienson, Judge of Probate.

oc15-29

First National Bank

RED LAKE FALLS, MINN.

JAS. I. WYER, Pres.
JOS. SMITH, Vice President.
THEO. GARCEAU, Cashier

Capital....$50,000.
Surplus.....$5,000.

Careful Attention and Prompt returns given all Collections.

ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

Friday evening Dec. 11th.

Get out your hats and parasols.

Now we are getting our Indian summer.

Fritz Gerke took a trip to Thief River Falls, Friday.

The artesian (?) well has been abandoned for the present.

Dolphus Champoux drove over from Badger Creek Tuesday.

The erection of St. Joseph's church does not progress rapidly.

The phenomenon of a rainbow in December attracted attention Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Payne ar the happy parents of a very young son.

The pleasant face of Miss Victoria La Freniere was seen in town yesterday.

Mrs. Joseph Smith and Mrs. H. A. McClatchie spent Tuesday in Grand Forks.

August Moreau, the popular salesman, has taken a position with Joseph Smith & Co.

Oscar Simenson and Andrew Lavik drove to Crookston Monday, returning Tuesday.

Josh Billings says he don't believe in signs, but likes to have them point the right way.

The chimney burning at J. P. Harren's Tuesday night caused a flutter of excitement.

Pat McNerthney smiles. His harvest was 1000 bushels of wheat, 700 of oats and 300 of corn.

Joseph L. Stewart and wife now occupy apartments in the Gosselin building on Bottineau av.

For every dollar purchase you make at the Drug and Jewelry Store you will receive a 25c present.

The Crookston Daily Tribune has been enlarged to a seven-column quarto. It is wide awake and admirable.

Lillie Pepin, the two year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Pepin of Ridge, died of dyphtheria last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph La Bissoniere and family have gone to Neihart, Montana, there to reside in the future.

Mrs. Otto Zaiser took the train Tuesday morning for East Grand Forks where she will visit her sister Mrs. Fred Borchers.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Z. Perron are entertaining the former's sister and husband, who arrived Tuesday from Stevens Point Wis.

Adam Schmitz has been circulating a subscription list this week to raise funds for the purchase of a bell for St. Mary's church.

Miss Louise La Bissoniere returned from Crookston Tuesday, after a pleasant six weeks' visit with hersister Mrs. L. Benoit.

Fresh-air Boy (looking at farmer's ruminating herd): "Mister do you have to buy chewing-gum for all those cows?" —(Life.

Miss Rebecca Brunelle has accepted a position at the popular general merchandise establishment of H. M. Kaus on Main st.

Napoleon Roy of Louisville thrashed 2,000 bushels of grain and did not have half a bushel spoiled by moisture. He had his grain stacked.

W. A. Alexandar, of Casselton, N. D., is enjoying a deer hunt in the vicinity of Lambert. Upon his arrival here he was a guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Duffy.

To Mr. and Mrs. Carl Kretzschmar was last week born a son. To say the genial Carl is walking on stilts is expressing it mildly. Carl Jr. has our best wishes.

Charley Mead and Edmurd Bray drove to Crookston yesterday. The boys started at 11 a. m. and returned about 7 p. m. We consider this as making pretty quick time.

Miss Lizzie A. Boyle will open a term of school in Gentilly, Monday. The Gentilly people are to be congratulated upon securing the services of so efficient a teacher.

Draper's thrashing outfit was laid up for repairs a couple of days this week, but is again at work. In moving the separator from McNerthney's place, the front axel was broken off on both sides.

Miss Laura Bottineau received the sad news that her friend Miss Rose Brass, had died at Charlesburg, near Quebec, of consumption, Oct. 26th. Miss Brass resided here with her family, seven years ago.

Mrs. A. Biddle, a sister of Mrs. Walberger Zeh, arrived on a visit yesterday from LeSueur, Minn.

Buy your presents at the Drug and Jewelry Store and gladden the hearts of your father, mother, sister, brother and sweetheart.

Maud (sarcastically): "Ma says that if you are sick, Bridget, she will send your breakfast up to you." Bridget: "Och, no miss, I'm not sick, an' if yez have breakfast ready I will get up."

Gov. Malette has been delivering provisions this week for a St. Paul supply house. About a carload wrs received here. Our local merchants are taking a slight interest in the matter.

In St. John's University Record for November, we notice the following names among the list of students deserving honorable mention for good deportment: D. Champoux, Erve McCaffrey and Jules Pasha.

"Policeman," exclaimed the excited man, his face fiery with honest igdignation, "for sweet humanity's sake, hurry! There's a gang of roughs running a dog fight over in that barn." He was the proprietor of the under dog.

The recent cold snap was probably most severely felt by thrashing crews. Frozen faces were the rule rather than the exception. If the cold weather had continued it would have been impossible to secure men to prosecute the work.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church will give a dime social in their building on Broadway, Friday evening Dec. 11, 1891. The Rogue's Art Gallery will be on exhibition. All should see this rare collection of views and curiosities. Remember it will be on exhibition Friday evening, Dec. 11th.

Thanksgiving was celebrated by our young people at Opera hall Thursday night. The St. Hilaire string orchestra rendered the music, and the highest praise was heard for their productions. Supper was served at the Wilber house. It was the most enthusiastic dance of the season.

The author of the song "Annie Rooney" received from the publishers only $4.50, while the writer of "Down Went McGinty" was paid $2.50. Had the public known what was coming, a subscription could readily have been raised to buy the gentlemen off at far higher figures.

Mr. Knowlton indulges in the use of masticating tobacco, and enjoys the deceive weed as much as any one, but when it comes to chewing toe-nails, he considers it time to call a halt. This slightly unpleasant appendix to the requirements of tobacco-chewers is certainly a new phase, but Mr. K. declares that a large to-nail was lodged between his teeth the other day while in the act of severing a piece from the plug with his molars. For particulars as to the brand, the sensation produced, etc., we refer interested parties to Mr. Knowlton.

List of letters remaining uncalled for at the post office at Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, for the month ending November 30th, 1891. If not called for in thirty days they will be sent to the dead letter office.

F. A. Baker.
Rev. Mr. Cresswell.
Andrew Johnson.
Miss N. McKusick.
Edward Miller.
Mrs. Emma Montreau.
Octave Montrail.
C. H. Sproser.
John Svanson.

In calling for any of the above letters please say "advertised."

FRANK E. HUNT, P. M.

O My! Those beautiful Dolls at the Drug and Jewelry Store are just too sweet for anything.

Mrs. Jos. Grover wishes to inform her patrons that she has removed her dress-making parlors to her residence on Burroughs ave back of St. Mary's church.

WANTED.—A girl for general house work. Good wages. Small family. Must apply soon.

MRS. J.D. MARSHALL.

Mat Skala's place on Broadway stil retains its popularity, and not without reason—Mat has dexterity and tact. A full stock of wines, liquors and cigars. When in need of liquors for medicinal purposes.

S. Elstad, who has a blacksmith shop near the depot, has secured the services of a blacksmith and expert horseshoer of twenty-five years experience. He will guarantee all work to give entire satisfaction.

DR PRICE'S
Cream Baking Powder.
Used in Millions of Homes—40 Years the Standard.

DO YOU EAT

Candies, Nuts, Fruits? Ovide Emard sells such. Fresh and cheap, fresh and cheap. The finest and the best. When you think of Candy, or nuts or fruit or fancy groceries or

TOBACCO

Or pipes, or schoool supplies, or writing inks, or photograph albums or autograph albums,

OR PENS

Go to Ovide Emard and he will give you digestible prices that will please you.

Get your horses shod at Findeisen's.

Remember the Presbyterian social Dec. 11th.

Best horseshoeing done at Findeisen's.

More new goods just received at the Drug and Jewelry Store.

A tramp said he had followed a trade but never cought up with it.

Fred Brasseau has purchased a half interest in L. Beniot's saloon at Crookston.

Buy your holiday goods of Flack the Jeweler and get a nice present with every 50c purchase.

Brigg did not see you at church last Sunday." Brags: "No; I didn't get in until you had gone to sleep.

For every 50c purchase at my store you will receive a 10c present.

Flack the Jeweler.

All kinds of COAL for sale at Hoskin's elevator.

32 W. T. SPILLANE.

Buy your candy, nuts, figs and popcorn of Flack the Jeweler. A fine new stock just received.

LOST.—Between the residence of Wm. Zaiser and the depot, a beaver muff, on Monday. Finder please leave at the NEWS office.

"Puck" maintain that despite our boasted refined civilization, the man who doesn't turn to look at a dog fight is either blind or deaf.

At S. Elstad's blacksmith shop near the depot, you can get guaranteed work. First-class horse shoing by an old experienced workman.

Make a 50 c purchase at the Drug and and Jewelry Store and get a nice present free.

Flack the Jeweler.

W. J. Richardson and wife are visiting at the residence of J. Z. Perron, the latter's brother. They are from Stevens Point, Wis. Mr. R. made us a pleasant call.

Horseowners, Take Notice.

At the request of many of my customers I have secured the services of a first class horse shoer and respectfully solicit a share of your patronage. First class work guaranteed.

Wm. Findeisen.

The Police Gazette

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper Barber or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends whereever it goes. Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped. 13 weeks for $1.00. Send Five Cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX,
Franklin Square, New York City

A Standard Remedy.

Mezger's Pile Ointment has long proven a boon to suffering humanity, and is effective whenever used. Those in need of a remedy of this kind can find none better or more effective and should get a package of Metzger's Pile Ointment, that is warranted to cure. Price 50c. At Schreiter's drug store.

A Very Narrow Escape.

Yes, I had a very narrow escape, said a prominent citizen to a friend. I was confined to my bed for more than two years and all my friends gave me up. I had running sores on my limbs and after using nearly everything was induced to try Metzger's Pain Eradicator and now here I am, sound and hearty. You will find it for sale by W. A. Schreiter. Price 50c a bottle, trial size free.

The Impending Danger.

Every horse owner dreads that most fatle disease "Colic" and although having at hand the best remedy he knows of still wishes for a quick and certain cure It has recently been discovered that Metzger's Lightning Colic Cure is a never failing remedy. Therefore without delay call on your druggist and get a bottle as it is warranted to cure in 25 minutes any kind or stage of kidney, wind or spasmodic colic. Your horses are in danger if you do not keep it in your barn ready for an emergency. Price $1 per bottle or 6 for $5.00. For sale by W. A. Schriter.

:- IMPERIAL -:
TONSORIAL HALL!
N. MORISETTE, PROP.
Everything First Class!

SHAVING,
HAIR-CUTTING,
SHAMPOOING!

☞Shaving 15 cents.
Haircutting 25 cents.☜
MainStreet, - Red Lake Fall

I. LEMIEUX,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON,
Officein residence, First street, Red Lake Falls. Minn.

JOHN WATSON,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEGN,
Office in residence, Sixth street, Red Lake Falls Minn. 4

Attention Canadians.

WINTER EXCURSIONS TO PRINCIPAL POINTS IN CANADA.

Will again be run from the Northest and all principles points in at the low rate of $40.00 for the round tirp. Tickets will be on sale in Manitoba daily from Tuesday December 1st to 30th inclusive and Northern Minnesota and North Dakota on Tuesday December 1st and 8th and daily from December 15th to 22nd inclusive and on Tuesday December 29th. Limit of tickets 90 days from date of sale. Those contemplate taking advantage of these low rate excursions should bear in mind that the Northern Pacific in connection with the Wisconsin central from the public highway from points in the Nortewest to Chicago On December 1st, 8th, 15thr22nd, anp 29th through Pullman furnised tourist sleeping cars will be run via those lenes to Chicago with out change, in which the rate for one double berth from starting point Chicago will be but $2.00.

Tickets, maps, time table and full information can be obtainet from any agent of the Northern Pacific R. R.

Once More.

Winter excersions! Season 1891! Where? To Toronto, Montreal and all principal points west in Ontario. Rate? $40 for the round trip from points in Minnesota and Dakota. When? Tickwill be on Tuesday December 1st, 8th, 15th to 22nd.inclsive and Tuesday, December 29th.Limit? 90 days from date of sale, which can be extended by payment at destination of $5 for 15, $10 for 30 days, $15 for 45 days, $20 for 60 days, and $10 for each 30 days additional. Route? Northern Pacific Railroad via St. Paul and Chicago. Accommodation? Pullman sleeping and dining car to St. Paul daily and on December 1st, 8th, 15th, 22nd and 29th pullman furnish tourist sleeping cars will be run through Winnipeg to Chicago via Northern Pacific and Wisconsin Central lines, in which a charge will be made of only $2 per berth:

Tickets will be extended to include points in Quebec east of Montreal New Brunswick. Nova Scotia, and Prince Edwards Island by the addition of one single fare for the round trip from Montreal.

Time table, maps, and full information can be obtained on applecation to agents of the Northern Pacific Rail road.

The Best Remedy III

in this world, says J. Hofherr of Syracuse, N. Y., is Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic, because my son who was partially paralyzed three years ago and attacked by fits, has not had any symptoms of them since he took one bottle of the remedy. I most heartily thank for it.

The Best Ever Used.

WHITEWATER, WIS., October, 1890.

When 17 years old my son was first attacked by epileptic fits, at intervals of one year, then four months, three months, two months, one month, then every three weeks, every nine days and later even twice a day. We used many remedies for fits, but all without benefit. Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic is the very best we ever used and he is again strong, his mind has again improved and is clearer.

G. H. SCHARPF.

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Nov. 24, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on January 9th, 1892, viz. Paul Prul, hd 11856 for the s½ ne¼ and lots 1 and 2, sec 6, twp 149, r 42.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz.

Foussaint Beaudry, Joseph Benoit, Joseph Leroux, all of Terrebonne, Polk Co., Minn.; John Quesnell, of Mentor, Polk Co., Minn.

nov26d31 H. H. Dickmann. Register.

$3000 A YEAR! I undertake to briefly teach any fairly intelligent person of either sex, who can read and write, and who, after instruction, will work industriously, how to earn Three Thousand Dollars a Year in their own localities, wherever they live. I will also furnish the situation or employment, at which you can earn that amount. No money for me unless successful as above. Easily and quickly learned. I desire but one worker from each district or county. I have already taught and provided with employment a large number, who are making over $3000 a year each. It's NEW and SOLID. Full particulars FREE. Address at once E. C. ALLEN, Box 420, Augusta, Maine.

For Sale.

I HAVE FOR SALE THE FOLLOWING LANDS,

Improved and Unimproved

FARMS

IN POLK COUNTY, MINN.

Long Time, Small Payments, Low Rate of Interest.

	SECTION.	TOWN.	RANGE.	SETTLER
W½ of Nw¼	29	147	43	Wilson
Nw¼ of sw¼	28	147	43	Wilson
Se¼ of Ne¼	30	141	52	Wilson
Se¼	6	148	42	Sylvesterson
Se¼	8	146	45	Troxell
Ne¼	2	148	45	Dillon
Sw¼	2	148	44	LaDue
S½ of Nw¼	2	149	41	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Rivard
S½ of Sw¼	4	149	44	Bombardier
N½ of Nw¼	9	149	44	Bombardier
Se¼	7	146	44	Vaudrin
Nw¼	11	149	44	Tanasse
Ne¼	11	149	41	Emil Fontane
Ne¼	4	149	45	Beaudette
Sw¼	12	149	45	Herbert
E½ of Ne¼ & E½ of Se¼	23	149	45	Patnodo
Sw¼	24	149	46	Chayer
Sw¼	20	149	46	Haber
Ne¼	26	149	48	Folk
Ne¼ of Nw¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
N½ of Ne¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
Nw¼ of nw¼	9	150	41	Lemieux
Ne¼	26	150	41	Gabourey
Ne¼	10	150	42	Dagneau
Se¼	13	150	42	Lajambe
Se¼	25	150	42	Sylvester
Nw¼	32	150	42	Lachapelle
Se¼	12	150	43	Deserve
W½ of Se¼	13	15	43	Marlow
N½ of Ne¼	24	150	43	Marlow
Nw¼	17	150	43	Desotelle
se¼	11	150	43	Lizee
Ne¼	23	150	43	Besson
Se¼	21	150	43	Valie
Se¼	29	150	43	Toepin
E½ of Nw¼	31	150	43	Rabillard
Lots 1 and 2	31	150	43	Rabillard
Nw¼	32	150	43	Dandenault
Ne¼	33	150	43	Gaudette
Ne¼	19	150	44	Boutellere
Se¼	31	150	44	Charron
Nw¼	33	150	44	Zaiser
Sw¼	34	150	44	Houle
Ne¼	6	150	45	Garon
E½Sw¼	6	150	45	LaBelle
Lots 6 and 7	6	150	45	LaBelle
E½ of Sw¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
W½Se¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
Nw¼	12	150	46	Pare
Sw¼ of Tw¼	3	151	42	Doutre
S½ Se¼	4	151	42	Doutre
Se¼Sw¼	4	154	42	Doutre
Se¼ of Nw¼	4	150	42	Meilleur
Sw¼ of Ne¼	4	151	42	Meilleur
Lots 2 and 3	4	151	42	Meilleur
N½ of Se¼	18	151	42	Sotourneau
N½ of Sw¼	17	151	42	Sotourneau
Se¼	15	151	43	McIntire
Lots 1 2 and 3	17	151	43	Emard
E½ of Nw¼	17	151	43	Emard
Ne¼ of Nw¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
Nw¼ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
S½ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
W½ of W¼	23	151	43	Page
Ne¼	33	151	43	Beausoleel
E½ of Nw¼	7	151	44	Blaire
Lots 1 and 2	7	151	44	Blaire
Nw¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Lots 8 9 and 12	15	151	44	Bottineau
Ne¼ Se¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Nw¼Sw¼	23	151	44	Bottineau
S½ Ne¼	6	151	44	Muller
Lots 1 and 2	6	151	44	Muller
Se¼	4	151	45	Jones
Se¼	14	151	45	Berry
Ne¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	32	151	45	Fleurie
Ne¼	20	150	46	McLean
Ne¼	24	151	46	Gauthier
Se¼	24	161	46	Tougas
Se¼	8	151	48	Lyle
Ne¼	25	152	42	Paussant
W½ of Ne¼ & w½ of se¼	28	152	43	Beaulien
Nw¼	30	152	43	Turville
E½ of Nw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
Lot 1	31	152	43	Rourke
Ne¼ of Sw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
N½ of Sw	10	152	44	Loe
Sw¼ of Se¼	10	152	44	Loe
Ne¼	13	152	44	Sandon
Sw¼	15	152	44	Dahlbeck
Nw¼	25	152	44	Rourke
Sw¼	25	152	44	Comstock
Ne¼	34	152	44	Rourke
Nw¼	25	152	45	Carroll
So¼	28	152	45	Pepin
Nw¼	32	152	45	Pilon
S½ of Ew¼	2	152	46	Kirsch
Lots 3 and 4	2	152	46	Kirsch
E½ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Ne¼ of Se¼	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼	20	152	46	Carlton
Tw¼	26	152	46	Billandeau
Sw¼	4	152	48	Feeny
Fe¼	24	152	49	Brownlee
Se¼	11	153	43	Ness
Nw¼	25	153	44	Ives
Sw¼ of Ne¼	2	152	45	Bray
Lot 2	2	153	45	Bray
W½ of Se¼	2	153	45	Bray
Nw¼ of Sw¼	10	153	45	Bray
Sw¼	4	153	45	Lucian
Nw¼	6	152	45	Lusia
Sw¼	12	153	45	Clement
E½ of E½	14	153	45	Clement
W½ of E½	14	153	45	Coe
Se¼	18	153	45	Labounta Sr.
Sw¼	18	153	45	Labounta
E½ of W½	2	153	46	Lusia
Nw¼	8	153	46	Kelly
So¼	8	153	46	Hazeltine
No¼	14	153	46	Stacy
Nw¼	26	153	46	Cole
So¼	26	153	46	Labounty
Se¼	28	154	45	Goolor
S½ of Ne	32	154	46	Bautain
Se¼	25	153	46	Lusian
Ne¼	34	154	46	Thamas
S½ Ne¼ & 11,2	2	152	46	Filbin
Nw¼	32	150	45	Brosseau
Ne¼	30	152	43	Miller
Ne¼	19	152	42	Borup
Ne¼	29	150	41	Stone
Sw¼	10	151	46	Benoit

A. D. Wishard,
RED LAKE FALLS,
ma 21f5 Polk Co., Minn.

NORTHERN PACIFIC
BETWEEN
Winnipeg, Gilby, Dayton, Grafton, Grand Forks-Crookston, Red Lake Falls.
AND ALL POINTS
EAST AND WEST.

There is nothing better than the service on
THE DINING CAR LINE

Through Pullman Sleeping Cars Daily Between Points in the
RED RIVER VALLEY
AND
ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS

PACIFIC COAST TRAINS
PASSING THROUGH
MINNESOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA
IDAHO, ORENON AND WASHINGTON.

CARRY COMPLETE EQUIPMENT OF
Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars,
First and Second Class Coaches,
Pullman Tourist and
Free Colonist Sleepers.

And Elegant Dining Cars.

THROUGH TICKETS Are sold at all coupon offices of the Northern Pacific Railroad to points North, East, South and west, in the United States and Canada.

For further information regarding rates, routes maps, etc., address

CHAS. S. FEE, G. P. & T. Agt., St. Paul, Minn.
J. A. DUFFY Local Agt

CHICAGO AND ATLANTIC

In conjunction with the Erie System operates Fast Vestibuled Trains between Chicago and the Atlantic Seaboard. you may travel in the most Elegant and complete Pullman Vestibuled Trains ever constructed and save $1.50 to Buffalo and Niagara Falls, $2.00 to New York $2.35 to Albany and Troy, and $3.00 to Boston and New England Cities.

No rival line offers the advantages of a system of through first and second-class day coaches and Pullman Dining cars chicago to New York.

It is the only line operating pullman cars to Boston and New England via Albany.

Entire trains are lighted by gas, heated by steam. Pullman dining cars run through in either direction.

Pullman chair and sleeping cars to Columbus, O., and Ashland, Ky., Daily.

No extra charge for fast time yeap unsurpassed accommodations afforded on these luxurious trains.

Get an Estimate

Of the Cost of Your Building - From

JAMES BRADY,

CONTRACTOR
AND BUILDER.

Foreman of the Construction of

North Side Roller Mill.
P.&J. Meehan's Saw Mill.
J.D. Marshall's residence.
And others

Office at residence on hamilton av.

HE Missed his Opportunity! DON'T Miss Yours, Reader. The majority neglect their opportunities, and from that cause live in poverty and die in obscurity! Harrowing despair is the lot of many, as they look back on lost, forever lost, opportunity. Life is passing! Reach out. Be up and doing. Improve your opportunity, and secure prosperity, prominence, peace. It was said by a philosopher, that "the Goddess of Fortune offers a golden opportunity to each person at some period of life; embrace the chance, and she pours out her riches; fail to do so and she departs, never to return." How shall you find the GOLDEN opportunity? Investigate every chance that appears worthy, and of fair promise; that is what all successful men do. Here is an opportunity, such as is not often within the reach of laboring people. Improved, it will give, at least, a grand start in life. The GOLDEN opportunity for many is here. Money to be made rapidly and honorably by any industrious person of either sex. All ages. You can do the work and live at home, wherever you are. Even beginners are easily earning from $5 to $10 per day. You can do as well if you will work, not too hard, but industriously; and you can increase your income as you go on. You can give spare time only, or all your time to the work. Easy to learn. Capital not required. We start you. All is comparatively new and really wonderful. We instruct and show you how, free. Failure unknown among our workers. No room to explain here. Write and learn all free, by return mail. Unwise to delay. Address at once, H. Hallett & Co., Box 880, Portland, Maine.

The Festooned Column.

Here in this alley there lies the fragment of some ancient column,
Half imbedded in soil, tipped to one side in its fall;
See the shape of the flower there sculptured in happiest outline,
Just in the bloom of its growth, with all the leaves on the stalk.
Even in marble it has a fresh look, as if blowing in Springtide,
Though rude handfuls of Time long have been flung on its form,
Gently it clings to the stone and lovingly winds round the pillar,
Yet it turns to my glance with a soft smile in its eye.
So art thou, divine Elpinike, the flower of Delphi
Ancient thou art, I should say, just in the bud of thy youth;
For if the Delphian priestess now were alive in her beauty,
She thy form would assume, robed in the waves of white folds,
But though so young, thou art hid, methinks in the ages of Delphi.
Beautiful flower to-day sprung from a fancy of old.
Note but this leaf, how graceful it lies in the curve of the marble!
Then another succeeds—half of it only you see;
Then still further below is beheld the mere tip of a leaflet,
All the others are hid in the dark tomb of the ground.
But the day will come when the leaves shall leap from their cover,
And the day will come when Elpinike shall bloom,
Now I am going to dig from the rubbish this column of flowers,
Piece together its parts, cleanse from the dirt every line,
Set up the column in light that again it may sun itself proudly;
Then what a fragrance will rise out of that flowery shaft!

—Denton S. Snider, in Delphic Days.

BLAKE'S WIDOW.

Jem Blake was shot dead in his own doorway by Antonio Gueldo, and the trial was to come off directly.

The extraordinary interest in the affair was less due to the murder and its peculiar circumstances than to the fact that this was the first case tried at San Saba in any more formal court than the time-honored institution of Judge Lynch.

As there was no place specially arranged for the trial, Judge Pitblado hospitably offered the use of his shed. Here a rough table and chair were placed for the Judge, the other necessary furniture, intended to represent the dock, the stand, etc., being eked out with boxes from Silas Baggertt's store.

Jake Smith looked at these preparations for a time with frowning discontent, and then strolled down the road, turning into the lane that led to Blake's. When he reached the door of the shanty he leaned against the jamb and poked his naked head inside, fanning himself in an embarrassed way with his greasy fragrant hat. He had come there with the intention of saying something, but the sight within made him forget it.

Blake's widow sat there, as she had sat pretty much all the time since the murder, staring straight before her, with her chin in her palm. The sunlight struck through the foliage of the red-oak trees that grew before the door, and checkered with flickering brightness the floor and cradle in which Jem's baby was sleeping.

There it was, just as it had been three days ago (could it be only three days?)—just as it had been when she went out that morning to look after the drying clothes and left him standing in the door by the cradle (how fond he was of the baby!)—just as it was when she heard the crack of the pistol and ran in with an awful sense of suffocating fright—just the same as when she had found him lying upon the cradle, dabbling its white linen with his blood and the baby playing with his hair. She screamed once, the first and last complaint any one had heard her make; then she was quiet and helpful through it all—when men came and lifted him up; when they laid him on the rough bed in the other room; when they carried him to the grave, she following with the baby in her arms.

Jake Smith was trying to find the link missing in his thoughts; he sniffed with perplexity—or something—and Blake's widow looked up without speaking. Jake nodded pleasantly four or five times.

"Pooty chipper?" asked he.

Blake's widow smiled sadly, bent over the sleeping child and smoothed the clothes with a tender touch.

"They're agoin' ter try him in a court," Jake went on, "an' I don't believe"——

"Try who—Antonio?" She turned toward the burly figure in the door with a flash of interest in her black eyes.

"Yes. The Judge is making a court out of his shed. I hope it'll turn out all right, but it seems like givin' that Mexican devil a chance he oughtn't ter have."

"He can't get clear, can he?" she asked, rocking the cradle gently and patting the coverlet.

"I don't see how, but he's got some kind of a law cuss to speak for him—a feller that stopped here a day or two ago on his way to Galveston—and it makes me kind o' nervous."

Blake's widow did not appear to notice the last remark, for the child, disturbed by the talking, had awakened and sat up in his cradle with a wondering look.

"Pooty, ain't he?" said Jake, regarding the small figure with interest. "Looks just like—ahem!—you. Poor little — I — a" — he stammered, and treated his hat like a mortal enemy. "Of course he'd had—you've got—there's nothin' I could do fur yer, maybe?"

She answered with a grateful look, but it was accompanied by a shake of the head.

Jake bent down and with his big fore-finger softly rumpled the hair of the baby's head; then he went out and left them, Blake's widow sitting as he found her, and the baby staring down the path after him.

He walked on until he reached the top of the little hill, where he could look down upon the roof which covered the piteous scene he had just left. Here he seemed to have half a mind to turn back, for he hesitated and stopped; but he changed his partial intention after lingering a moment, and walked meditatively onward, with the exclamation. "Wal, some women do beat the d—l amazin'."

—

Of course everybody came to the trial. The arrangements were soon found to be altogether too meager. Pitblado's shed was filled to overflowing, and Baggett made a clean sweep of every empty box in his store.

Antonio's lawyer, a sharp-eyed, sharp-featured fellow from Galveston, had bustled about with surprising agility on the day previous, holding mysterious conferences with ill-conditioned fellows of Gueldo's kidney.

The court was assembled, the jury had been chosen, and the witnesses were all present save one—Blake's widow.

Pretty soon there was a stir at the door, then a murmur of surprise ran through the crowded room.

"May I be d—d," said Jake Smith, audibly, "if she hasn't brought her baby!"

What reason she may have had for not having left the little thing in charge of some sympathizing woman—and there were plenty who would have been glad of the trust—was not apparent; however that might be, there it was, clasped firmly in her arms, its bright red cheeks contrasting with her whiteness, and its father's sunny hair mingling with her dark locks.

With some difficulty way was made through the throng to her seat, which had been placed on one side of the Judge, directly opposite the candle-box on the other where Antonio sat. She took her place and never moved during the whole of the trial, excepting as she was required to testify, and once when the baby tugged at some glistening thing that lay hidden in the folds of her dress, at which she took pains to distract its attention with a chip from the floor. As for the baby, it sat there with its big blue eyes open to their fullest extent, entirely absorbed in the novel scene, save at the moment when that irresistible glitter caught its eye.

Every one being now present, the trial went on in good earnest. A number of witnesses were examined, whose testimony showed that Gueldo had had trouble with Blake, and more than once threatened his life; that Gueldo's pistol was one charge empty on the evening of the day of the murder, whereas in the morning it had been full; that he was seen that morning around Blake's house, and more than that Blake's widow had heard Gueldo's voice just before the fatal shot, and had seen his retreating form as she ran out.

At this last point the Galveston lawyer asked the witness a few questions regarding how she knew it was Gueldo's, and how she had recognized the voice for his. She didn't know how exactly, but was none the less sure for that.

There had been a rumor about that some one had heard Antonio make a boast of having "done for Blake this time," but if there were a witness for this he could not be found now.

And so the prosecution closed.

The Galveston lawyer began by involving in a whirlpool of hopeless contradiction the witness who had sworn to having seen Gueldo near Blake's house. Then he expatiated on the ease with which one person may be mistaken for another, and brought a witness to show how Gueldo had already been said to resemble some one in the village. Finally he produced three of the ill-conditioned fellows before referred to, who swore that Antonio was with them on a hunting expedition during the whole of the day on which the murder was committed.

It was a clear case of alibi. Jake Smith's astonishment at the ease with which the thing had been accomplished was unbounded. He threw a disgusted look towards Pitblado, but the Judge was nonplussed and didn't seem to be interested with things in Jake's vicinity.

"Gentlemen of the jury," said he, "things has took a turn I didn't altogether expec', I don't know as there's much to be said. I s'pose you've got to go by the evidence, an' that don't need any explainin'. Ef you kin make out, accordin' ter that, that Antonio Gueldo killed Jem Blake, why, jest recolect that's what yer here fur."

Jake Smith fidgeted about on his box and cast anxious glances through the open door toward the clump of nopals where the jury were deliberating.

Antonio talked and laughed in an undertone with his counsel, and Blake's widow sat staring at them with compressed lips and a strong expression of determination coming into her face.

It wasn't long before the jury filed in again, all seating themselves but the spokesman, and Judge Pitbaldo rose, wiping his forehead with his shirt-sleeves.

"Straightened it out, have yer?" asked he, nodding to the spokesman.

The man nodded slowly in return.

"Yer see," said the spokesman, with a hesitating and disappointed air, "ef yer hadn't a-corralled us with stickin' ter the evidence we might 'a' done better, but accordin' to that Antonio wasn't thar when the murder was done, an' ef he warn't thar he couldn't a done it; an' ef he didn't do it, why—then—of course he's—not guilty."

Pitblado didn't dare to look at anybody; he stared up at the rafters, down at the table, nowhere in particular, and then turned half-way toward the prisoner.

"You kin go," said he at last, and with great deliberation, "but don't stay around here too long."

There was a dead pause, during which nobody moved.

Jake Smith exploded a single cuss-word, which he had held in for some time past, and Blake's widow stood up.

"Have you got through, Judge?" she asked.

"Wal—I—s'pose so."

"And there is nothing else to be done?"

"I'm afraid there ain't."

"And he's free to go?"

"Y-a-a-s."

Antonio Gueldo rose with an insolent grin and picked up his hat.

The baby crowed, for it saw the glittering thing again.

There was a sharp report—Antonio pitched forward in a heap upon the floor and Blake's widow stood with the pistol pressed to her breast.

A line of thin blue smoke curled from the muzzle of the weapon and formed a halo around the child's flaxen head. The glittering thing was quite near the little hands now, and they took it from the yielding grasp of the mother.

Blake's widow looked steadily at the figure on the floor—it was quite motionless; then she turned and went through the wide passage opened for her by the silent crowd, holding the baby very tenderly and the baby carrying the pistol.

The child laughed with delight; it had got its shining plaything again.

That Hopkins Fence.

The $30,000 wall around the Hopkins' castle at Great Barrington, Mass., is not a new idea. About fifteen years ago Charles Crocker, one of the "big four" Central Pacific railroad magnates, made a similar "improvement." Crocker built himself a mansion on the brow of "Nob Hill," San Francisco. The palace covered almost an entire block. A gentleman whose name is lost to fame had a modest mansion in a corner lot of that block. Crocker coveted that lot, but he could not get it at his own price. He was somewhat incensed because he, a millionaire, was balked in purchasing what he wanted at his own price. The people of that vicinity were astonished on seeing a board wall being built between Crocker's palace and the gentleman's modest two-story frame. The wonder grew with the fence which was built to the height of the roof of the cottage.

This wall totally shuts out the light from the west, also the sun after midday. The gentleman appealed to the courts, alleging that no person had the right to construct anything, even though upon his own premises, which would interfere with the rights and liberties of another. But the courts held differently though it was admitted by Crocker that the fence was useless and he could give no other reason than spite. The gentleman removed his laundry from the back yard to the roof and every day the family linen was flaunting in the breeze from his own house-top, which somewhat spoiled the view of the Crocker family as they gazed out upon the bay and dispelled the romance of their evening promenades on the eastern piazzi. Under the ruling of the court the gentleman had a right to make an unsightly nuisance of the roof of his house. But he proposed to do more. He inscribed upon his banner "No compromise" and refused to sell at any price. He was on the eve of renting his house to a Chinese theatrical company when the proud Crocker ordered his wall to be torn down.

This wall, known as "Crocker's Folly," was one of the objects of curiosity of the city and was on the list to be shown to tourists. It was visited by thousands of citizens, also, and was opportunely torn down just before the Dennis Kearny communistic uprising.

How Meissonier Got Even.

Meissonier had become celebrated and was beginning to make money when he got acquainted with a Parisian grandee, very wealthy, very fond of posing as an art patron, but very penurious. One day Meissonier, breakfasting with the grandee, was struck by the beauty of the texture of the tablecloth. "One could draw upon it," he remarked; and, suiting the action to the word, he produced a pencil and made on the snowy, smooth nap a wonderfully able sketch of a man's head. The economical swell had the head carefully cut out of the damask, and hastened to frame and glaze his prize. A few weeks afterward Meissonier again breakfasted with his patron, and found by the side of his plate at the corner of the table assigned to him a neat little sheaf of crayons and holders, with a penknife and some India rubber. While the guests at the conclusion of the repast were enjoying their coffee and cigarettes, the host saw with delight from the corner of his eye that Meissonier was hard at work on the tablecloth—this time with a superb little full length of a medieval halberdier. The party broke up, the guests departed, and the "economic swell" rushed back to the salle-a-manger to secure his treasure; but, alas! the painter had for once shown himself as economical as his patron. He had made disastrously good use of the penknife, and one corner of the tablecloth was gone, halberdier and all.—Boston Globe.

Tricks of Araucanian Doctors.

It is believed that all sickness is due to witches, and sometimes when the afflicted is rich in squaws and ponies, and the medicine man desires a fat fee, he decides upon a wonderful surgical operation. The doctor, bending over the patient, with a blanket covering them both and shielding them well from view, proceeds to remove the sick man's stomach, heart, lungs, liver, and bowels, in search of the poison administered by the witch. He always finds it after a long search, and shows to the patient and his astonished friends a lizard's tail, which he considered the most deadly poison, and which he claims to have found secreted in one of the vital organs. Then he calls upon the friends to witness the fact, though he has just cut the man open and turned him inside out, as it were, not a trace of the wonderful operation remains, so that the man is not only free from poison, but perfectly healed and as sound as before.

In Araucania the evil one teaches doctors many skillful tricks in sleight of hand, such as changing noses with people, taking out the eyes and vital organs without pain, and of thrusting a sharpened stick clear through the stomach of any individual. The last named trick is said to be performed in full view of all the people, to their unbounded admiration, and the man who has learned to do it is a complete graduate from Cici's college, and an honor to his tribe and generation.—Fanny B. Ward.

Ruined Forever.

It was a mighty mean thing Hicks did. When he was arrested the other night for kicking over an ash-barrel he gave my name to the Judge as his.

"What is your name?" asked the stranger.

"John Smith."—Puck.

Several attempts have been made to steal the Russian crown from its repose in the Kremlin in Moscow.

MEDICINE AMONG KOREANS.

They Almost Worship a Surgeon, but Despise a Physician.

Most of the Koreans have very little confidence in foreign medicines. It is surgery only which enlists their admiration. They have many doctors among themselves, men unacquainted, to be sure, with the languages of Europe, which they hold in high esteem, but learned in the Chinese character, in which they can read all the medical treatises of Chinese classics. These doctors have medicines of their own, even worse tasting than ours, which they furnish their patients in liberal quantities; and, pray, why should a man who has failed to receive benefit from three gallons of a mixture so nauseating that he could not retain it upon his stomach, place faith in a small bottle of medicine as clear as water? Moreover, if there be any virtue in a teaspoonful of such a liquid, there is surely much more in a cupful. So the probability is that the foreign doctor's medicine is taken all in one or two doses, and the result gives the victim a very poor estimate of foreign treatment.

But with surgery the conditions are wholly different. The Korean doctor, it is true, has his set of instruments and his method of using them; but he knows as little of anatomical differentiation and localization as did our forefathers of the patriarchal days. The diseases in which and the localities upon which to use his instruments are determined by arbitrary rules savoring more of necromancy than of medical skill. Scarcely a patient presents himself who has not upon his back or chest or limbs the marks of the native doctors' knives—round scars an inch or more broad, ten or a dozen of them in symmetrical arrangement, showing where long knives have been plunged deep into the tissues. Several cases have been encountered by foreign practitioners here where such treatment has led to severe inflammation, the immediate cause of death. And not infrequently the appearance of these scars directly over the seat of vital organs occasions surprise that these fatal cases are not more common.

The astonishment of the native doctor, therefore, is quite equal to that of the patients when the foreign surgeon coolly and carefully severs the living tissues with his keen knife or unites them with needle and silk. I was intensely amused last week by the open-mouthed wonder of a group of soldiers and chair-bearers who stood about the door of my drug-room to see me tie a spurting artery and bring together the gaping edges of a wound incurred by one of their comrades. Equal interest and amazement are displayed upon every use of my pocket case. Almost every wound brought to me to dress has been previously plastered with mud or with some powder supposed to possess healing properties, and my first step in treatment must be to cleanse the part of its filthy incumbrances. The sight of blood for which he is responsible quite unnerves the Korean, and he looks with awe upon the temerity of the foreigner who works on coolly amid increasing streams of the red liquid which he himself draws, and which he seems able to stanch at will.

So it is that the Koreans have unbounded confidence in foreign surgical skill. They believe that we are quite capable of miracles, and are amazed when we refuse to perform them. Not long since a man came 200 miles in order that I might place new eyes in his empty sockets, and would not be put off with the first assurance of its impossibility. I have been asked to restore withered hands, sightless eyes, limbs deformed from childhood, fractured bones united in malpositions, and to remove countless scars and facial blemishes of various descriptions. So much confidence was felt in my surgical skill that I was allowed last month to attempt the removal of a needle broken off in the palm of a woman of rank. The hand was passed through an aperture in a screen, and was held by her husband, while I sat on the floor beside him and wielded the scalpel. It was comical to see the puzzled faces of her two sons as they saw me draw blood freely and heard her declaration that she felt no pain, because of the cocaine I had applied.

In my medical work I have received most efficient aid from those who have previously become somewhat accustomed to our medical procedure. The Koreans are a very teachable people. They are a people without religion, for all forms of religion are prescribed among them, and only ancestro-worship is countenanced.—Church at Home.

An Episode of Nebraska Life.

I met a gentleman at the union depot the other night who had just returned from Kearney county. He said: "I took up a claim three weeks ago and built my shanty with more care than is usually taken with them. I built a bedstead of boards in the corner and laid in a stock of canned goods and dried meat. The first night after it was completed I crawled into bed and fell into a deep sleep. About midnight I was awakened by a half-dozen rude jolts, some one cracked a whip, yelled 'Git up!' and I straightway felt the motion of a heavy wagon. I was but half awake but I realized that my bed was tipped to an angle of 45 degrees and that everything was moving. I realized that my shanty, supposed to be unoccupied, was being stolen with me in it. I grasped my revolver and empted it at the walls and in answer heard the sound of scattering feet. I crawled out of the small window and drove back about 100 yards to the site of the house, where I made the horses fast and posted myself under the wagon. The next day I drove two miles to my nearest neighbor and soon had his opinion and that of several other farmers. They all said the horses and wagon were mine beyond doubt, as no one would ever claim them."—Kansas City Times.

Sympathetic Friend—"Your health appears to have improved greatly of late." Convalescent—"Y-e-s, I've been off among strangers who didn't eternally talk to me about it."—N. Y. Weekly.

BELOW THE EARTH'S CRUST.

The Question as Affected by What Is Known of the Interior Heat.

Many scientific men are devoting their lives to finding out all that can be learned about the interior of this wonderful globe of ours. One of the interesting problems on which they are engaged is the depths and geological limits of the permanently frozen soil. The British association has collected a large amount of data on this question. It has already told us some curious things, such as the fact that excellent wheat lands north of Manitoba overlie frozen earth that never thaws.

The workmen in the deepest mines in Europe swelter in almost intolerable heat, and yet they have never penetrated over one-seven-thousandth part of the distance from the surface to the center of the earth. In the lower levels of some of the Comstock mines the men fought scalding water and could labor only three or four hours at a time, until the Sutro tunnel pierced the mines and drew off some of the terrible heat, which had been 120 degrees.

The deepest boring ever made—that at Sperenburg, near Berlin—penetrates only 4,172 feet, about 1,000 feet deeper than the famous artesian well at St. Louis. The result of this imperfect knowledge is that there are more theories and disputes among scientific men with regard to the interior of the earth than about any other problem of physical science, says Goldthwaite's Geographical Magazine. Some eminent physicists, for instance, like Sir William Thompson, have believed that the crust of the earth is at least 100 miles thick. The majority adduce good reasons for believing that the crust is only twenty-five to fifty miles thick. All agree that the temperature within the earth continues to increase as it does near the surface—at the rate of one degree, Fahrenheit, for about every fifty-five feet of descent. All igneous rocks must be fused at no great depth.

In fact, at this rate of increase the temperature at 200 miles is 28,000 degrees Fahrenheit, which is Prof. Rosetti's estimate of the probable temperature of the sun. It is improbable, however, that this rate of increase is maintained for a great distance, and many physicists believe that at some unknown but not very great depth the increase in temperature ceases.

A GREEDY GIRL.

She Broke Her Promise and Cabbaged All the Rare Ferns.

A story was recently told me by a lady who had just returned from camping in the Yosemite valley, says a writer in Garden and Forest. A friendly guide, when asked about the ferns of the region, answered that he would have to know her a long time before he would be willing to tell her about the kinds in the valley, and continued: "I know you don't mean any harm, but there was a young woman here from the bay—a great botanist—and I told her of a fern that only grew in two places, so far as I knew, in the whole region. Then she was wild to see it. I told her she might have some leaves to press in her brown-paper books, but warned her not to pull up any. 'Don't you s'pose I know better than to spoil your fern garden?' replied the college girl. So I showed her where the stuff grew—one place, where the most of it was, under some dry brush I had put there—and I made her promise again not to tell any one, and not to pull it up. I said to her: 'I guess there ain't but two clumps of it in the Yosemite, and my idea is it ought to stay here. It would be a kind of murder to drive it out.' Then she looked real pretty, and said she entirely agreed with me. It might be a new species, she remarked, and it might be named after me if I would let it be taken away, but then I was exactly right, and it belonged right here.

"Two or three weeks after that her camp broke up, and she went up the valley and dug up every root of the fern that she could find. Fact, I saw her doing it. When I went down to camp to tell them good-bye, that cussed little hypocrite sidled up and begged me to take good care of the ferns—specially of that new kind! No, mum, I'll show you everything in the line of plants, from the Merced river to the top of El Capitan, except one little bunch of fern—all that was left by that young woman from the bay."

A Faithless Lot.

Fanny—I dreamt about you last night.

Jennie—What did you dream?

"I dreamt that the young man to whom you are engaged had gone back on you."

"I dare say it is so. You can't rely on young men nowadays. Woman only is faithful to her love. So you dreamt my future husband went back on me. I wonder whether it is Charlie. He was here night before last and I noticed that he was cold and distant. Perhaps it was Dick. He always was a flirt. I have never trusted him. I wonder if Frank has had the meanness to jilt me for that lavender haired girl he took to the theatre. Ah that's the way these men are. "You can't rely on three or four young men, much less one."—Texas Siftings.

Expert Eye of the Car Driver.

"The expert car driver becomes accustomed to measuring distances with the eye," the conductor said. "He can tell at a glance when he is still twenty feet away just how far anything in the street is from the track. He drives right along past obstructions that come within an inch of the car, as he did past the end of that boiler just now. He has to do it. He can't stop the car and get off and measure the distance exactly. If he did somebody might run over him, and when he got back to the stables the superintendent would tell him that he had better get a place driving a hay wagon on some large farm, where there was plenty of room.—N. Y. Sun.

There are about 325 students in the freshman class at Princeton this year, which is a large increase over last year.

A HUSTLER.

He Was 9 Years Old and Had Been in Business Five Years.

The boy was not more than 2 1-2 feet high, says the New York Times. But he was intelligent and energetic, and he hawked his newspapers with a zeal that would have been creditable to a high-proof drummer. He was not unmindful of his dignity, and when one Broad street purchaser accompanied his tender of payment for a newspaper with a frivolous, chaffing remark, the brisk little fellow embarrassed him with a sharp glance from two snapping black eyes, remarking the while: "Here is your change, sir, I have no time for fooling."

"Keep the change," said the purchaser, dropping the facetious and assuming a serious air. "Will you tell me how long you have been selling papers?"

"I have been in the newspaper business three years," replied the diminutive merchant somewhat coldly.

"Three years!" exclaimed the man with unfeigned surprise, "why, my lad, you do not look big enough to carry a bundle of papers."

"Notwithstanding," said the mite, with unruffled dignity, "I have been in this business for three years, and for two years before I sold papers I was in the clothing business."

"Is it possible?" commented the questioner with increased surprise. "See here, my little man, how old are you?"

"Nine years old," calmly responded the little fellow. "I had to get out and hustle to help support the family when I was 4 years old. I belong to a family who waste no time."

The lad spoke the truth. He was born in East Broadway and went to work in his father's clothing store when but 4 years old as cash boy. And there are many more like him in this large and progressive town.

He Would Stare at a Lady.

A comely young woman, stylishly dressed, with a very pretty face and fully rounded figure, entered a Brooklyn Bridge car, says a Sun reporter, accompanied by a well-built, muscular young fellow, apparently her husband. She was a woman upon whom no man could look but with admiration, and she attracted universal attention as the pair passed through the cars and finally took seats together.

Opposite to them sat a well-dressed, middle-aged man, evidently a man of the world in comfortable circumstances, who at once fixed his gaze upon the face of the lady and continued to stare at her with such a persistent scrutiny as to attract attention from every one in the vicinity. The lady soon became conscious of the stare, and was evidently confused and embarrassed at its continuance. It is true that the middle-aged man did not make any sign or offer any advances or betray any of those attempts at familiarity that are practiced by oglers. He simply looked and kept looking, not turning away his face once, and making but brief answers to remarks by a young man who was with him.

Meanwhile the husband of the lady had been gradually worked up to a pitch of great indignation at the action of the unwarrantable starer. The lady spoke to him quietly, and was evidently desirous of avoiding a scene, and made a little start to restrain him as he rose from his seat. The husband, however, was now infuriated, for, in spite of the lady's discomfiture and the husband's ire, the cold, unimpassioned, but persistent stare was continued. The passengers became interested, and it was obvious that something exciting would soon occur. The husband got up, white with indignation, and stepped across the aisle and put his hand on the shoulder of the middle-aged man, and in a straightforward, manly way said this:

"Sir, you have been staring at that lady long enough. You have not taken your eyes from her face since she entered this car. Your staring is not only an impertinence, but it is insulting, and you must stop it."

Of course the other passengers expected a row at once. The lady was in evident trepidation, and it was evident that for her sake, if not for the sake of decency, the young husband would have plenty of help should he need it to deal with the offender. But there was a sudden and, indeed, dramatic revulsion of feeling when the middle-aged man, instead of showing fight, said this:

"Really, I beg your pardon, sir. I had no intention of annoying the lady. I assure you I did not know what I was doing. I could not see her, for I am totally blind, as this young man who has charge of me will tell you."

Another Great National Park.

Writing in the Century of the Great King's River Canon, 125 miles south of Yosemite, John Muir, the California naturalist, says: "I fancy the time is not distant when this wonderful region will be opened to the world—when a road will be built up the South Fork of King's River through the sequoia groves, into the great canon, and thence across the divide and down the Middle Fork Canon to Tehipee; thence through the valley and down the canon to the confluence of the Middle and South Forks, and up to the sequoia groves to the point of beginning. Some of the sequoia groves were last year included in the national reservations of Sequoia and General Grant Parks. But all of this wonderful King's River region, together with the Keweah and Tule sequoias, should be comprehended in one grand national park. This region contains no mines of consequence, it is too high and too rocky for agriculture, and even the lumber industry need suffer no unreasonable restriction. Let our lawgivers then make haste before it is too late to set apart this surpassingly glorious region for the recreation and well-being of humanity, and all the world will rise up and call them blessed."

Wilkins—"Before you strike a man see that he deserves it." Billkins—"Pooh! I have a better rule than that." Wilkins—"What is it, pray?" Billkins—"See that he is smaller than you."—Yankee Blade.

LOVE FOR A DAY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "DORA THORNE," "A DEAD HEART," "TWO KISSES," "THE FATAL LILIES," ETC.

CHAPTER V.

In a few days I was quite at home at Westwood and understood my duties. They were certainly heavy. Fortunately for me, with my great love of early rising and fresh air, they did not commence until ten in the morning. Lady Yorke did not care to be disturbed before that hour. I do not think she had ever seen the sun rise or the dew lying like diamonds on the grass. So the fresh sweet mornings were all my own. I rose almost with the sun, thinking often that if people knew how lovely the early morning was they would never waste much time in sleep, and went out into the park.

It seemed to me always that I spent those early morning hours with Mark; the only difference lay in this, that he was on one side of the blue sky and I on the other. And I was possessed with the idea that he could hear and see me. Ah, love, my love, how I loved you!

When I went back to the house after those hours of peace and rest, my mind was braced for the day. If I had not seen Mark, I had looked long and lovingly at the blue heaven where he was. I had not spoken to him; but the whisper of the wind, the ripple of the leaves, the song of the birds, all seemed so many messages from him. After ten o'clock I had never another moment to call my own. Then Lady Yorke was in her boudoir, and every morning she had a thousand new wants. It was a puzzle to me how she invented them. There were letters to answer, invitations to send out. She liked to hear me read. Every day brought its papers, periodicals, magazines, new novels, all of which must be read to her. Then we walked or drove. At luncheon Lord Yorke joined us; and then her ladyship rested. We had another drive in the afternoon, dinner at seven, and in the evening Lady Yorke requested me to sing. I liked that time best, for I sang every sweet love-song I knew, and I sang always to Mark. Oh, my love, how I loved you!

Lord Yorke was a kindly, generous man, quite fifteen years older than his beautiful, languid young wife. He worshipped her, and she in her helpless way was fond of him. They were very rich. They owned this fine estate at Westwood, and they had a magnificent house in London and a villa in Florence. That was Lady Yorke's whim. When the winter was too cold and the spring too wet, she went to Mentone, where she could bask in the sunshine the whole day long. They had numerous visitors and friends. It was to fill the interval between the departure of one set of visitors and the coming of the next that I was wanted. Lady Yorke could not endure to be alone; she must be constantly amused. They had no children, and that was the one drawback. I liked Lord Yorke; he was always kind and courteous to me. He was not much interested in politics; the care and well-being of his estate occupied his whole time. He would not have a land-agent or a steward; he did everything himself—kept his accounts, received his rents, saw his tenants, overlooked the home estate. Hardly a weed was pulled up without his orders. He was just as industrious as his young wife was the reverse. We were always excellent friends. At times he asked me to help him, and his thanks always pleased me.

Poor Lady Yorke! Young, beautiful, wealthy, she was yet one of the most miserable and discontented of women. She had not a useful interest in the world. She had servants who waited upon her hand and foot; she had a husband who indulged her and granted every wish that she expressed; she was never called upon to make any exertion either of body or mind. She was never compelled to think; Lord Yorke and Mrs. Masham thought for her. If twenty visitors were coming, it made no difference to her. Before I had been many days there, I had read her character accurately. She was ill from indolence.

Watching her for a whole day, seeing her study nothing but herself, her wants, her wishes, her whims and caprices, ordering things because she fancied and not because she wanted them, spending money profusely without even looking at what was purchased—seeing her send away the most delicate of fruits, the most recherche of dishes, the most costly of wines, under some pretext or other too absurd to mention—I thought of the many poor women dying from want of food, of the many children perishing from hunger, and have wondered. She did not seem to know anything of the hard side of life. She ate from silver plate; she drank from the rarest of Bohemian glass; tea was served to her in the finest of Dresden china. She wore the finest of linen, of lace, silk, velvet, and satin; she had jewels of priceless value; in all her life she had never wished for one thing that had not been granted to her. She perhaps had read the words "hunger," "cold," "privation," "starvation," but she did not understand their meaning. How could she when she had never felt either cold nor hunger in her life? Her life had been a Sybarite life of pleasure, and the result was that beyond herself she had not a care or thought in the world. It seemed to me that if I could awaken this sleeping soul, I should not have lived in vain.

I remember the first time that she seemed to wake to a consciousness of suffering. She had never been ill herself, and she had never seen any one in pain. We were crossing the park, when suddenly above our heads we heard the discordant cry of birds. Suddenly a little bird fell fluttering and dying at our feet. It had been attacked and wounded by some bird larger than itself. I shall never forget the look in the dark eyes, the faint fluttering of the little wings ere it died. I had raised it in my hand, and it had died there.

"Poor little thing," I said. "It has had a short life but a merry one, I hope, in those great green boughs."

"Is it really dead?" Lady Yorke asked, drawing near with a pale face. "I do not think I have ever seen anything dead."

"Is that true, Lady Yorke?" I asked, looking at her in wonder.

"Yes, quite true."

"Have you ever wondered what death is like?" I inquired.

"I do not think so. I have never thought of death at all."

"Have you never lost any friends?" I asked again. "Has no one whom you loved died?"

"No—no one whom I loved. People I have known have died; but then they always seemed to me quite apart from the rest of us."

I looked in wonder at the beautiful face.

"Have you ever thought that you yourself must die?"

"I suppose I shall die sometime," she replied; "but I am young now—I need not begin to think about it yet."

"Have you ever heard of young people dying, Lady Yorke?" I asked.

"Yes; but that does not often happen, I should think. Age and death naturally go together.

"My Mark was young," I said, "and strong; he never had a day's illness, and he died."

"Where did he die?" asked Lady Yorke; and suddenly I remembered that I did not know. That which seemed so certain to me might be very uncertain to others. "I try never to think of such disagreeable things," continued Lady Yorke. "It does no good, and makes one's life miserable."

"No life can be really happy that is not ruled by such thoughts," I replied. "We ought to live for the next world, and not for this."

"Madame de Deffand said you were very serious. For my part I could not give my mind to such ideas. The very sight of that dead bird has made me feel ill and miserable."

"Yet everything living in this world has to die sooner or later," I said.

She made no remark, but I saw that the indolent, selfish soul was roused from its long sleep. The first thought of death and pain had come to her, never to be forgotten.

CHAPTER VI.

One morning, when several visitors were at Westwood, the conversation turned upon the Indian famine. We were all seated at luncheon. Some of the gentlemen remarked what a charitable country ours was—what large sums of money were forthcoming when any great disaster occurred.

Lord Yorke agreed.

"But," he said, "I do not think we realize what the word 'famine' means. In our happy land we have not seen women and children dying by the roadside, plucking the dry roots and the grass in the pangs of hunger."

"I have seen something like it," said Mr. Devine. "I was in Ireland during the 'potato famine,' and I saw there scenes that will haunt me to my dying day—gaunt, hungry men, in whose eyes was a wolfish gleam, pale, patient women, dying without complaint, children like spectres, with famine written in their faces. I have seen mother and children lying dead together—and it takes a long time for hunger to kill."

"Did you really witness all this?" asked Lady Yorke.

"I did indeed," replied Mr. Devine.

"I did not know," said Lady Yorke, with a slight shudder, "that people ever died of hunger. I do not suppose that I quite understood the meaning of the word 'famine.'"

"Your life has been a happy one, Louise," said Lord Yorke. "You have seen only the rose-colored side of existence."

"That must be true," she allowed more gravely than I had expected.

The next morning I had to drive with Lady Yorke to Woodheaton; she wanted to make some purchases. The morning was lovely, but her mind was evidently still disturbed by the conversation of the previous day.

"Miss Chester," she said suddenly, "have you ever seen people who were really ill from want of food?"

"Yes, very often, when I was at home with my mother. She, out of her limited means, made a point of relieving some poor person or other every day."

"And I," said Lady York, "have never, so far as I remember, relieved a poor person in my life. We send money to various charities; but I have never personally given any away. I have seen so few poor people."

I saw that her mind was awakened. We talked on the same subject during the whole of our drive. I told her what I had seen amongst the poor at Gracedieu—their patience, their industry, the pathos and beauty of their lives.

"The true heroes and heroines of this world," I said, "are the uncomplaining poor."

"Heroes and heroines!" she repeated. "Why, Miss Chester, what can there be heroic in poverty?"

"Poverty bravely borne is true heroism," I said. "It is easy to be happy and contented when everything goes well, when one has plenty of money, plenty of food, and everything one can desire. What can be more heroic than the endurance of hunger and cold without complaint? I have read of what the world calls heroines—Joan of Arc, who won a throne for her king, Charlotte Corday, who slew the enemy of France; but, to my way of thinking, the real heroine is the wife and mother whose life is one continual struggle, who denies herself that her husband and children may have enough, who works without ceasing, never complains, comforts her husband, brings up her children well, and practices heroic virtues unseen by any one, unknown even to herself. That woman is one of Heaven's own heroines."

Lady Yorke was silent and thoughtful during the rest of the day, but in the evening she relapsed into the old lackadaisical mood.

A few days afterwards I asked her if she would go to Woodheaton again, and, having no other engagement, she consented. Just what I longed for happened. When we reached the shop of the principal stationer, the wife of the Rector was there. She knew Lady Yorke in a distant fashion.

Mrs. Durrant was an active, energetic woman, whose life was filled with good deeds, the very reverse of beautiful, luxury-loving Lady Yorke. To my great delight, she began to talk to Lady Yorke about the badness of the times, the want of work, the poverty of the people. I shall never forget Mrs. Durrant's face when Lady Yorke languidly took out her well-filled purse.

"Would money be of any use?" she asked.

"Heaven bless me!" cried the Rector's wife, startled out of all propriety.—"Why, Lady Yorke, it is only money that we want. Money will purchase food, coal, clothes, fuel, and everything else."

I heard the rustle of bank notes, and Lady Yorke said gently:

"Will you distribute this amongst your poor?"

The eyes of the Rector's wife filled with tears. She saw in the gift relief for many from utter misery.

"If you would see poverty in all its desolation, Lady Yorke," she said, earnestly, "you should go to a place that is called Sandy Fields."

After the Rector's wife had departed, I turned to Lady Yorke.

"Will you go?" I asked her.

"I do not know, Miss Chester," she said, drawing her rich silks and laces tightly around her. "I have never seen anything of the kind."

"When you die," I remarked, "you will like to have some good deed to remember. You will like to think then that you have lessened the burden of one human heart."

"You frighten me," she said. "Yes, I will go."

Half an hour afterwards fashionable, self-indulgent Lady Yorke stood in the poorest cottage in Sandy Fields, looking round her in horror and dismay. Only a starving woman and a starving child were there; there was no fire, no food, no table, no chair, no bed. It was a most hopeless, helpless case.

"A contrast to Westwood," I whispered to her.

At first the woman was sullen and would not speak—her misery was too great. Then she cried out:

"No, you can do nothing for me. My husband died six weeks ago; and this is all I have in the world. Now she is dying. Heaven itself cannot help me." She looked at Lady Yorke. "You mean well," she said, "but the money that bought that silk gown would have kept my husband alive. He died hungry. Do you think I shall ever forget that? He moaned all night before he died from hunger—not pain, but hunger. I loved him with all my heart, and I had to sit and listen until I could have rushed out of the house to slay and rob the first person I met. He died hungry, while in your house good food is wasted. Ah, my lady, your dogs and horses are better off than we are!"

I saw Lady Yorke's face grow very pale, and her eyes sought mine with a frightened look.

"He moaned all night," continued the woman, "and I had nothing to give him but water. He was not one to complain, but, when death came on him in the morning, he said to me, 'Ah, lassie, the rich have it in this world; we shall have it in the next!' I went out and sold the last thing that belonged to me—my wedding-ring—that morning, and I bought tea and bread. 'I have gone past it,' he said. 'It is all over, lassie. It has come too late.' Seven years ago, when we were married, he was tall and straight and handsome. He took me to a pretty home, and he worked hard for me; but trouble came, and he died hungry. My poor lad! My poor lad!"

I knew that in her heart Lady Yorke was thinking of the dainties that, sent away in capricious discontent, would have saved this poor man's life.

"Annie is dying," the woman went on, in the same hopeless, helpless voice, with a wild gleam in her eyes. "A few weeks ago good food might have saved her; now it is too late. Last night I went everywhere to get one penny to buy her an orange with. She had been craving all day for an orange, and every time she fell asleep she dreamt that she held the orange in her hand, and that it fell to the ground. I would have done anything for one penny, but I could not get it."

"I am very sorry," said Lady Yorke. "If I had known——"

"No one knows!" cried the poor woman. "We work and toil, we suffer and die, and no one knows—only Heaven. Heaven counts our miseries and pains, and will change them into blessings. Annie will be in Heaven soon, and there will be no more hunger or cold for her."

For the first time I saw tears in Lady Yorke's eyes.

"Would you like very much to keep Annie with you?" she asked; and I hardly knew her voice. It had lost its languor, and was clear and sweet.

"Would I? Ah, my lady, Annie is the very heart that beats in my breast!" she cried. "When she is gone, all is gone. I shall not try to live; I shall lie down by her side and die."

"How long is it since you have tasted food?" I asked her.

"Two whole days," she replied.

Her white quivering hands and trembling hands bore testimony to the truth of her words. Lady Yorke looked at me.

"We must help them," she said; and, as she uttered the words, it seemed to me that a new soul shone in her eyes.

We left the house and went to the nearest shops.

"Tell me what to buy, Miss Chester," she said; and a basket of food, including some fine ripe oranges, was ordered to be taken to the woman's house.

The poor creature never thought of herself. I shall never forget the cry with which she seized an orange and gave it to the child. It was one of delirious delight.

"I shall do all I can for you," said Lady Yorke, as she came away. "If we can save little Annie, she shall be saved."

And again I saw tears in the blue eyes which until now had never looked out on other's woes.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Sun-Browned Westerners.

The people of the west are darker than those of the east. It is easy to see that. They live more in the open air. They are browned by the sun and roughened by the winds of the prairies. This is as true of the women as of the men. West of the Mississippi you see very few fat men. Even middle-weight men are rare. The rule is, tall, dark, dark-haired, brown or black beard, thin. What is it that makes so many men of the prairie west shoot up more than six feet in the air and yet keep their weight down to 160 or 165 pounds I could not discern. But any one who travels much in that region must have noticed the remarkable stature of the men as a whole. Of course the average of humanity in the west is more uncouth than in the east. In the hotels and the dining-cars you see more men, and women, too, eating with their knives or with napkins tucked under their chins. West of Chicago you will hear three times as many persons sucking soup out of their spoons as east of that point. But in kindliness, true, sincere politeness, absence of affectation and priggishness, the westerners beat us every time. If you go out from the east and think to take them up for hayseeds or pumpkins you will make a sad mistake.—Cor. Augusta Chronicle.

Making a Man Look Pleasant.

A photographer at the convention in Buffalo told a reporter of the old days in the west, when the man at the camera used to make the subject "look pleasant" by leveling a pistol at him and saying: "Look right square in the muzzle of this yer revolver, my man, and remember that I hain't agoin' to hev this picture spoiled with any o' your foolin'."

Editor Rosewater of the Omaha Bee, who has been in Europe for some time, has been making a special study of the European telegraph systems.

DUEL IN MIDAIR.

But Neither of the Rival Brothers Lived to Get the Maiden.

They were brothers—came into the world the same day, the same hour. In like manner they appeared before the tent of Pedro, the showman, asking employment.

"What can you do?"

"Anything requiring strength and agility."

"A proof."

The words were scarcely spoken when they leaped over his head, landing before him in smiling precision, says the Buffalo Express. Pedro was delighted; the engagement was concluded.

Nothing could be more graceful or daring than these young acrobats. Only Nita, Pedro's daughter, seemed indifferent to their attractions. Fresh as a rose and changeful as a butterfly, she teasingly mocked the brothers, who silently received her coquetries, yet Dick grew pale when she talked with Dock and Dock crimsoned with rage when she smiled on Dick.

Time rolled on and gold rolled into the coffers of Pedro, who sought to retain his profitable assistants by a bond not easily broken. "I will give them my daughter. Sapristi! She can only marry one. Nita must choose." She laughingly said "as she couldn't marry both she would have neither."

Then Pedro laid his dilemma before the brothers. "Which one of you will marry my little Nita?" They looked at each other in consternation. He naively repeated: "Which one?" Dock replied: "In ten days we will answer." "Ah," said Pedro, "after the ascension; I understand." He had arranged a balloon ascension, a trapeze attached upon which the brothers would perform their wonderful feats 500 meters above the earth.

The day of the exhibition. A sea of faces. The balloon in the center, swaying like a bird trying her wings. With shouts as Nita appears in her silver-spangled costume, driving the chariot containing the brothers.

The aeronaut mounts his car, accompanied by the acrobats. "Let her loose." A moment's silence, followed by deafening shouts as the balloon cleaves the air. Two forms appear on the trapeze. Their audacity is marvelous. Here is what occurs:

The men face each other, their arms folded. A light motion of their hips maintains their equilibrium. Dick speaks:

"You love Nita?"

"Yes, and you?"

"Love her and cannot give her up."

"I will not," answers Dick; "fate must decide."

They step back the length of the trapeze—then rush upon each other with panting breath—a fearful struggle, the bar bending beneath their weight—cheer after cheer from the admiring crowd.

Suddenly Dick loses his hold falling back on the trapeze. Dock bends over him.

"Will you give up Nita?"

"No."

He buries his knife in his companion's throat, the hot blood spurting in his face.

Raising up, he looks around, but sees neither the yawning depth below nor the blue sky above. A wild, maniac laugh as he leaps into space, falling a crushed, lifeless mass on a distant roof, while the dead body of his brother, convulsively clinging to the trapeze, floats in the blue sky, the aeronaut still waving his flag.

A Crankish Canary.

A childless couple up-town expend most of their sympathies on a canary bird which is a crank on the feather question. The little fellow, who is 7 years old, has always had an aversion to his natural dress, and has industriously pulled out every feather he could reach. The result is that he has now a smooth, shiny skin which looks like polished parchment, two or three lonely tail feathers, and a trifle of plumage on his head and neck. In summer he is all right, but the cold of winter bothers him. As soon as frost comes he is clad in a warm flannel jacket, which he admires immensely. At night he lies down on a bed of cotton batting, submits quietly to be covered up, and sleeps there contentedly till morning. If the cold becomes too severe he calls out until he is taken out of the cage and put in bed with his mistress, to whom he cuddles up eagerly for warmth.—N. Y. Sun.

The world's horse-power represents a billion men, or double the number of workers in the world.

HOW'S THIS?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.

WEST & TRAUX, Wholesale Druggists Toledo, Ohio.

WALDING, KINNAN & MARAIN, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, Ohio.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price 75c. per bottle. Sold by all Druggists.

MINING IN OLD MEXICO.

A Great Industry.

Mr. A. W. Gifford, an old Kansas newspaper man, who has spent ten years mining in the country, says: Few people in this country comprehend the magnitude of the developed mining interests of old Mexico, saying nothing of the thousands of unlocated claims lying dormant in well defined and proven leads that have yielded millions of dollars. A few enterprising Americans, Englishmen and Germans who can see the magnitude of the coming mining wave for Mexico have visited the country and purchased valuable properties that will undoubtedly yield handsome returns during the next three years. I am partial to mining in Mexico, I think it the greatest field on this continent. It offers greater inducements than all others. The bankers and business men of Pittsburg, Kansas have purchased a big gold mine recently, and organized the Pittsburg-Mexican Mining Co., and are offering the first twenty-five thousand shares at only $1 per share. In my judgement this stock will be worth from $3 to $5 per share within two years.—Ft. Scott Monitor.

MEN Wanted; salary and expenses. Permanent place. Apply at once. Browne Bros. Co., Nurserymen, Chicago.

"August Flower"

Mr. Lorenzo F. Sleeper is very well known to the citizens of Appleton, Me., and neighborhood. He says: "Eight years ago I was taken "sick, and suffered as no one but a "dyspeptic can. I then began taking August Flower. At that time "I was a great sufferer. Everything I ate distressed me so that I "had to throw it up. Then in a "few moments that horrid distress "would come on and I would have "to eat and suffer "again. I took a "little of your medicine, and felt much "better, and after "taking a little more "August Flower my "Dyspepsia disappeared, and since that time I "have never had the first sign of it. "I can eat anything without the "least fear of distress. I wish all "that are afflicted with that terrible "disease or the troubles caused by "it would try August Flower, as I "am satisfied there is no medicine "equal to it."

For that Horrid Stomach Feeling.

PILES RUDY'S PILE SUPPOSITORY is a sovereign remedy for Piles (bleeding, itching, blind, inward, etc.) whether of recent or long standing. It gives instant relief, and effects a radical and permanent cure. No surgical operation required. Try it and relieve your sufferings. Send for circular and free sample. Only 50 cents a box. For sale by druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of price.
MARTIN RUDY, Lancaster, Pa.

TUMORS
Internal or External, successfully Treated by New Method. No knife; no pain or shock. For pamphlet write The Sanitarium, Union Springs, N.Y.

Paper For Sale.
The leading Republican newspaper at a good county seat. Good job office. Address Y care M. C. Newspaper Co. Mason City, Ia.-1a*

Farm For Sale.
A No. 1 Improved Stock Farm of 365 Acres for Sale Cheap.

THE PORTLAND STOCK FARM.
Situated adjoining the village of Portland, on the C. M. & St. P. R. R 4 miles east of Mason City, Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa. Farm fenced into 18 different fields and yards all hog tight and horse high. Farm buildings and all improvements are first class. Two large troughs soft spring water five rods from barn; farm also watered by Lime Creek and several springs. Twenty acres of timber surround buildings, also one thousand (1,000) rods of beautiful willow hedge on farm, 20 to 75 feet high, mostly bordering on the highways. Four large barns (hay capacity 200 tons) with five hundred (500) feet of basement walls. A large water-power roller mill and cheese and butter factory join farm. A large modern, first-class farm house, built in 1890.
Mason City, the county seat of Cerro Gordo county, and the Lexington of Iowa, is a beautiful little city of about five thousand (5,000) inhabitants. She has just completed one of the best mile tracks in the state, which, with the fair grounds, have been built at an expense of $20,000.
Price of farm, forty-five dollars ($45.00) per acre. For particulars and picture of farm and buildings, call on or address the owner at Portland, Cerro Gordo County, Iowa.
A. S. FELT, prop.

THE OLD DOCTOR'S Cotton Root Pills LADIES' FAVORITE.
ALWAYS RELIABLE and perfectly SAFE. The same as used by thousands of women all over the United States, in the OLD DOCTORS private mail practice, for 38 years, and not a single bad result. Money returned if not as represented. Send 4 cents (stamps) for sealed particulars.
Dr. WARD & CO., 117 N. 8th St., St. Louis, Mo.

FAT FOLKS REDUCED
Mrs. Alice Maple, Oregon, Mo., writes "My weight was 320 pounds, now it is 195, a reduction of 125 lbs." For circulars address, with 6c., Dr. O. W. F. SNYDER, McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, Ill.

WANTED.
$15 A WEEK. ANY LADY, employed or unemployed, can make this for a few hours work each day. Salary or com. $10 samples free.
Ad. H. BENJAMIN & CO., 115 N. 8th St., ST. LOUIS, MO.

The WEAK made STRONG
FREE TRIAL {In Nervous Debility, Lost Vitality, Weakness and Decay, sent free for 12 cents postage.
Address Dr. Ward Office, 117 N. 8th Street, St. Louis, Mo.

ANY LADY can get a valuable secret that cost me $5.00, and a rubber shield for 30 cents.
Mrs. V. M. APP. CO.
115 N. 8th STREET, ST. LOUIS, MO.

$3.75 A DAY and steady work right at home for any man or lady. Write Stone & Wellington, Madison, Wis.

Mason City Newspaper Co-91-50

A SAFE INVESTMENT. TRY IT

THE PITTSBURG-MEXICAN MINING COMPANY, organized under the laws of Kansas, capital stock 300,000 shares of $1 each, fully paid up and non-assessable 25,000 shares now offered the public, funds to be spent in placing machinery.

This company has deviated from the accustomed rule by capitalizing a property on basis of cost, offering the investor the same basis as original owners, who have taken all the chances, proving value of mine before offering stock to the public.

By this plan the Company hopes to scatter the first 25,000 shares among investors who will become co-operators in building the stock up to $5 per share, believing it a better plan to have a low capitalized stock at a premium, than high one at a discount.

DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

LOCATION:—Old Mexico. An attractive camp, abundance of timber, water sufficent for mill capacity 100 tons per day.

VEIN:—A 90 foot, well defined vein in prophrey and granite, mineralized from wall to wall. A rotten red and yellow iron ore with streaks and pockets of hard, black iron ore, all carrying gold in paying quantties.

DEVELOPMENT:—One half mile of development work on vein consisting of sharp 185 feet, with tunnels, levels, cross cuts, stops, etc.

ORE:—5,000 tons on dump. 50,000 tons blocked out ready for the miner, and 100,000 tons additional can be blocked out in 90 days by continuing levels. From grass roots to bottom of shaft, and from wall to wall assays from $2 to $165 per ton averaging by mill tests, saved on the plates, from $3 to $7 per ton.

COSTS:—Can be mined and milled by a small plant, for $1.25 and on a large scale at 75 cens per ton and possibly less.

VALUE:—Estimated to be worth $1,000,000.00. If ore increases in value for 100 feet in additional depth as it has for the last 50 feet, it will be the greatest gold mine on this continent, and the stock liable to be worth $10 per share.

The mine is under the supervision of a competent mining man, one of the principal stockholders, who has been interested in the property from its discovery. The stock will increase in value and pay dividends during '92. Buy stock now.

REFERENCES:—The National Bank of Pittsburg, Kas. Bank of Fort Scott, Kan. Angell Matthewson, Banker, Parsons, Kas. Address.

PITTSBURG-MEXICAN MINING CO.
PITTSBUG, KANSAS.

Mason City Business College

Institute of Short-Hand and Telegraphy gives two complete courses for $30. Five experienced instructors in Commercial and Short-Hand Departments. Gray's System of Short-Hand taught. We have the largest and best lighted school room. Our graduates succeed. Day board $1.50 per week; furnished rooms 50 cents per week. Write for information.
C. P. HEADINGTON, Principal, MASON CITY, IOWA

MASON CITY, IOWA,
Cancer Infirmary
The Only Reliable Institution in the Northwest. Homelike and Pleasant,
DR. M. V. MAYFIELD, the Specialist, has been more than successful for thirteen years. No Knife. No Caustics.
H. E. MOORE, the President, GUARANTEES A CURE OR NO PAY.

Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co.
of Milwaukee, Wis.

Assets Jan. 1st, 1891, - - - - -	$42,353,912.96
Surplus Jan. 1st, 1891, - - - - -	$ 6,582,324.98

I consider my policies in your company the cheapest insurance I have.
JOHN V. FARWELL, Merchant

I consider the Northwestern incomparably the safest, best and cheapest institution of the kind in the country.
WM. STEVENS PERRY, Bishop of Iowa.

I have dropped my policies in the Equitable of New York and New York Life and taken additional insurance in the Northwestern.
R. M. STEEL, Banker.

H. A. MUNGER, GENERAL AGENT, Cedar Rapids Iowa.
D. R. HUBBARD, ASSOCIATE GENERAL AGENT, Mason City, Iowa.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION
Best Cough Medicine. Recommended by Physicians. Cures where all else fails. Pleasant and agreeable to the taste. Children take it without objection. By druggists.

A Complete Reference Library

AT ABOUT 2 CTS. A DAY.

REVISED ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA

20 Large Octavo Volumes, 7,000 Pages, 8,000.000 Words, and 97 Maps Printed in Colors, Bound in Jute Manilla,

AND THE WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS FOR ONE YEAR

ALL FOR $7.50!

This is the GREATEST OFFER ever made by any Newspaper. The Revised Encyclopædia Britannica is a Dictionary of Art, Science and Literature to which is added descriptions of American Cities with a History of their Origin and Growth, together with Accurate Information of their Situation, Population, Resources, etc., etc,

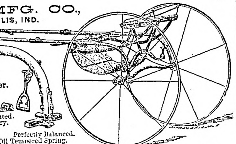
The Best, Cheapest, Completest and Latest Revised Encyclopædia and the Greatest Newspaper,

THE WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS FOR ONE YEAR FOR $7.50 !

AND WE PAY THE FREIGHT.

Address WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS, St. Paul, Minn.

PARRY MFG. CO.,
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.



No. 7½.

Price, $18.00 at Factory, Cash with Order.

Strictly First-Class. Warranted.
All Second Growth Hickory.
Steel Axles and Tires.
Low Bent Seat Arms. Perfectly Balanced.
Long, Easy Riding, Oil Tempered Spring.
Best Wheels and Best All Over.

IF YOU CAN'T FIND THEM FOR SALE BY YOUR MERCHANTS, WRITE US

WE are making a specialty this season of what we call our PARAGON HARNESS. Made of the FINEST STOCK and the very BEST WORKMANSHIP. Such a harness cannot be bought for less than $25. at retail. But we are willing, in order to introduce it, to SELL ONE SET ONLY to one person as a sample for $16.50.

$25.00 HARNESS FOR $16.50

IN GENUINE RUBBER $18.00.

DESCRIPTION OF HARNESS.

A fine Buggy Harness stitched twelve stitches to the inch, except traces which are stitched ten. Is made to represent a $25 harness. It has a 3 or 3 1/2 inch heavy leather [illegible] saddle, with covered seat and jockeys; is made from fine stock. Bridle is of usual dimensions, has fine blinds, nice leather front and beautiful rosettes with glass centers, nice nickel bit. Check-rein, either overdraw with nose-piece, or side check. Nice russet or black reins. The breast-collar, neck-strap, breeching and trace folds are made either of patent enamel or plain harness leather as preferred and the layers on the same are cut wide and straight, and being stitched so very fine and nicely creased, give to the harness a costly custom-made appearance. The hip and back straps are doubled and stitched, nicely creased and finished throughout. Boxloops of beautiful design as on custom-made work. Trimmings either Davis Rubber, Nickel Wire or Brass Wire, or a Fancy style. We refer you to the publishers of this paper as to our responsibility. Remit by Express or Money Order. Money refunded if goods are not satisfactory.

BOSTON HARNESS CO.,
[illegible]

Red Lake Falls Iron Works,

P. & J. MEEHAN, Proprietors.
J. Z PERRON, Manager.

SAW AND GRIST MILL

MACHINERY MADE AND REPAIRED.

Repairing Thresher Engines

AND BOILERS AND

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS

Circular Saws Hammered. Satisfaction Guaranteed, Correspondenc solicited.

BRING IN YOUR WORK

Scrap Brass and Copper Bought.

PERFECTION IN BUTTER MAKING.

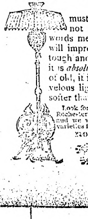
The O. K. OUTFIT EXCELS THEM ALL.

THE O.K. CREAMERY

Has the largest cooling surface; takes less cooling material; less labor, and gives Best Results. All cream raised between milkings. Skimming Glass whole depth of can, showing condition of milk without touching Creamery. Send for O. K. Catalogue.

JOHN S. CARTER, Sole Manf'r, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

"Seeing is Believing."

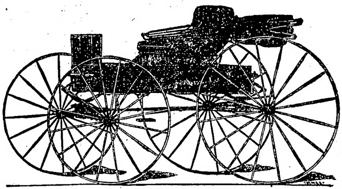


And a good lamp must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer hasn't the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue and we will send you a lamp safely by express—your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.

ROCHESTER LAMP CO., 42 Park Place, New York City.

"The Rochester."



WARRANTED WAGONS AND BUGGIES

MANUFACTURED BY

EASY WAGON GEAR CO.

DETROIT, MICH.

If you wish the easiest riding, most durable and attractive Wagon or Buggy made, ask your Dealer to show you these goods. A written warranty furnished with every one. Take no other. You may as well have the BEST. It costs no more than an inferior article.

CATALOGUE SENT IF REQUESTED.

We Would Like to Call the Attention of

Capitalists

Manufacturers and Others Desiring a Place for

INVESTMENT

To the

Superior Advantages of

RED LAKE FALLS

Its Many WaterPowers and other natural advantages. It is only a question of a few years until this will be one of the leading cities of Minnesota. Investment in real estate or water privileges are sure to secure to the investors handsome returns.

WE RE

In the Center of Vast

Farming District.

Yearly consuming large amounts of imported products of manufactures. This vast tract of land is watered by the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers. Within the limits of the city are

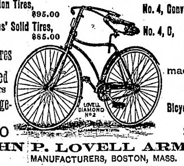
12 DISTINCT WATER POWERS.

The only natural water powers on these streams. There are fine openings for paper and pulp mills, woolen and other factories. Parties outside [illegible] any information concerning

LOVELL DIAMOND CYCLES.

STRICTLY HIGH GRADE.

No. 1, Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 2, Cushion Tires, $95.00
No. 3, Ladies' Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 3 C, Ladies' Cushion Tires, $95.00
No. 4, Convertible Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 4, C, " Cushion Tires, $95.00



OUR Cushion Tires ARE Warranted ALL PARTS Interchangeable.

No better machine made at any price.

Bicycle Catalogue Free.

$85.00 $85.00

JOHN P. LOVELL ARMS CO.,
MANUFACTURERS, BOSTON, MASS.

Send six cents in stamps for our 100 page Illustrated Catalogue of Guns, Rifles, Revolvers, Sporting Goods of all kinds, etc.

ANDERSON'S SHORTHAND TYPEWRITER
Prints A Word at One Stroke.

THIS is the machine that is used in the Office, Court-room, and for reporting lectures and sermons.

While its speed is greater than any other known method, it is so simple that any intelligent person can gain a speed of 100 or more words per minute, in five or six weeks, without the aid of an instructor. Circulars and testimonials sent to all who mention this paper.

E. T. PIERCE, FAYETTE, OHIO,
Sole Agent for U. S. and Canada.

THE NEW WEBSTER

JUST PUBLISHED—ENTIRELY NEW.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

A GRAND INVESTMENT for the Family, the School, or the Library.

Revision has been in progress for over 10 Years. More than 100 editorial laborers employed. $300,000 expended before first copy was printed. Critical examination invited. Get the Best. Sold by all Booksellers. Illustrated pamphlet free.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

RALPH & BOURDON,

Proprietors of the

CITY
DRAY
LINE.

WOOD & COAL.

Anything in our line done

Promptly and at very

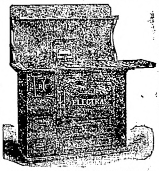
Reasonable

Rates.

GIVE US A CALL

INDIANA RANGE CO.

MANUFACTURERS OF WROUGHT STEEL RANGES



Guaranteed to be the most economical, most durable and most perfect Range on the market. Suitable for hard or soft coal, or wood.

Send for catalogue to

INDIANA RANGE CO.
EVANSVILLE, IND.

Bucklin's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for cuts bruises, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25 cents per bottle. For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

The Mystery Solved.

A jockey overheard a conversation in a stable that excited his curiosity and lead him to make a thorough investigation which resulted in the following valuable discovery. That Metzger's Angleworm and Wormwood Oil Liniment for horses has no equal as it keeps their joints limber and gives them good action, and for sprains, etc., it cures quickly, as every one is aware of the penetrating qualities of angle and wormwood oil. Call on W. A. Schreiter and get a bottle as he reports it's giving universal satisfaction. Price 50c and $1 per bottle.

His Curiosity Was Gratified.

A stranger stood alone in the street of a great city. His hat was napless his boots covered with the dust of travel. Around him on every side a hurrying throng pushed and jostled in mad haste. He turned to a friendly policeman and said: "Say: Where be all these people gwine"! The officer was dumfounded at such ignorance Where are they going? Why, to purchase tickets via the popular Wisconsin Central If you ar going anywhere you want to go with the crowd and ride on the best track in the most comfortable cars and with the greatest ease you ever experienced". For tickets berths and further information apply to any ticket agent.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. W. A. Schreiter Druggists.

A Safe Investment.

Is one which is guaranteed to bring satisfactory results, or in case of failure purchase price. On this safe plan you can buy from our advertised Druggist a bottles of Dr. Kings New Discovery for Consumption. It is guaranteed to bring relief in every case, when used for any affection of Throat, Lungs or Chest, such as Consumption, Inflammation of Lungs, Bronchitis Asthma, Whooping Cough Croup, colic can always be depended upon Trial bottles free at W. A. Schreiter's. Drugstore.

Notice.

To the owners of following described lots and parcels of land situate lying and being in the Village of Red Lake Falls Minn., viz.

Lot 13, 14, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24 in block 7 of Champagne & Dow's add. Also lots 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 Blk 23, Lots 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 Blk 32, Lots 13 & N 50 ft lot [illegible] Blk 43, Lot 9 Blk 44, lot 1 Blk 65, lots 10, 11, 12 Blk 70 and lot 9 Blk 83 in Kretzschmar's addition.

You are notified to repair the sidewalks in front of said above described lots and parcels of land within fourteen days from date of this notice or the same will be done by the village and assessed against said lots as provided by law.

Dated Red Lake Falls, Minn., Nov. 16th, 1891.

H. B. DAVIS,
Recorder.

ADAM SCHMITZ

DEALER IN

Horse Furnishing Goods,

5/A HORSE BLANKETS
5/A HORSE BLANKETS

EVERYBODY WANTS ONE.

Two or three dollars for a 5/A Horse Blanket will save double its cost. Your horse will eat less to keep warm and be worth fifty dollars more.

LIGHT AND HEAVY HARNESS, Whips, Combs, Brushes, Trunks, Valises.

The celebrated STANDARD HORSE AND CATTLE FOOD. Every stock owner should test its merits. For sale by ADAM SCHMITZ.

Broadway Red Lake Falls

Librarian
State Historical Society

RED LAKE FALLS NEWS.

JAS. MEEHAN JR. / P. MEEHAN } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS. OFFICIAL PAPER OF CITY

Vol. VIII No. 50. RED LAKE FALLS, POLK COUNTY, MINNESOTA, DECEMBER 10, 1891. TERMS, $1.50 PER YEAR

CHRISTMAS - IS - COMING!

AND AS USUAL SANTA CLAUS IS MAKING HIS HEADQUARTERS AT

The Drug and Jewelry Store,

Where can be found the finest assortment of

Toys and Holiday Goods, ALBUMS TOILET CASES, WORK BOXES, DOLLS, CUPS AND SAUCERS, ROCKING HORSES, ETC, ETC. Something Nice AND Cheap

Remember, we have the goods. Call and see us at the old stand.

W. J. Flack, Proprietor; Miss Mattie Gervais, Assistant.

☞P. S.—Also Watches, Jewelry and Musical Goods in Large Variety.

Joseph Smith & Co.

HAVE, AS USUAL, A COMPLETE Stock of General Merchandise, Including a Fine Assortment of Goods Suitable For Holiday Gifts.

A large stock of Ladies Winter Dress Goods, Cloaks, etc. and general furnishing goods.

A Large Stock of Gents Furnishings. Call and Examine Stock.

Frank E. Hunt,

DEALER IN

GENERAL : HARDWARE.

P & J MEEHAN,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. J. HOWE & CO)

Manufacturers and Dealers in

LUMBER,

LATH,

SHINGLES

Sash, Doors, Moldings, Building Paper,

Yards and Office on Main St.

Washington Letter.

Special Correspondence.

The past week has been especially marked by events that have transpired at the National Capital. The selection of Minneapolis for the next National Republican Convention was not reached without a hard and vigorious sttruggle unprecdented in the history of the Republican party. All the cities interested in the contest were well represented, and each and all made a gallant and aggressive fight; the city selected being centrally located, and the choice is considered a very desirable and satisfactory one; Minneapolis in this effort was championed by her sister city St. Paul, and now to reciprocate Minneapolis has pledged her support in behalf of St. Paul for securing the National Democratic convention; this looks as though Minnesota was trying to get a "corner" on conventions. Present indications however point to its being captured by an eastern city.

A rumor has been current for some days that Mr. Blaine would resign from the Cabinet in January, to spend the winter in the West Indies, This rumor has been denied and reasserted with about equal force. The Secretary is apparently a healthy man and would no doubt prove equal to the task of enduring a campaign.

Thanksgiving day was spent in a quiet manner by the President and his family at the White House, dining late in the day with several of their pesonal friends. The Vice President and Mrs. Morton spent the day in New York.

Ex-Senator Palmer of the National Commission of the world's Columbian Exposition, has submitted to the President a report of the Commission in regard to the progress, and condition of the Exposition work. It strongly endorses the action of the board of control, and recommends the loan of $5,000,000 by the General Government to advance the interests of the project. As the President has decided not to incorporate Worlds Fair matters in the annual message to Congress, he will make this a subject of special communication, and recommend the additional appropriation by a message to Congress some time this month.

A serious dispute is likely to take place between the United State and Canada over the boundary between Washington and British Columbia. A strip of thirty miles forming a portion of the state of Washington, including the greater part of the town of Blaine is claimed by the Dominion. This depute has been occasioned by certain inaccuracies on the part of the engineers of the English Government.

The new "Windom" silver certificate will be issued by the Treasury this week and as a compliment to the late Secretary of the Treasury, certificate No. one will be sold to Mrs. Window. The note bears evidence of the highest order of engraving and will supercede the $2. silver certificate now in circulation.

The Excitement Not Over.

The rush at Schreiter's drug store still continues on account of persons afflicted with Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scrofula, Soreness and inflammation of eyes, sores, pains, etc., etc., to procure a package of Metzger's Pain Eradicator which is sold on a guarantee and is giving entire satisfaction. It is a standard family remedy. Prise 50 cents. Trial size free.

A County Hospital.

At the meeting of the county commissioners yesterday, a county hospital was established. The three story frame building in Crookston known as the "Mansard" was purchased, the price paid, including the furniture, being $3,397.70. The hospital will be opened about the middle of January, after which the accommodations will be open to all, and gratis to county poor. The disrepute of the "mansion" affected its market value; for the sum paid, the county has property whose intrinsic value is about $5,000.

Council Proceedings.

All members present except Duffy.

Minutes of last meeting were read and approved.

On motion the following accounts were allowed out of road and bridge fund:

P. Embrd, $11.55.
A. Labounty, $4.00.
E. Lefoux, $9.00.
M. Kees, $2.00.
F. Schmidt, $15.00.
P. Holzknecht, $3.00.
B. Shussar, $4.00.
L. Phillian, $10.00.
J. Ralph, $4.50.

On motion the account of Jas. Lee allowed out of general fund at $38 and Simon Paul account at $22.00.

On motion recorder was instructed to draw an order on poor fund to transport Michael Ballet to Minneapolis.

On motion council adjourned to meet in four weeks.

H. B. DAVIS,
Recorder.

JAS. MEEHAN JR.,
President.

More About Immigration.

The Great Northern Railway is doing good service in inducing a desirable class of immigrants, says the Crookston Times. All kinds of statistical and other practical information, showing the resources of the Valley, are being gathered and agents are to be sent to various parts of the United States and Canada, and even to Europe, to present the advantages of this section to a desirable class of people. As the times announced some time ago, Mayor McKinnon starts shortly for Ontario on this mission, and Thomas Hodgson, of Minneapolis, is now in the Valley getting practical information which he will use on a like journey across the Atlantic. His field will be the north of England and the south of Scotland, where he once resided. His visit here is for the purpose of posting himself upon tee resources of the country. It is his intention to carry a miniature exposition of the products of this region consisting of grain, seeds, vegetables, etc., giving the yield per acre of each. Samples will be taken from various places in the Valley, and a box full of Red River Valley soil will also be taken to show the Britishers what kind of dirt yields such prodigious results. Mr. Hodgson also has a collection of views of farm scenes, buildings manufactories, etc. These will be copied into slides and he will exhibit them by means of a stereopticion. It is his intention to visit the smaller town which have never yet been worked by immigrations agents. He will labor among farmers of moderate means who are able to start out sons with enough money to engage in farming in the country. There are a great many of this class in the country to which Mr. Hodgson is going, and he believes that great results will come from his work Taken all in all the prospect of the Red River Valley were never so favorable and already farm lands have increased in value to a considerable extent.

Terrebonne Items.

Mrs. J. M. Bray of Red Lake Falls has been visiting her sister Mrs. A. Laurent.

Miss Eda Champoux of Badger Creek visited her aunt Mrs. L. Laurent.

Mrs. X. Sauvee was dangerously ill the past week but is now recovering.

Miss Eugenie Laframboise of Gentilly was visiting friends on Tuesday.

The Schools of Terrebonne were closed on Tuesday to enjoy the Holiday.

Mrs. D. Champoux of Badger Creek is on the sick list this week.

Mr. E. Moranville of Badger Creek was up at the Great Meadows visiting his sister Mrs. Lacombe.

Mr. and Mrs. R. St. Marie of Terrebonne drove to Red Lake Falls on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Dubuque of Gentilly were up on Saturday to visit their daughter Mrs. H. Marchaud. Mr. and Mrs. Dubuque will leave the 20th of December for a visit to friends and relatives in Canada.

Take a Week off.

The promise of the springtime in the Northwest has been gloriously redeemed in the harvest of the early autumn. Wheat exceeded even the expectations of the man who has farm lands to sell. The European crops were in great part failures. The Northwestern farmer has been feeling pretty well. Have you had a share of this prosperity, or are you like the hoop on a barrel—not in it? If you are of the lucky ones, why not take a few weeks off this winter, and make a visit to the old home, or a trip to Florida, Louisiana, Calfornia, or Mexico? Nothing will do so much to enliven a man, and furnish him with a supply of amusing and happy remembrances as a journey, especialy to countries different from his own. To the American, Mexico is a revelation, in productions, climate, customs, and the evidences of a former high civilization, so old that the discovery of Columbus would be an event of yesterday in comparison. To start right on such trip, call on the nearest ticket agent of "The Burlington," for tickets and information, or address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

Pronounced Hopeless yet Saved.

From a letter written by Mrs Ada E. Hurd, of Gorton, S. D., we quote: "Was taken with a bad cold, which settled on my Lungs, cough set in and finally terminated in Consumption. Four doctors gave me up, saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Saviour, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr. king's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles; it has cured me, and thank God I am now a well and hearty woman." Trial bottles free at W. A. Schreiters Drugstore, regular size, 50c and $1.00.

A Remarkable Good Man.

He who attends to the comfort of his family and will not suffer himself or allow them to, with that most dreadful of pains, rheumatism. Metzger's Angle and Wormwood oil Liniment is a positive cure for rheumatism and sprains. It is he best external application on earth. One bottle is better than any amount of porous plaster. Price 50 cents per bottle. For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

A Fact

WORTH KNOWING.

AT

Wells' Confectionery Stand.

On Main st
You can secure rare bargains in Toys and Books as I am closing out My present stock

AT COST

To make room for

Christmas Goods

◆

Don't Forget

That I carry a fine line of Fancy Groceries, Fresh

Maple Syrup, Fine Jellies, Canned Pine-Apples, All kinds of Canned Goods.

Potted Hams, Canned Beef. Boston Baked Beans. Etc.

CIGARS
The Finest and Favorite Brands.
CANDY
Fresh, the Finest Quality.

(I supply this couple with sweets.)

Don't forget to call at

C. B. WELLS.

Do Children Pay?

"Do children pay?" said old man Scruggs, a-leaning on his hoe.
"Just wait till you've been married, say some twenty years or so.
You'll have more sense than to stand up there and throw your time away
By askin' sech fool questions. Pay! Great gosh! Of course they pay!

"We go home tuckered out at night; they climb upon our knees,
And when we try to put 'em down they cry for one more squeeze,
And roar and pitch about us all until, fust thing we know,
Our joints are free from aching and our hearts are in a glow.

"They pay us when their frank young love shines in their jolly eyes;
Even when our ears are deafened there's music in their cries
Sweeter than all the fiddles and the pianners ever made—
Don't think it's so? Well, now, you wait and 'member what I've said.

"The man whose children's hearts are his is the man who is truly blest,
The sight at home of his boys and gals is more to him than rest.
I swow! There wouldn't be half the fools in this weary world today
If all men only could understand what big intrus' children pay."

—Yankee Blade.

CLARA MORRIS' HOME.

"The Pines" Makes a Pleasant Place in Which to Dwell.

For seventeen years she has been married. In private she is Mrs. Fred Harriott, and with her husband who is her bon camarade, and her mother, her summers are spent at her beautiful home, "The Pines," situated on the Hudson, half an hour from New York.

Many of her pleasures are identical with those of her fellow townspeople. She is an enthusiastic cultivator of flowers and fruits and vegetables; she goes to church along with the other good people, and enters with the true church picnic spirit upon a Sunday-school outing.

The ground upon which her home is constructed is a portion of the large tract of land once owned by Edwin Forrest. Her neighbor on the left is an English gentleman of the old school. Here is a formidable rival in floriculture. Many a hollyhock and poppy are matched, and great is the delight on either side when a superior coloring or earlier bloom is discovered. On the right are the beautiful grounds of the Mount St. Vincent Convent, also a part of the Forrest estate.

The priests, passing to and fro, seem pleased to raise their hats respectfully to the distinguished neighbor, if she is in sight.

Mrs. Harriott's home is a large three-storied brown wooden house, a few rods from the street. The stone wall which fences in the grounds is overhung with pines, which form a hedge almost perfectly shielding the house from the sight of the occasional passerby.

The road from the street is circuitous, dotted to the right and left with well-kept flower beds. As the barouche and span, which Mrs. Harriott always sends to meet her guests, draws up beneath the side porch, a little plot of ground just to the left, with an iron fence around it, is especially noticeable. Rare shrubs grow within, and a little white headstone bearing the words "In Memoriam" tells that that bit of earth is sacred.

Susanne, who opens the door for you, replies that "Madame is in," in such a pretty, half-whispered, reverential way, and one soon learns the "madame" is well regarded by her attendants, whom she treats with great politeness.

The hall through which you will be shown is cross shaped—a large room by itself.

On one side are the well-selected library and staircase to the floor above. Across the way is the large parlor. To the front is the main entrance door, and at the rear the great, high-posted dining-room, where Mrs. Harriott is found to be an especially graceful hostess. Although she eats only fruit and cream in the summer, and oysters and cream in the winter, her table is well supplied with more substantial nourishment for the stranger.

A glance about the drawing-room and you see at once that you are in the home of an art-lover. The furniture is rather old, sofas and old chairs are covered with a light grey brocaded material. Bits of choice bric-a-brac ornament the mantel, the closed piano has a number of glass vases containing sweet peas and mignonette.

While you are admiring your surroundings you will hear a little barking of little dogs, a swish of muslin and then your hostess will enter with exclamations of pleasure at seeing you, and hoping that you will excuse her appearance.

Her dress is of white muslin, trimmed with billows of lace and dainty ribbons. Really very pretty, and so excusable.

Miss Morris (it is easier to say than Mrs. Harriott) is very well indeed; her spinal trouble is entirely gone. The fresh country air and the ride on horse-back which she invariably takes of an evening, do wonders for her. She may show you the revolver which she always carries on these trips, and declares she will use if the occasion demands it.

Her husband does not often accompany her, finding no pleasure in the exercise.

The dogs Nina, a skye, and Patti, a black and tan, will demand a share of your attention, unless you dislike dogs.

You will find during the talk that Miss Morris is a great reader, and keeps well informed on all subjects of general interest. If you speak of the large Japanese screen by the folding door, and which probably attracted your attention when you came in, your hostess may tell you a pretty story about it. It was painted by a very prominent Japanese artist, and has quite a history. "An old sea captain had it done for me," she says. "You know there are no women actors in Japan, and when he found that I was an actress, and (laughing) quite respectable he was interested, and agreed to paint the picture, although he had never seen me."—N. Y. Press.

"It is a great pity," said the sportsman's wife after he had told her of his day's experiences. "What is?" he asked. "That a fish can't grow as rapidly before it is caught as it does

A KENTUCKY PICNIC.

Nothing but a Brass Band Would Bring a "Colonel" to Town.

I was riding along the dusky road leading south from Manchester, Ky., says a writer in the Philadelphia Press, and had left that town some three miles in my rear, when I struck the house of a backwoodsman, built on the edge of a deep forest.

The house, which stood a little back from the road, surrounded by about half an acre of land, was built of rough hewn logs. It contained but one room proper; but just where the peak began a ceiling of some cast off boards had been put up, thus making a sort of loft or second story, which was reached by means of a ladder constructed of fence rails.

Into this house, in some way, was crowded the "Colonel's" family, consisting of himself, his wife and six children, ranging in age from 3 to 13; the latter scampered away in different directions as I drove up.

I opened the conversation by asking for a drink of water.

"Sutinly, suh," replied the head of the family, who lay stretched out on a bench at the door. "Sarah, bring a dipper of watah fer the gent'lman."

While I was drinking the water the Kentuckian surveyed me lazily from head to foot. Finally, after a few minute's silence, he asked:

"Bin to town?"

"Yes," I replied.

"Anythin' doin' up thar in particular?" he inquired, without raising from his reclining position.

"Well, yes," I answered, "things are quite lively up there this morning."

"Be thar? Wha's a-goin' on?"

"They are holding an election, I believe."

"Huh!" he exclaimed. "That all, reckon Bill McQueery'll be 'lected agin. Hain't had no opposition sense the wah. Nuthin' else doin'?"

"Well," I said, summing up the leading events in my mind, "there is to be a sale on Judson's place this morning."

"Nuther sale? That's the fifth sense the fust of the yeah. Don't guess thar's any use goin' to a sale 'thout money. 'Reckon I'm best jist whar I am."

"I am afraid there will be trouble between Sam Huggars and Colonel Clayton," I said, trying to find something that would interest my host a little. "Clayton called Huggars a whisky funnel this morning and Huggars is hunting him up with the intention of shooting him on sight."

"Um? Let 'em shoot. I'm best whar I am."

"Oh, yes! Your representative, Samuel Roarer, is going to deliver an address this afternoon at the court house."

"Whut! Sam Roarer? If he goin' ter blow agin? Settles it! Now I do stay just whar I am. Me an' Sam can't hit it. He talks too much, an' sense he's bin to Washington he can't take a drink of whisky 'thout water."

"And they are going to have a band at the meeting."

"A whut, mister?" he shouted, springing from the bench and gazing earnestly into my face. "Whut did you say they were goin' to hev?"

"A band—a brass band—."

"Oh, Lordy!" shouted the Kentuckian, "an' I won't be thar to hear it."

"Oh, yes! By the way," I said, "do you remember Pete Dascher, the horse thief?"

"Do I remember Pete Dascher! Wall, mister, he tuk two of the best horses in the State to remember me."

"Well," I replied, "they've got him. I heard some whispering of a lynching as I came away."

"Great Clay!" shouted the now thoroughly excited backwoodsman. "A brass band an' a horse-thief lynchin' in one day. You be'int foolin', suh?"

"Oh, no."

"Settles it! Reckon I'll live to stand Sam Roarer's blowin' for the sake of the music an' the lynchin'. Sarah, tog the youngens an' yourself up an' bring my meetin' coat an' hat. We be a-goin' ter town, er bust."

As I drove off he shouted: "Thanks, mister, fer the news. This is the first picnic we've had for a year."

Oddities of East Indian Life.

The recently published letters of the late archbishop of Bombay give some interesting glimpses of life in India. "After breakfast," he says in one of them, "I had to listen to an address and then to a series of complaints against the parish priest, who was present and defended himself vigorously. A curious case of conscience came before me. The pagans had consecrated a cock to one of their gods. The bird is taken to the shrine, offered to the god, and then set free. Can a Christian kill the cock and eat what has been offered to idols? The common Christians dare not touch such a bird for the world. I fear the priest shot it and made one or two good meals of it." Of the same sort is the following: "Not long since a devout Hindoo gave a live bull to one of his gods, and turned the animal loose. A less worshipful mortal collared the bull and yoked him in his cart. Thereupon followed a lawsuit; the devout man claimed the bull, but the judge decided that the bull was not his—he had given it to his god—and he implied that the deity had not looked after his property."

Cost of Living in Chili.

A lady's bonnet in Chili costs from $30 to $100, dress silk from $6 to $20 a yard, and the modiste will charge you from $30 to $50 for making it. In Santiago I paid $12 per dozen for linen handkerchiefs of small size and ordinary quality, and $18 for a pair of button boots which at home would have cost about $4.50. I am informed that a gentleman's suit of common clothes costs from $60 to $100, a pair of patent-leather shoes from $15 to $30, and a silk hat not less than $25. Breadstuffs are correspondingly high and far beyond the reach of the poor Rotos.—St. Louis Chronicle.

Bishop Philip Brooks speaks 312 words a minute.

THE TOMATO.

A Plant Which Helped to Revolutionize the Food Problem of the World.

The tomato, a native of tropical America, is a rare gift to man, says the Boston Transcript. Though long unappreciated, the fact that no other vegetable is now so universal in gardens, and that on hundreds of small places room is found for it, though denied to everything else, seems a sufficent certificate of merit.

Three American food plants—the Indian corn, the potato, and the tomato—have revolutionized the food problem of the civilized world. Yet another American plant, though not a food producer, might be added to this list of new world conquerors, for it has had a history even more remarkable than that of the others; the "Virginia weed" has penetrated far beyond the bounds of civilization and made conquests where the names of the other three plants have scarcely been heard.

The tomato comes of a family which is largely in the service of mankind. It gave us first of all the potato. The egg-plant and the cayenne or red pepper plant—two other food producers—belong to it; the pretty race of petunias, also the Jerusalem cherry; the climbing bitter-sweet and that inhabitant of old-fashioned gardens, the matrimony bush; the famous tobacco plant and the herb belladonna, of great medicinal importance. Our wayside weed, the common nightshade, whose bright berries we like to see in autumn, is also a humble member of this family.

The tomato got no such early start in the world as did its homespun cousin, the potato. To be sure, it was carried to England in 1596, but never thought of as being eatable then, and was cultivated only for its ornamental appearances and possibly for medicinal purposes. Both there and on the continent it was known as the love-apple, the name which it still bears in France and Italy. Only John Parkinson tells us in his quaint way, as early as 1629: "In hot countries, where they naturally growe, they are much eaten of the people, to cool and quench the heat and thirst of their hot stomachs." Yet it is only within fifty years that they have come into general use.

The season of the tomato is short, yet being essentially a plant of the tropics it can not be ripened often in England, except under a glass. As a hothouse plant, however, it is widely used there, certain varieties developing special adaptation to these conditions. In the short but fervent summer of New England, on the contrary, it finds itself quite at home. Though the plant like many others of tropical origin, is highly susceptible to injury from frost, the seeds are very hardy, sustaining no harm from remaining in the ground throughout winters. If left to come up of themselves, they do so freely from such accidental plantings of the previous season, and here in Massachusetts will begin to ripen fruit about the last of August while plants which are started early in the hotbed or window-box will begin nearly a month sooner. A large field of tomatoes in the vicinity of Boston commenced ripening fruit the present summer about the 10th of July, at which time they brought $12 per bushel in the market.

The fact that the tomato will ripen fairly after plucking enables the southern grower to market his crop in the far north. It also allows us here to prolong the season of the natives. Well-grown but green fruit, picked before frost into shallow baskets or boxes, and kept in a dark, dry room, ripens gradually for the table, and may thus be eaten often until November or later.

The flavor of the tomato depends much upon the manner of culture, and one may be as critical in the matter as in the flavor of a strawberry or a peach. On cold, heavy soils, and allowed to trail on the earth, the fruit is watery and insipid, as well as infested with worms. Select the warmest and lightest soil possible, set the plants far enough apart for the free access of sun and air and provide a trellis or tie them to stakes as fast as growth requires. Overproduction, too, if allowed, will be a distinct loss in quality and appearance.

Eaten raw as a salad, stewed, baked, escalloped, halved, and broiled in crumbs like an oyster, canned for winter use, or made into soups, catsups, and pickles—what other vegetable offers a greater or pleasanter variety to the palate? It is certainly good enough to merit some pains in its cultivation.

Russell's Grammar.

Russell is 3 years old, and his elder sister, Bessie, is trying to teach him grammar, says the Youth's Companion. Bessie herself speaks correctly, and she does not like to have Russell make so many mistakes. But she does not think her little brother is a very apt scholar.

"I singed my song to Mrs. Hooker last night," said Russell, "and——"

"You should say 'I sung,' not 'I singed,'" interrupted Bessie.

"Yes," said Russell, hurriedly; "I sung it, and she thinked it was nice."

"O Russell!" cried his sister, with a little frown, "you must not say 'thinked;' there is no such word! You should have said 'She thought it was nice.'"

"She did not say so anyway," said Russell stoutly. "She said, 'I think that's very nice'—'cause I 'member now!"

"Oh, dear," laughed Bessie, "can't I ever teach you the difference between the present and past tenses?"

"No, I don't guess you can," said Russell wearily.

The next Sunday Russell went to Sunday school.

"Did your teacher give you any candy to-day?" asked Bessie on his return home, for the little boy was often the recipient of such sweets.

"Oh, yes," said Russell, brightly, "and I'd have brunged you one if I'd have thunked of it."

The Turkish girl of the present generation is expected to know as much about mathematics, geography and the sciences as any average American girl, while in needlework and general housekeeping she surpasses her American sisters.

HIS STOCK OF TALK.

Owing to a Bad Memory He Sometimes Mixed the Subjects.

It was on the train coming in from Newark the other day, says M. Quad in the N. Y. Evening World. He had a clay pipe with a short stem, which he said was seventeen years old, and he wanted to borrow a match.

"Let's see!" he said, as he lighted his pipe and sat down, "did I introduce myself?"

"I believe not."

"Well, you must excuse me. I fell off a haystack last summer head first and struck on a four-gallon jug full of hard cider. My name is Boone—William Boone."

"Yes."

"Did I ask you if you wanted to swap jackknives?"

"No."

"I ginerally mention that the first thing, so as to have it off my mind. I swapped forty-two times last year and got beat every time. Did I ask if you was from Philadelphia?"

"No."

"I ginerally get that off my mind as soon as I can. I've got a brother living there, but I don't care particularly about hearing from him. He never writes unless some of the family is sick. Did I explain that I was no relashun to Dan'l Boone?"

"You did not."

"Nother lapse of memory. I ginerally carry a card with me on which it is stated that I'm no relashun, but I've left it to home I 'spose. We are a different set of Boones altogether. Was I tellin' you about the old woman?"

"No."

"Couldn't remember whether I did or not. That tumble has made me rackety in the head. I'm afraid the old woman is laid up for the winter. She was chasin' a hen through the calf-lot one day in her bare feet and she stepped on an old scythe in the grass. Heard her hollar half a mile. Hen got away. Did I stump you to trade watches?"

"No."

"I ginerally do that the fust thing. I 'spose I've traded watches more times than any other man in America. I begun with a $75 watch and have got down to a Waterbury with only two wheels in it. Did I ask if you owned a hoss?"

"I don't remember that you did."

"Scuse me, but my memory an't what she used to be. I ginerally mention hoss the fust thing when I meet a man, cause I'm a buster on tradin' hosses. I'd git out o' bed and walk six miles in a thunderstorm to trade hosses. I begun with a span worth $400, and I've got down to the lankiest, scrubbiest 3-year-old you ever did see. If he'd lay down in the medder fur a week the crows wouldn't even look at him. Did I ask if you belonged in Jersey City?"

"I didn't hear you."

"Well, I probably forgot to, and I beg your pardon. Guess I mentioned, however, that I'm goin' to town to buy some barbed wire for a fence. That's the name, isn't it—barbed wire?"

"Yes."

"Got it put down somewhere, but I can't trust my memory since I fell kerchunk on that jug. Don't want to swap jackknives or watches or trade horses, eh?"

"Wall, I thought I'd ask ye, anyhow. I said my name was Boone."

"Yes."

"No relation to Daniel."

"No?"

"I think that's about all. If you think of anything else you want to ask me you'll find me on that 'ere front seat to the left. I'll trade knives unsight and unseen or swap watches and give you 60 cents to boot."

A Boy Adopted by a Cow.

A letter from Kansas has a surprising story, my friends. It tells me of a cow who, when she had lost her calf, showed so much sorrow that it awakened the sympathy of her owner's fourteen-year-old son, and he showed her some slight kindness. The grateful cow at once became fond of him, watched for him as she would for her calf, and since then she has shown her pleasure whenever he comes near her. Indeed no one but this boy can manage the poor animal, and wonderful stories are told of her devotion to him. The Kansas papers say that lately the boy had occasion to go to a neighboring town, and as he remained away until after milking time, his sister, not daring to approach the cow in any other way, decided to personate her brother. So she put on a suit of his clothes and went into the barnyard. The girl succeeded in deceiving the cow until the boy was seen coming up the road, when instantly the indignant animal kicked the pail over and made a bound in the direction of the youth, showing unmistakable evidences of delight.—St. Nicholas.

Laughable Escape.

A corporal and two privates having in their custody a deserter were enjoying themselves at a country tavern near St. Louis, one day during the recent war. The deserter amused his military guardians with several entertaining slight-of-hand tricks, but being encumbered with steel-ruffles, complained he could not display his skill to advantage, and requested to have his hands at liberty whilst he exhibited a favorite trick, which he described. This being agreed to, he proceeded to tie the hands of the three soldiers and his own together with a handkerchief, which he was wholly to loose with a gentle stroke. The magic knots were tied, but, on being shaken, the knots all remained firm except the one which held the deserter. This fell asunder with a touch; and, quick as an arrow, he lifted up the sash and darted head-foremost through the window, leaving his keepers raging at each other, and tugging like ill-coupled hounds, before they thought of cutting asunder their bonds, which having effected, they commenced a warm chase; but the deserter having got the start, rendered their efforts ineffectual.

A French electrician has gotten up a device by which he can send 150 type-written words per minute over a single wire.

THE ART OF PUFFING.

Arkell Tells One on Himself and Speaks of Barnum's Advertising Methods.

W. J. Arkell tells the following story on himself: "Barnum fooled me once pretty badly. He was up to all sorts of tricks, and you could not keep too close an eye upon him. I was in New York one day at the time when I was publishing the Albany Journal, when I saw a story about Barnum in the Evening Post. It was something to this effect, that Barnum was walking around the show one day when he saw a young man attentively looking at the pictures and seemingly much interested in them. Barnum spoke to him, and asked him if he would like to have the show explained to him.

"He said he would, and the showman took him the entire round and gave him a very interesting talk about the features of the show. When he got through the young man said, 'And now, Mr. Barnum, suppose you let me explain the show to you.' Mr. Barnum assented, and the young man took him around the show and explained its features to him with such a perfect understanding that Barnum was amazed. 'Young man,' he said 'young man, you know more about this business than any man I ever met. You know more about it than I do. Will you work for me? Yes, the young man said he would work for me. 'I will give you $5,000 a year,' said Barnum. No, the young man would not work for that. 'I will give you $7,500,' said Barnum.

"'All right,' said the young man, 'I will work for that.'

"So they went over to Mr. Bailey's office and Mr. Barnum said to Mr. Bailey: 'I want you to put this young man on the salary list at $7,500 a year. He knows more about the show business than any one I ever met.'

"'I guess you don't want to do that,' said Mr. Bailey. 'That young man is our Western advance agent and we are paying him $5,000 a year now.'

"The story struck me as a pretty good one, and I telegraphed my editor in Albany to use it the next day. Then I got to worrying about it. It didn't seem to me just right, and as I was passing the Evening Post office, seeing young Godkin standing out in front, I had an idea. 'Hallo, Godkin, said I, what did Barnum pay you for that story?'

"Godkin pulled me inside the door. 'Don't talk so loud,' he said in a whisper. 'The fact is we only got 80 cents a line for that story, but we might just as well have had $1.'

"It was too late to stop the story then. The Journal was out on the street. But it made me feel pretty sick when I found out how I had been fooled. Well, sir, that story went all over the country, and it was copied everywhere as a legitimate news story. And it was a good story, too, but it was a pretty clever advertisement. Barnum was a very cute man."

Heard at a Private Bath-house.

The thin board partitions of the salt water baths on the West Side offer no resistance to the voice and the family secrets discussed by imprudent bathers become a public scandal for half a dozen rooms on either side of them. One fine afternoon lately a speedy young capitalist who has inherited a lot of money took a bath with his wife, or, rather, they took baths in adjoining rooms, and talked through the open door between them. Of course the usual audience was in the adjacent apartments and kept discreetly still during the family discussion.

"I just want to tell you," said the husband, "that I'm dead on to your little trick of climbing out of bed when I come home and emptying my pockets. I spotted you last night."

"Why, George!"

"That's all right. I wouldn't mind that so much, for any married woman will rob her husband if she gets a show, but what I'm kicking about is your coming a bunco game on me this morning."

"What do you mean?"

"What do I mean? Why, pretending to me that you were all broke up because I came home a little loaded and then bleeding me every time for a few hundred more before you'd make up with me. But that's not the worst of it. You lied to me, too."

"George I won't stand that from any man. I never told you a lie in my life."

"You didn't, eh! Where did your mother get that stuff to put up that row of flats in the western addition? You know you hooked it from me and you told me she made it in stocks, didn't you?"

"I told you she made it out of Union and Bullion, you sweet, lovely old chump, and she did. She made it out of our union and your bullion, you dear, darling old ducky-dandy. Do you catch on? Now come and kiss me?"

And he did. They heard the smack and six of them, for thirty feet on each side of the scene of peace and reunion. —San Francisco Chronicle.

Business Enterprise.

A couple of peddlers were about to enter into a large New York store, when one of them called the attention of the other to a large sign which read: "No Peddlers Allowed in This Building."

"We had better not go in there," said one of them. "Don't you see that notice?"

"Don't be a fool. That is the very reason we want to go through this building. We are bound to sell something, for we haven't got any competition, don't you see?"—Texas Siftings.

Not a Teaser.

Aunt Fanny—Don't you believe, Emma, that God answers little girls' prayers?

Emma (Sunday-school scholar, aged seven)—Yes, I know it.

Aunt Fanny—And do you say your prayers every night?

Emma—No. Aunt Fanny, I hate people who, the more they get the more they want.—Life.

Green Lake, Colorado, is the highest lake in the world. The surface is 10,250 feet above the sea level.

PIKE'S PEAK.

Reaching the Summit by the First Train.

"All aboard!" rang out, the engine gathered itself for a mighty effort, and again we were going upward. Slowly we crept over the freshly made track, and gained the upper side amid hearty rousing cheers from workers and passengers.

A steady climb, a curve, and—joy of joys!—we were at the summit. A cold wind greeted us as we left the coach, and we gladly crowded into the old signal-station, now used only as a hostelry for those caring to remain over night on the mountain.

Standing in that room heated by an enormous stove, with outer doors closed and double-sash windows shut tight on that 30th day of June, we could not but wonder how bitter cold it would be were the month December instead of June.

The house is of stone, and seems a part of the mountain itself rather than a house built with human hands.

The whole top of the peak is as if a deluge of boulders, shattering as they fell, had poured down upon the mountain's hoary head. Granite and snow are everywhere, and mother earth under all, hidden from sight.

And the stillness of the spot!—no sound of bird or insect or ceaseless toil of man; silence primeval, oppressive, absolute, such as reigned, here before man was and will reign when he is no more.

With almost a start we were recalled to everyday affairs. The enterprising photographer was ready to "snap" this historic party, and we were urged to arrange ourselves artistically, and to look pleasant becomingly.

The picture was taken, the train boarded, and soon the visit to Pike's Peak was only a delightful memory. Owing to delays, Denver was not reached until 11.15 that night, fifteen hours after the departure in the morning, but what pioneer would ever have believed the ascent could be accomplished in a few hours?

Is it any wonder that next morning as we looked to the south, and saw the mighty peak towering above all others, we felt a new reverence for it and an interest that amounted almost to ownership?—St. Nicholas.

A BIRD'S INDIGNATION.

Extraordinary Memory of a Shrike That Entertained Feelings of Revenge.

Years ago I found in my garden a nest of the shrike, says a writer in the London Illustrated News. The young birds, four or five in number, were nearly fledged. Having heard a good deal of the predatory habits of the tribe, I was going to wring their necks. I had put them on the hedge and they sat quite still, but looked so proud and self-possessed, and the dark glittering eyes that were bent upon me with an expression of indignant surprise said so plainly, "Have we not as good a right to live as you?" that my conscience smote me, and I could not find it in my heart to kill them.

I walked away to call my daughter and show them to her, but when I came back they were gone. One morning next year I was in the garden looking at my roses when I felt something hit the back of my head. Turning round, not a little startled, I saw a bird flying up to the top of a high tree. When it had got there it said "Check!" Very soon afterward it came down again, flapped its wings against my head as it had done before, flew up to an opposite tree and repeated its "Check!" At the first glance I had seen that it was a lanius.

Since then and for several days I could never show myself bareheaded in the garden of a morning without being assaulted or saluted in the same manner, and soon got quite accustomed to it. When my head happened to be covered I was left alone, and neither my gardener nor any other frequenter of the garden was attacked. It is clear that the bird must have been either one of the nestlings of the preceding year or one of their parents, and that it remembered me probably as the disturber of its peace, not with any feeling of gratitude for having spared a life I might have taken but had not given, for it evidently hit me as hard as it could, and there was an unmistakable sound of satisfied revenge in its cry.

Count Von Arco Valley's Revenge.

One day, when things were somewhat strained between France and Germany, the Count was engaged in his private office at the legation when an itinerant Italian vender of music stopped in front of the building, unlimbered his machine, and began grinding. It was the "Marseillaise." The Count frowned, but went on with his work. So did the Italian. The tones of the "Marseillaise" continued to smite the air. The Count sent a servant out to stop it. The Italian shook his head and continued his grind. Again the servant was sent out with peremptory instructions to have the music stopped. Another failure. Then an attache of the legation was dispatched to put an end to the music. The attache failed in his mission. "Ach, Gott in Himmel, I go myself," said the Count, who was fast growing desperate. He strode hastily forth. He demanded in imperious tones that the Italian stop playing and leave the neighborhood.

"Ver' sorra," replied the Italian, "but-a no can go-a."

"Can't go!" exclaimed the irate envoy of the German Kaiser. "Why vos can you not go?"

"I can no go-a," said the Italian, "becaus de French-a Minister gave a me-a doll' to mak-a de 'Marseillaise' in front of you' hous' for a whol-a hour."

"So!" said the count, reflectively. Then the true diplomate shone out. He put his hand in his pocket and drew out two bright new silver dollars. Holding them up he said: "Take you dose two dollar' and go you and blay der 'Wacht am Rhein' bevore der Vrench Minister's house vor two whole hour!"

The descendant of the Romans took the $2, limbered up his machine, and disappeared in the direction of the French Legation.—Washington Post.

The earliest coin for American use was made about 1612, and bore as a design the picture of a hog.

LOVE FOR A DAY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "DORA THORNE," "A DEAD HEART," "TWO KISSES," "THE FATAL LILIES," ETC.

CHAPTER VII.

The next morning Lady Yorke was down-stairs, alert and energetic, before nine. Her husband looked up in surprise as he entered the breakfast-room. This happened to be one of the rare days when we were alone.

"A revolution!" he cried. "The most luxurious woman in England down at the early hour of nine. I cannot understand it."

"Do not laugh at me, Stanley," she said. "I am very much in earnest this morning. I want to talk to you."

When she had sought him before it had generally been to ask either for new jewels, or a cheque for some heavy bill—always something for herself, never anything for any one else; and I am sure that he expected the same thing now.

"I want to talk to you, Stanley," she continued. "Do you know what the world is like outside our park gates? Here we have safety and shelter, warmth and luxury—the roses of life without the thorns. Do you know what it is outside?"

"I know something of it," he replied, half sadly.

"Ah, such a world, Stanley," she said. "There is sickness, sorrow, poverty, hunger. Hunger seems the hardest to bear," she continued, thinking no doubt of those tragical words, 'He died hungry;' "and I have heard such words, but I never knew what they meant. I knew only the sound, not the sense, until yesterday." Here she paused.

"And then?" said Lord Yorke, "What happened then?"

She told him all that had occurred. Just for one half moment I was uncertain as to whether he would be quite pleased or not. Had I been mistaken in thinking that he was sometimes distressed at her supreme indifference to all things except herself? My doubts were soon cleared. He looked at her with the most loving smile I had ever seen on his face.

"I am glad, Louise," he said. "I have always thought that, if you understood more of what was going on in the world around you, you would try to help others. And now about this poor woman—Mrs. Clinton, did you say? What do you want to do for her?"

"Everything," was the comprehensive reply. "She must have a nice clean cottage in the fresh air, plenty of food and clothes—all that is wanted to make her daughter well."

"She shall have it," Lord Yorke said, smiling. "You could not employ your time or your money better than in relieving the poor. But all charity must be governed by discretion. While the woman and child are ill, keep them; but afterwards, although you can go on helping her, let her work for herself. It will be greater charity to place the means of gaining her livelihood in her hands than to give her money enough to live upon."

"I see that," she replied gravely. "Oh, Stanley, if I had only thought before now, how many people I might have saved. It must be a terrible thing to die of hunger."

He laid his hand lightly on her beautiful head.

"It is never too late to mend," he said. "I have often wished that you could give a little of your time and attention to charity."

"Why did you not tell me so?" she asked, eagerly.

"My dear Louise," there comes a time when every one wakes to the realities of life. Your time had not come."

"I shall never be so careless again. I feel as though through all these years I had truly been asleep," said Lady Yorke.

Then they discussed what was best to be done. Lord Yorke suggested that one of the pretty cottages built on modern principles which stood just outside Woodheaton, should be given to the poor woman rent-free until she was better. Lady Yorke was to allow her so much each week until she could earn money herself.

"You must remember one thing, Louise," said his lordship, "that you will meet with many cases quite as pitiful as this, and that it will not do to give all to one."

The next time he met me he took my hand and held it for a moment in his. He looked at my black dress.

"From your own sorrows," he said, "you have learned to feel for others. Heaven bless you!"

Then I knew that he was well pleased that I had tried to draw his beautiful young wife from her self-worship and interest her in others.

The next evening, at dessert, she looked critically at some fine grapes that were on her plate. Two days earlier she would have sent them away; now her eyes sought mine, and I knew she was thinking, "What would little sick Annie give for them?"

It was a small beginning, but it would lead to greater things. Gradually Lady Yorke woke from her long lethargy. She began to interest herself in her own servants, to understand that they had pleasures and sorrows. She lost much of her indolence. She was no longer content to spend the greater part of the day on a couch. She thought more of the widow and orphan in their desolation, of the sick and ailing who wanted help, of the hungry who wanted food.

So life passed on at Westwood, and no great change came until the spring. To me every birthday, every Christmas day, were as milestones on the way to Heaven. As I passed each, I was nearer to Mark.

Again the lilacs were in bloom. They were not so plentiful or so beautiful at Westwood as at Gracedieu, but the sight and the fragrance of them brought back forcibly the remembrance of my lover to me. No words can tell the sharp pain that pierced my heart when I saw the nodding plumes. Lady Yorke was fond of lilacs. While they lasted she would have them in the rooms. I never told her what the sight of them cost me.

The keeper of the west lodge having found a better situation, Mrs. Clinton, with her little daughter, through Lord Yorke's kindness, went to live there. By Lady Yorke's wish I went to visit them almost every day. The lilacs grew all round the west lodge—tall, fine trees, with a wealth of fragrant blossoms. Mrs. Clinton, who could never do enough for me, had gathered some of the finest sprays; and one morning, when I went to see her, she held the branches of lilac-bloom close to my face.

"See, miss," she said, "how fresh they are!"

If I had seen some one risen from the dead, I could not have grown more sick at heart. I went home sad and weary. Here was the world waking up again to the beauty and glory of spring, and my heart was sinking, my hope was death. My lover, to whom my love, my troth, my faith was plighted, was dead. What could spring, sunshine, or bloom of flowers say to me? As I walked home and saw the yellow primroses shining like stars in the grass, and the buds bursting into leaf, I sobbed aloud. I felt so tired of waiting. If some angel hand would but draw me up to Heaven and place me by Mark's side. Oh, my love, how I loved you! All the beauty of earth, the fairness of spring, the brightness of life, were as naught to me, because you were no longer with me!

There were times like these when my courage failed me, when my heart ached, and I could only weep and call on one who would hear me never more. It was the sweet odor of the fresh lilacs that had brought Mark so vividly back to me. I could see his face, I could hear his voice, his warm, strong hand seemed to clasp mine—and he was dead!

As I entered the house I met Lady Yorke in the hall.

"Will you come to the library, Miss Chester?" she said. "I have some letters I must answer, and some for you to write."

When we were seated there, and she had made those inquiries about the sick child which she never omitted, she showed me a bundle of letters.

"We shall have a large party here soon," she said. "This morning I had a letter from Lord Severne. We met him and his wife last year in Italy, and I made him promise that ours should be the first house in England that they would visit. Lord Severne is a great favorite of mine. You have heard of the Severnes of Mount Severne?"

"No," I replied. The name was quite strange to me.

It was a very old title, Lady Yorke told me, but the present possessor had come quite unexpectedly into it.

"I must say," continued her ladyship, "that I have been a most indifferent member of society. No one has ever seemed to interest me; but I certainly did like Lord Severne. He is very handsome, but terribly melancholy.—He never smiles like any one else."

Finding that it pleased Lady Yorke to speak of her friends, I listened with interest. I banished the lilacs and Mark from my mind; they were of time past.

"We met the Severnes in Florence," Lady Yorke went on, "and both my husband and myself liked Lord Severne very much; but we were not so agreeably impressed with his wife. We were very intimate with them, and went out with them almost every day. Lady Severne is quite unlike her husband. He is earnest, grave, with a strange veil of melancholy always over him; she is the most animated, the gayest and most brilliant woman I have ever met. She tired me in an hour, and I am sure she tired her husband too. He liked to talk quietly with me. He is the only man," she continued, "who has ever really roused my curiosity."

"Why?" I asked.

"Because he appears too good a man to have done any great wrong, and yet he looks like a man with some heavy burden on his mind. I am sure you will like him, Miss Chester, but I am not sure whether you will like his wife. She has such a strange name too."

"What is it?" I asked. I had never heard Lady Yorke say so much about any living creature.

"Lurline," she replied. "Now can you fancy any sensible woman with a name like that?"

"Her name is her misfortune, not her fault," I said. "I like it, Lady Yorke. It is fanciful and uncommon."

"It is like herself," declared her ladyship. "Well, Miss Chester, we must have a party to meet them. Lord Severne himself does not care about society, but Lady Severne lives for it only. We must have plenty of visitors, and plenty of gaiety to amuse her."

"She is a troublesome visitor," I said, with a laugh.

"Yes, but she is a power in herself. She is one of those women who sweep all before them. Lord Yorke could only compare her to a whirlwind. Yet I cannot imagine how she has persuaded her husband to return to England. When we were in Florence, she said nothing would induce her to live in this climate. We will ask Lady Mary Avon and her brother Sir Charles to meet them. Lady Severne is more than a match in conversation for any six gentlemen at once."

"Is she a flirt?" I asked.

"To tell you the truth, Miss Chester, I could never make out exactly what she was. I only know that we liked her husband, and for his sake we endured her, as we shall endure her again. They will be here next Tuesday, so we must hasten to send out the invitations."

And as I wrote them I wondered much what Lady Severne could be like.

CHAPTER VIII.

I had found so little to interest me in the generality of guests at Westwood, that I thought very little of the coming visitors. It was evident that Lady Yorke was deeply interested in them, but then she had said candidly that it was Lord Severne rather than his wife who had pleased her. We had many discussions about them, and it seemed to me that Lady Severne did not stand very high in the estimation either of husband or wife. Lord Yorke, who was kindness and charity itself, mentioned her always in a tone of toleration, yet at the same time leaving an impression that she was what Lady Yorke called a "power."

"Is Lady Severne very beautiful?" I asked Lady Yorke on the morning when her guests were expected to arrive.

"Very; she has one of those faces with a roseate bloom, and her complexion is simply incomparable. But, beautiful as she is, I do not like her. You are a good judge of character; you will be able to judge for yourself when they come."

Lord and Lady Severne were to reach Westwood on Tuesday, the twentieth of May. Lady Yorke had ordered a lavish supply of magnificent flowers to be placed in Lady Severne's room.

"That is one point in her character which I like," said Lady Yorke; "she is very fond of flowers. It pleases me always to see a woman fond of flowers." Then she continued, with something of a conscious blush on her face, "Miss Chester, I know I shall be very much engaged while the Severnes are here, but I must not neglect my poor. I hope I shall never fall again into that terrible, apathetic way of thinking of no one but myself. If it be really impossible for me to leave home, you will undertake any little commission for me, will you not?"

I would have gone anywhere for her; I was so rejoiced to see the earnest, kindly expession on the face that had once revealed nothing but self-love and discontent.

Every preparation had been made for our visitors. Lady Mary Avon and her brother Sir Charles were two handsome, fashionable persons, rich and popular. Lady Mary had many admirers, but could not tolerate the word "marriage;" Sir Charles was looking out for a wife. Captain Forrester was heir-presumptive to an earldom, and was consequently much sought after. Sir Harry de Burgh was a young Irish Baronet, one of the most popular men in England, and Lady Grey was a young widow with a large fortune.

"A well-assorted party of guests," said Lady Yorke complacently;" and the great beauty of the arrangement is that they will amuse each other. Lord Severne will generally fall to my lot, if the same thing happens here that took place invariably in Italy. He liked to saunter by my side in his grave, melancholy fashion, while Lady Severne generally attracted all the men to herself. She will do the same here. I am so glad," continued Lady Yorke, "that you sing so beautifully, Miss Chester. Lord Severne likes music. His wife sings, but he does not care for her style, and always discourages her."

Tuesday came, a bright morning, but with the warning of a coming rainstorm on its face. There was a low wail in the wind, a darkening at times of the sky, a strange stillness in the air such as always precedes a storm.

It was mid-day when a message came from Woodheaton, asking help for a poor family, one of whom—the father—was dangerously ill, the wife had met with a severe accident, and the children were destitute. The poor were beginning to know to whom they should send; they were beginning to love Lady Yorke, for they knew that no one ever asked her help in vain. She came to me and asked me to act for her.

"I must be here to receive our visitors," she said. "I give you carte blanche, Miss Chester."

So it was as Lady Yorke's almoner that I went out on that day. Lord Yorke bade me beware of the threatening storm, but I told him that I did not think it would break until the morrow. But, when I was on the point of returning from Woodheaton, the rain descended in torrents. For an ordinary shower I should not have cared in the least, but this storm was terrible. It seemed as though the heavens were opened, such a tempest raged on that fair, tranquil country-side. The sky was like lead, the wind blew fiercely; and then lightning flashed and the thunder came. The storm lasted some hours; and when the sky cleared and the rain ceased it was night. Lady Yorke, who was always kind and thoughtful, sent a closed carriage after me.

As we drove up the avenue, the carriage stopped suddenly, and the coachman sprang down from the box and came to me.

"Do you see what has happened, Miss Chester?" he asked.

Looking out, I saw by the pale, watery gleam of the moon that a great beech-tree, said to be the largest and finest of its kind in England, and called "The Pride of Westwood," had been blown down.

"Why, his lordship will be more grieved over this tree than if half the house had been blown down," said the coachman, in a grave voice. "I am very sorry, miss, but, you see, the branches reach all across the drive. I cannot take the carriage any farther; I must go back to the court-yard."

I saw that the honest, simple man, a faithful retainer of the House of Yorke, was deeply distressed. He shook his head as he led the frightened horse away.

"I never like such great trees to fall, Miss Chester," he said. "They are the glory of a house. I always think bad luck follows."

I cannot tell why, but, as I went to my room, a sense of oppression and coming sorrow seized me. I could not believe in the superstition that the falling of a great tree must mean evil. That was nonsense. But my heart was heavy, my brain oppressed.

Fortunately for me, I was a great favorite with Mrs. Masham, the housekeeper, and, when she heard that I had returned, she hastened to my room. Any idea I might have had of going to the drawing-room was speedily abandoned. She stood before me, stern as a judge.

"You look ill, Miss Chester. You have taken cold. You must go to bed, and I will send you something warm to drink."

I murmured a few words about the visitors and music, but she was peremptory.

"No, miss, not to-night. You must take care of yourself; you have been out in the wet all day amongst those poor people I know what it is; you must rest now. Her ladyship would desire it, I am sure."

There was nothing for it but to obey. Yet I could not sleep. The wind murmured sullenly through the wood, and the great branches rustled. My thoughts were full of the misery I had witnessed that day, of the terrible storm, of the fallen tree, and of the guests now under the same roof. Whenever the door opened, I could hear music and laughter. The house seemed all brilliancy and merriment. Mrs. Masham told me that the visitors had come. All words had failed her in trying to describe Lady Severne; she raised in speechless wonder her hands and eyes.

"Beauty does not come near it, Miss Chester," she said, after a time. "Our Lady Yorke is a beautiful woman, but Lady Severne's face dazzles one. The husband, Lord Severne, seems quiet; he is a handsome man, but very melancholy."

She contrived to give a fair description of all our visitors, and very much to my surprise, finished by saying:

"Ah, Miss Chester, you would be queen of them all if you did not look so sad and would not always wear mourning."

That night terrible dreams came to me of Mark. Mark was out in the storm, and I could not find him. Mark was struck by lightning, and lay before me, dead. Mark was under the fallen tree, mangled and crushed. My dreams were always of Mark in peril, in danger, and dead.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Happy Family.

A tree near Firth, Randolph County, Mo., was found to contain 12 groundhogs, ten skunks, two swarms of bees, and a large lot of fine honey.

On the eastern frontier of the "Dark Continent" coal is so plentiful that by lifting a shovelful of clay off any particular spot it may be reached. But there is no means of transporting it to market.

DID NOT PAY THE DUTY.

The Swindlers Could Not Be Arrested for Smuggling, However.

"I want to have two ruffians arrested!" exclaimed a burly German angrily, as he rushed into a police-station on the East side the other day, says the N. Y. Tribune.

"What for?" asked the sergeant at the desk.

"Smuggling," was the answer.

"Where are they?"

"Don't know."

"Who are they?"

"Don't know."

"How do you know they are smugglers?"

"They told me so."

"Tell me all about it."

"Well, I keep a saloon in Second avenue. The other night two Spanish-looking men came in, ordered beer and sat down at a table, on which they placed two bundles. While they were drinking and talking one of them steps over to me and says:

"'Do you know Jacob Sprinkelheimer?'

"'No,' said I.

"Then he went back and talked again with his comrade. By and by he stepped over to me again and said:

"'Sprinkelheimer keeps a cafe in Second avenue, but I haf his card lost. It is very bad for me. We are two sailors who have just landed from Cuba. We have a lot of fine cigars, gran' cigars, for Mr. Sprinkelheimer brought. Pure Havana, gran'! They paid no duty. We sold a lot to Sprinkelheimer on our last voyage, and he a fine thing out of them made. Now we have him lost. It is too bad. Can you help us? Must we all these fine cigars, gran' cigars, pure Havanas, back to Cuba take? It is too bad. They are gran' and cheap—so cheap.'

"Well, just to help them out——"

"You bought a lot of cigars yourself," broke in the police sergeant.

"That is so."

"And they turned out to be common New York tenement-house two-for-fives," continued the officer.

"That is true, my friend," said the German with a deep sigh. "How did you find it out?"

"And you want them arrested for smuggling?"

"They acknowledged they were smugglers."

"But you bought the smuggled cigars. Now, you're as much of a smuggler as they. You must be arrested too."

"Mein Gott," gasped the astonished German, who had not looked at the case in this light. "What shall I do?" Then, as a bright thought struck him, and he seemed to see a way out of the difficulty, he said:

"But they didn't smuggle those cigars after all, sergeant."

"Then you can't have them arrested for smuggling."

"But can't I have them arrested for swindling me?"

"Not when the bargain you thought you were making would have swindled the government."

"Donder und blitzen," grumbled the beer-seller, as he turned away, "that is the way that rogues prosper, and honest men, like me, their hard-earned money see mit white wings quickly away fligen."

Not a Happy Lot.

"I'll tell you of a curious device or two for evading the law that would make you feel creepy if you were to put on my badge and go into some grog shops in Lewiston with the purpose of raiding them," said an officer to a Lewiston Journal reporter.

"The other day an Auburn man told me he had gone into a place to get a drink, and the bartender had taken a bottle up from somewhere behind the counter, then put it back and defied him to find it. And he couldn't either.

"If you go into a place and tear up the floor or tear down the ceiling, whatever damage we do we have got to pay for. If we knock down a door, why of course we don't have to pay for that, but if we do any damage after we are in we must pay the bills. So it is not profitable to do any wreckage unless we are sure of getting some liquors.

"There is one place where the officer, as he enters, is pitched down through a trap-door into the cellar, and while he is coming up again the stuff is poured into the sink and ammonia kills all traces of it.

"Then there is another way. Four doors with concealed spring locks lead the officer, as he enters, into a room in the back of the house, and the door shutting after him locks him in until he breaks out and the liquor has disappeared. I tell you I'm always nervous when I go into such a place. It makes me feel as though perhaps the next step would plunge me into a well or somewhere else."

A Rock Foretells the Weather.

According to Roy Meninger, a traveler who has just returned from Mexico, there is a rock near the Village of Chilpancigno in the Sierra Madre del Sur that possesses the virtue of foretelling rain twenty-four hours before it falls. Mr. Meninger was incredulous until the rock gave an exhibition of its powers. It stands alone in a little valley of great fertility, and seems to protrude from the ground rather than rest upon its surface. It is about five feet in height by ten in length, and is of a dull, grayish color, the surface being polished and cold to the touch. About a day before the rain comes the rock takes on a reddish hue, and its temperature rises to about 60 degrees Fahrenheit. The heat and color increase until rain is precipitated, when the rock cools and gradually resumes its original gray. In a thunder-storm the stone emits a pale blue light, and there is every indication that it is charged with electricity. Local mineralogists say the heat is from a volcanic source.

An Italian publisher got the opinion of 100 writers and scholars as to who are the best authors. The replies placed Darwin at the head of the foreign writers and Shakspeare next, Schiller, Goethe, and Humboldt following in the order named.

SCALING HERRINGS.

The Work Is Performed in a Somewhat Peculiar Manner.

A peculiar feature of the smoked herring industry in this country is the method by which the fish are scaled. Enormous quantities of them are captured in weirs and gill nets, and the catch thrown into boats. When a load has been secured the fisherman "treads them out" by walking briskly back and forth through the mass of squirming objects at the bottom of the boat. The motion of the fish upon each other, and also the contact with the feet and legs of the "treader," quickly removes the scales. In the course of half an hour a skillful operator will thus scale four or five hogsheads of the fish.

Another method consists in using a piece of board about a foot long and four or five inches in width, which is securely fastened to a long handle. This is thrust into the center of the mass and moved briskly about until by continued stirring the scales are moved in an incredibly short time. The work must be done while the fish are fresh, as otherwise the scales become set and can only be taken off with great difficulty.

Care is exercised in both processes, as if not systematically done, many of the catch will be only partially scaled, and if stirred about or "trod out" for too long a time the flesh will be soft or bruised, in which case the catch will be less salable, and, if the skin is broken, absolutely worthless.

After scaling, they are washed and salted in tubs, barrels or hogsheads; then strung on sticks, from twenty-five to thirty-five being placed on each, according to their size. The next step consists in rewashing, to remove all the blood and dirt that has accumulated, and the strings are then laid on frames in the open air to drain and also to harden and dry the gill-covers. This being accomplished they are taken to the smoke-house, properly arranged, the fires started and the smoking begins.

Several kinds of wood are used for this purpose in different countries, white birch being preferred in France, while in England, Scotland and Holland oak chips and sawdust are considered the best. In this country pine logs that have been soaked in salt water are selected, as the salt renders the wood less inflammable and it also gives a greater volume of smoke.

Some of the curers, when the smoking process is nearly completed, build a fire with oak logs for the purpose of giving a higher or brighter color to the fish. As a matter of fact, however, the woods make little or no difference, the chief idea being to get a kind that will burn slowly and at the same time yield a sufficient amount of smoke to cure the fish, and at the same time burn so slowly that there is no possibility of scorching them.

Wasted Ammunition.

The Germans were not marksmen, it must be said, in the last war, though they won the battles. From German statistics, it appears that 250 bullets were fired to each Frenchman struck in the war of 1870-'71. This was in part due to the German rifle being inferior to the Chassepot; but, after making every allowance, it must be said that the troops fire without aiming. In the battle of Gettysburg no less than 24,000 rifles are said to have been left on the field, of which only one quarter were found to be properly loaded. One half had two cartridges; several three, four, and more bullets, and in one rifle twenty-two charges were found in the barrel.—Boston Advertiser.

Don Carlos, pretender to the throne of Spain who is living at the present time in Venice, is said to be badly in need of money. He was obliged, according to reports, to pawn his jewels a short time ago.

HOW'S THIS?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.

WEST & TRAUX, Wholesale Druggists Toledo, Ohio.

WALDING, KINNAN & MARAIN, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, Ohio.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price 75c. per bottle. Sold by all Druggists.

A Chance For Ladies to Make Money.

(The following letter is taken from the Christian Index, and though properly belonging in our advertising columns we insert it here cheerfully with the hope of benefiting some of our lady readers.)

MR. EDITOR: I saw an advertisement that Cactus Co., East El paso, Texas, wanted a few ladies to do writing, etc., for them ar home and sent for particulars. I have been so well pleased with the business that I wish to advise other ladies wanting employment to give this business a trial. The work does not interfere with my household duties in the least, and yet I can earn real good wages. Full particulars can be had for a two-cent stamp. The address Cactus Co., El paso, Texas. I am sure all who write will thank me for calling their attention to the matter. Respectfully,

MRS. JANE WILCOX.

Mason City Newspaper Co-91-51

"German Syrup"

Here is something from Mr. Frank A. Hale, proprietor of the De Witt House, Lewiston, and the Tontine Hotel, Brunswick, Me. Hotel men meet the world as it comes and goes, and are not slow in sizing people and things up for what they are worth. He says that he has lost a father and several brothers and sisters from Pulmonary Consumption, and is himself frequently troubled with colds, and he often coughs enough to make him sick at his stomach. Whenever he has taken a cold of this kind he uses Boschee's German Syrup, and it cures him every time. Here is a man who knows the full danger of lung troubles, and would therefore be most particular as to the medicine he used. What is his opinion? Listen! "I use nothing but Boschee's German Syrup, and have advised, I presume, more than a hundred different persons to take it. They agree with me that it is the best cough syrup in the market." ⓘ

Hereditary Consumption

Farm For Sale.

A No. 1 Improved Stock Farm of 365 Acres for Sale Cheap.

THE PORTLAND STOCK FARM.

Situated adjoining the village of Portland, on the C. M. & St. P. R. R. 4 miles east of Mason City, Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa. Farm fenced into 18 different fields and yards all hog tight and horse high. Farm buildings and all improvements are first class. Two large troughs soft spring water five rods from barn; farm also watered by Lime Creek and several springs. Twenty acres of timber surround buildings, also one thousand (1,000) rods of beautiful willow hedge on farm, 20 to 75 feet high, mostly bordering on the highways. Four large barns (hay capacity 200 tons) with five hundred (500) feet of basement walls. A large water-power roller mill and cheese and butter factory join farm. A large modern, first-class farm house, built in 1890.

Mason City, the county seat of Cerro Gordo county, and the Lexington of Iowa, is a beautiful little city of about five thousand (5,000) inhabitants. She has just completed one of the best mile tracks in the state, which, with the fair grounds, have been built at an expense of $20,000.

Price of farm, forty-five dollars ($45.00) per acre. For particulars and picture of farm and buildings, call on or address the owner at Portland, Cerro Gordo County, Iowa.

A. S. FELT, prop.

PILES RUDY'S PILE SUPPOSITORY is a sovereign remedy for Piles (bleeding, itching, blind, inward, etc.) whether of recent or long standing. It gives instant relief, and effects a radical and permanent cure. No surgical operation required. Try it and relieve your sufferings. Send for circular and free sample. Only 50 cents a box. For sale by druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of price

MARTIN RUDY, Lancaster, Pa.

TUMORS

Internal or External, successfully Treated by New Method. No knife; no pain or shock. For pamphlet write The Sanitarium, Union Springs, N.Y.

Paper For Sale.

The leading Republican newspaper at a good county seat. Good job office. Address Y care M. C. Newspaper Co., Mason City, Ia.-1a*

WE WANT AGENTS FOR THE FASTEST SELLING article. Big money. No risk. WM. BACHALE, 253 Bissell Street, Chicago, Ill.

WANTED.

$15 A WEEK ANY LADY, employed or unemployed, can make this for a few hours work each day. Salary or com. $10 samples free.

Ad. E. BENJAMIN & CO., 115 N. 8th St., ST. LOUIS, MO.

The WEAK made STRONG

FREE TRIAL {In Nervous Debility, Lost Vitality, Weakness and Decay, sent free for 12 cents postage.

Address Dr. Ward Office, 117 N. 8th Street, St. Louis, Mo.

THE OLD DOCTOR'S Cotton Root Pills LADIES' FAVORITE.

ALWAYS RELIABLE and perfectly SAFE. The same as used by thousands of woman all over the United States, in the OLD DOCTORS private mail practice, for 38 years, and not a single bad result. Money returned if not as represented. Send 4 cents (stamps) for sealed particulars.

Dr. WARD & CO., 117 N. 8th St., St. Louis, Mo.

ANY LADY can get a valuable secret that cost me $5.00, and a rubber shield for 30 cents.

Mrs. V. M. APP. CO.

115 N. 8th STREET, ST. LOUIS, MO.

FAT FOLKS REDUCED

Mrs. Alice Maple, Oregon, Mo., writes "My weight was 320 pounds, now it is 195 a reduction of 125 lbs." For circulars address, with 6c., Dr. O. W. F. SNYDER, McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, Ill.

MEN Wanted; salary and expenses. Permanent place. Apply at once. Browne Bros. Co., Nurserymen, Chicago.

MASON CITY, IOWA,

Cancer Infirmary

The Only Reliable Institution in the Northwest, Homelike and Pleasant,

DR. M. V. MAYFIELD, the Specialist, has been more than successful for thirteen years. No Knife. No Caustics.

H. E. MOORE, the President, GUARANTEES A CURE OR NO PAY.

PISO'S REMEDY FOR CATARRH.—Best. Easiest to use. Cheapest. Relief is immediate. A cure is certain. For Cold in the Head it has no equal.

CATARRH

It is an Ointment, of which a small particle is applied to the nostrils. Price 50c. Sold by druggists or sent by mail. Address: E. T. HAZELTINE, [illegible]

THE NEWS.

Entered at the post office at Red Lake Falls as second-class mail matter.

Official Paper of the City.

The Minnesota National Park.

Perhaps the most stupendous outrage ever heaped upon the people of Northern Minnesota is the setting off a vast tract of land in this region for a national park. The people of the Northern Part of the state have labored for the past ten years to have the Red Lake reservation as well as numerous other reservations thrown open to market. Now that their ends have been accomplished, a scheme is advanced by the twin cities aided by the people of the southern part of the state to not only render useless the land the people have acquired by treaty from the Chippewa Indians, but to also tie up a vast tract of land surrounding these reservations, containing an erea equal to one third of the state. Every resource that promised wealth is denied by this extravagant proposition. It is claimed this move on the part of the government is asked on the grounds that the Mississippi will cease to flow if the forests of this region are denuded. Was a theory so silly ever advanced by the most pessimistic of antiquated fools. Every one conversant with the geography of the northern part of the state is well aware the Mississippi river does not get its supply of water rom the territory which is to be forfeited to public whims. The Red Lake region and Rainy Lake region absorb the supply of water in the would be national park. When the business men of the twin cities have naught else to do—when they so far forget the bounds of business relations which to day exist between those cities and the people of the northern part of the state—the sympathies of the pioneers of the north may be expected to revert from the well-beaten path and cast its lot and fortune with that growing world market at the head of Lake Superior. The people of Duluth are rightly indignant at the government for considering such a proposition and the people of the Northern part of the state especially those in the Red River Valley who have watched the development of this vast region of mines and timber are as justly indignant and should arise in their might and devote the same energy to the killing of this project as they have in the development of the finest farming country that lies under the sun. It is time for every city, village and hamlet in the northern part of the state to put in their protest, lest the cloud of some theoretical geologist would darken the dawn of the new era of prosperity in the north.

Attention Canadians.

WINTER EXCURSIONS TO PRINCIPAL POINTS IN CANADA.

Will again be run from the Northest and all principles points in at the low rate of $40.00 for the round tirp. Tickets will be on sale in Manitoba daily from Tuesday December 1st to 30th inclusive and Northern Minnesota and North Dakota on Tuesday December 1st and 8th and daily from December 15th to 22nd inclusive and on Tuesday December 29th. Limit of tickets 90 days from date of sale. Those contemplate taking advantage of these low rate excursions should bear in mind that the Northern Pacific in connection with the Wisconsin central from the public highway from points in the Nortewest to Chicago On December 1st, 8th, 15thr22nd, aup 29th through Pullman furnised tourist sleeping cars will be run via those lenes to Chicago with out change, in which the rate for one dauble berth from starting point Chicago will be but $2.00.

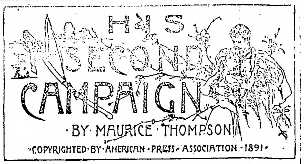
Tickets, maps, time table and full information can be obtainet from any agent of the Northern Pacific R. R.

Once More.

Winter excersions! Season 1891! Where? To Toronto, Montreal and all principal points west in Ontario. Rate? $40 for the round trip from points in Minnesota and Dakota. When? Tickets on Tuesday December 1st, 8th, [illegible] to 22nd.inclsive and Tuesday, December 29th.Limit? 90 days from date of sale, which can be extended by payment at destination of $5 for 15, $10 for [illegible] days, $15 for 45 days, $20 for 60 days, [illegible] $10 for each 30 days additional. Route? Northern Pacific Railroad via [illegible] and Chicago. Accommodation? [illegible] sleeping and dining car to St. Paul daily and on December 1st, 8th,15th, 22nd and 29th pullman furnish tourist sleeping cars will be run through Winnipeg to Chicago via Northern Pacific and Wisconsin Central lines, in which a [illegible] will be made of only $2 per [illegible]

Tickets will be extended to include points in Quebec east of Montreal New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edwards Island by the addition of one [illegible] fare for the round taip from Montreal.

Time table, mads, and full information can be obtained on applecation to agents of the Northean Pacific Rail road.



COPYRIGHTED BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION 1891

"Ah, I see," added Julian bitterly; "I wouldn't care to shake hands with that particular soldier!"

"It was a dastardly, cowardly, dishonorable deed!" replied Colonel Chenier, "and not within the rules of civilized warfare."

Julian, after a moment, continued:

"I knew you couldn't keep up to your high standard, and make good your pretty theory of letting the dead past bury its dead, and all that. It's all very well till it comes home, and then"——

"No, sir," Colonel Chenier interrupted, "you are wrong. I admit you touched me at a tender point when you mentioned the burning of my house and the stabbing of my daughter; but I say to you now that I can and do forgive even those outrages—that is, I do not hold them a charge against the individual who committed them in the name of war and liberty and national glory. A soldier is a mere machine."

"You had better be careful what you are saying," exclaimed Julian, his eyes gleaming strangely; "I shall hold you fast on every word. Do I understand you to say that you are nobly generous enough to freely forgive the man, if you could find him, who with his own hand applied the torch to the Chenier homestead and thrust your daughter through the arm with a bayonet—is that what you mean?"

"Yes, sir," was the prompt reply; "yes, sir, that is what I mean. A battle was being fought all around my house, and my daughter, in the supreme moment of excitement, fired upon the detachment that stormed the place. Of course she took the chances of war."

Colonel Chenier held his head high as he spoke, with the air of one who feels the grandeur of his sentiments.

Julian smiled incredulously, and lay for a moment eying the dark faced, soldierly man as if contemplating a spring upon him, then he said:

"You'll take every word of that back in less than five minutes, Colonel Chenier."

The colonel smiled and shook his head, saying:

"No, you do not know me yet; you do not know the southern people yet. We are much better than your newspapers represent."

"Well, permit me to introduce to you in person the incendiary who burned your mansion and the ruffian who stabbed your daughter."

"Certainly, sir, whenever you can."

"I am the man."

Colonel Chenier laughed.

"You need not try to make a joke of it," cried Julian; "I swear to you upon the honor of a man and a friend that I am the very man."

"You! pshaw, sir, the idea is preposterous!" Colonel Chenier said this with a great effort to be light; but he had caught something from Julian's voice that chilled him.

"Go ask Miss Adelaide—she recognized me; she'll tell you who I am," the young man cried, impetuously gesticulating with the index finger of his right hand.

"Are you serious? Are you sincere? Do you mean"——

"I am serious—I am sincere—I mean every word I say," Julian said with emphasis; "and I am anxious to know where your theory is now! Do you still think you can control your prejudice?"

Colonel Chenier looked at Julian for a moment in silent inquiry; then his dark face grew darker, and his eyes took on a strange gloominess.

Adelaide came in with a tray of cut flowers, jasmines, roses, violets and geraniums.

"How are you feeling this morning, Mr. Julian?" she inquired, as she put her brilliant and fragrant load on the table near his window.

"Oh, thank you, I am ever so much better—I am enormously relieved," he exclaimed; "I have just unburdened myself to your father—told him who I am and what I did."

She glanced hastily from the young man's face to her father's, and a look of trouble leaped into her eyes.

"He does not think it possible that I am the incendiary and assassin both in one. He does not like to believe"——

"I think you are exciting yourself too much, Mr. Julian," she said; "you know what the doctor ordered." She gave him a warning look, and then turned to her father.

"I have forgiven him, papa, and of course you will too," she gently said, slipping an arm about the colonel's neck.

"Oh, he promised me that before I told him," said Julian.

Colonel Chenier put aside his daughter, and, taking his crutch, left the room without another word.

Adelaide stood looking after him till he passed out of sight; then she turned to Julian and said:

"It will be all right; I am glad you have told him."

"And Rosalie?" he exclaimed.

Adelaide involuntarily put her hand to her breast and in a faltering voice replied:

"I—I don't know—I am not sure. We need not tell her, need we?"

Her voice had some subtle sweetness in it that touched Julian strangely.

"Yes, I shall tell her as soon as I can see her. Won't you get her to come in here? I so much want to see her. Tell her it would help me; make me well."

The dark, comely woman stood before him a moment, her lips slightly apart, her dusky eyes fixed upon his face, her bosom swelling strangely. Julian had never before noted how beautiful she was. It was the dark, splendid beauty of the old south, a beauty that suggested passion as fervid as the sun.

"Yes, I will tell her," she said at last, turning away, "but if I were you I would not divulge our secret to her. It could do no good."

When she had gone out Julian sank back among his pillows and found himself weak and faint. He had overtaxed his strength. The fever lurking in his blood from the irritation of his injuries had rendered him excitable. Then, too, he had brooded over his strange predicament to an extent that had touched him with recklessness. It was well for him that he could fall asleep. He awoke feeling greatly refreshed just as Rosalie came into the doorway. When his eyes fell upon her shining hair and beautiful, beloved face he felt his heart leap mightily. He put forth his hand and said:

"I knew you would come, Rosalie"—and his face beamed joyfully.

She hesitated; her eyes would not meet his, and she did not speak.

"You don't know how I have longed to see you, to hear you talk, to have you near me," he went on, still holding out his hand.

She came into the room and went to the table, where she stood for a time making some pretense of rearranging the flowers Adelaide had put there.

"Oh, Rosalie, Rosalie, how could you stay away so long?" he exclaimed, his voice husky and low.

She gave him a quick, half frightened look, and the rosy bloom vanished from her cheeks, leaving them for a moment pale as marble.

"Are you getting well?" she asked in a tone indicative of great restraint, as if every expedient for appearing at ease had slipped beyond her reach. As if at the sound of her own voice, the blood flowed back into her face, lighting it with a delicate freshness, and her sweet troubled eyes burned with a sudden underglow. Julian saw the cross on her breast rise and fall with the waves of her emotion. He reached his hand farther with an appealing gesture.

"Won't you shake hands with me after our long separation?" he said; and then, as she seemed to waver and hesitate before him, he fervently murmured, "Oh, Rosalie, my own, my flower of all the south, come, you have eluded me long enough—come!"

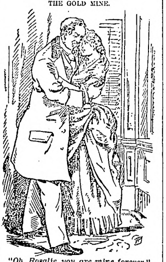
His voice, so low and passionate and masterful, seemed to thrill her as the wind thrills the flowers and grasses.

Was she about to place her hand in his? Was she about to swiftly stoop and kiss his forehead? He felt the wave of a great happiness flow over him as a little breeze sprang in through the window and tossed Rosalie's shining hair about her forehead.

The footfall of the physician coming to make his call was a most unwelcome and inopportune sound. Rosalie started like a frightened bird, and with one quick, never to be forgotten look into Julian's eyes, turned and glided lightly from the room.

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE GOLD MINE.



"Oh, Rosalie, you are mine forever."

Julian got well very soon. His convalescence was so rapid that within three days from the date of our last chapter he was able to sit on the veranda and watch the mocking birds flit to and fro among the trees that shaded the street. Somehow he had drawn infinite happiness from the expression of Rosalie's face, or from some indescribable intonation in her voice, or from the atmosphere that she had seemed to bring with her on the occasion of her only visit to his sick room.

Colonel Chenier was much the same as formerly—polite, entertaining, talk- [illegible] the subject of his last conversation with Julian.

Adelaide seemed shy and quiet, but Julian could not help seeing how her sojourn in Savannah was adding to her personal charms. She looked ten years younger than when he first saw her—more cheerful, elastic alert—and her voice had lost a certain querulousness which had characterized it. That her heart had thrown off its burden of discontent was apparent.

Julian tried to obtain little interviews with Rosalie, but she seemed not to understand his intent, and so allowed this or that trivial circumstance to thwart his plans. Instead of vexing him this amused him, and he allowed the days to go by without any effort on his part to break the dreamy monotony of things until he was able to walk without any artificial aid.

About this time Colonel Chenier came to him with a letter that he had received announcing the discovery of gold in the spring hollow above the old mill.

Along with this letter, or at least on the same day, had come a package of gold of about two hundred dollars in value. Colonel Chenier was excited.

Telegraphic specials in the daily papers giving highly colored accounts of the discovery of new mines in several places added fuel to Colonel Chenier's excitement.

"I must go and look after this matter," he said to Julian later in the day. "It may be possible that I have a fortune up there after all. I should like to have you go with me, if you will."

"It will delight me to be of service to you," Julian replied; and after a good deal of discussion it was resolved that they should go at once.

When Rosalie found that her father was going back to the old mill, she began to beg him to take her along. He flatly refused, saying that it would be a hurried trip, and that he could not be encumbered with her.

Julian, when he was about ready to start, went looking for Rosalie from room to room, and finally found her behind the curtains of a bay window crying.

"I have come to bid you farewell," he said; "my time is short; haven't you something cheering to say to me?"

He did not notice her tears. The outer blinds were closed and there was soft twilight behind the curtains.

"I shall come back or not, just as you say," he half whispered. "I love you too much to stay near you any longer, unless, unless—if you cannot and will not—if it is unpleasant to you for me to be here."

She hid her face in her hands a moment in her peculiar girlish way, while he stammered and paused in his speech; then she looked up and said in a breathless sort of voice:

"You must not stay away—you must come back with papa."

"May I come back for you?" he eagerly asked, leaning toward her, his arms half raised. "Will you be my wife, Rosalie?"

How sweet and shy and lissom she looked in that tender light as she tremblingly toyed with the Provence cross, and alternately lifted and let fall her wistful, happy, gray brown eyes! How could she speak with her heart throbbing wildly in her throat and her lips trembling so! But even this delicious silence could not satisfy Julian. He was too stubborn to reach forth and take her into his arms before she had expressly given him the right so to do.

"Your father is ready to go and is waiting for me," he said, with some obscure qualms of conscience at the thought of how nearly brutal this stubborness was, "and there is but a moment. Won't you answer me, Rosalie? Must I go away without knowing that you love me, and without your promise to be my own little brown eyed wife?"

He stooped toward her and put his arms out farther.

"Come, come!" he whispered, and then she yielded. He felt her slip close to him and nestle her bright head on his breast, and as he clasped her tenderly he said:

"After so long—after so many doubts and fears—Oh, Rosalie you are mine forever!"

"I have been yours all the time," she murmured with her old naivete present in her voice, "but—but I didn't know it till I—I thought you were going to die."

They were standing thus when Adelaide came in to tell Julian that the carriage was waiting to take him to the station, and that her father was ready and impatient to be off.

Julian released Rosalie and went to meet Adelaide, smiling proudly and joyfully. He took her hand and said:

"I am the happiest man in the world!"

Adelaide looked up into his beaming face and said under her breath:

"You have not told her?"

"Told her what?" he asked, and then he remembered. "No," he added, "but all the powers of the world cannot separate us now. She is mine, and I am hers."

She did not reply, but turned and left the room. Julian kissed Rosalie again and went away.

Colonel Chenier's gold mine proved to be a curious failure. When the boundary line of his mill estate came to be run, it was found that a mere fringe of the rich discovery was his. The deposit was really on land adjoining Colonel Chenier's, and quite recently purchased by Francis Whitcombe Ellis.

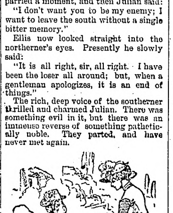
On the way back to Savannah a misconnection of trains delayed Julian and Colonel Chenier a day in Atlanta. Here Julian found himself suddenly face to face with Ellis. Their eyes thrust and parried a moment, and then Julian said:

"I don't want you to be my enemy; I want to leave the south without a single bitter memory."

Ellis now looked straight into the northerner's eyes. Presently he slowly said:

"It is all right, sir, all right. I have been the loser all around; but, when a gentleman apologizes, it is an end of things."

The rich, deep voice of the southerner thrilled and charmed Julian. There was something evil in it, but there was an immense reverse of something pathetically noble. They parted, and have never met again.



Where the Maid of the Mistral used to sit.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THE END.

When Edgar Julian, after his return to Roosevelt Place, told Rosalie of the interview between himself and Ellis at Atlanta, she felt a great load lifted from her heart. She had made herself wretched during his absence, imagining a meeting between the enemies in some mountain hollow, where Julian would be no match for his unscrupulous antagonist.

Julian was in no hurry to tell her the dreaded secret of the war time. He accomplished it by gradual approaches; but after all there was nothing gained. Rosalie loved him, and the disclosure did not cause even a momentary shadow to fall on her sunny face. She only crept closer to him and shyly kissed him. Afterward she went to Adelaide, and throwing her arms about her neck, murmured tremulously:

"My dear, noble sister! He has told me all!" Her warm tears fell upon Adelaide's cheek and neck.

They made a fine picture as they stood there twined together like dewy vines, and thus it was that love burned away the barriers of hate between the north and south. Out of the ashes of the burned up home and the scar of the bayonet wound grew the sweet flower of reconciliation.

The southern summer came on apace. Dusky splendors hovered in the groves and avenues by night, and by day the waves of heat shimmered over the housetops and along the silver river. The time was nearing when the Cheniers would embark for France. Julian finally prevailed upon Rosalie to set their marriage day early enough so that he could take her to Chicago for a few weeks before their departure for the land of the mistral and Chateau Chenier.

"I want to show you to my friends," he proudly said, "so that they may see how great has been my second victory over the south."

"It is not a victory," she quickly rejoined, "for you are my prisoner for life!" She put her arms around him to illustrate his captivity.

"Well, then," he said, "I want to show all of Sherman's boys how things have changed, and how delightful it is now to be captured in the south."

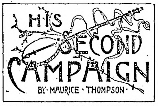
When Rosalie was once more in the north she found its fascination stronger than ever. The prairies with their seas of corn and vast plains of pasture, the thronged towns and the hum and hurry of industry and enterprise, seemed to clear her mind of the last trace of gloom. The whole country was hers!

Colonel Chenier and Adelaide are now in Provence. The question of Colonel Chenier's title to the chateau is under investigation in the French courts, but Julian and Rosalie are drifting about through a honeymoon that has run for nearly two years. When they first reached Chateau Chenier they thought they should be content to stay there always. They climbed upon the old wall and imagined they found the very spot where the Maid of the Mistral used to sit and play her lute while her lover was away in the eastern wars. Julian pointed out to Rosalie the part of the garden where the peasant dug up the old cross. They drove along the country roads between the fig and the mulberry orchards, where the barefoot peasant women were picturesquely grouped, and where the wild eyed children were working bareheaded in the sun. It was a sweet fulfillment of Rosalie's dreams; but Julian grew tired of Provence, and they went to Paris, and then to Switzerland, climbed the mountains and breathed the sharp breath of the glaciers.

We leave them in Rome. When they come back to America they will probably vibrate between Chicago and Savannah. Julian has not become altogether a southern man, and Rosalie cannot quite agree to the northern winters, which would seem to be about all that is left to quarrel about between the sections.

The old banjo from the "pocket" is Rosalie's constant companion, and the present taste for banjo playing among refined Americans leaves her free to indulge in those merry old songs as often as she may desire without any danger of shocking society; for what was once the lyre of the ignorant and enslaved southern negro is now the lute affected by the most cultured and æsthetic circles of the great cities both north and south.

THE END.



COPYRIGHT BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION, 1891.

HIS SECOND CAMPAIGN.

By MAURICE THOMPSON.

[Copyright, 1891, by American Press Association.]

Railroad Time Table.

LEAVE		ARRIVE
P. M.		A. M.
8	St. Paul.	10.30
9:25	Minneapolis.	9 55
115	Brainerd	5.05
A. M.
[illegible]	Wadena	3.22
4 35	Detroit	1.38
		P. M.
5.33	Winnipeg Jct.	12.51
8.00	Fertile.	7.30
10.05 p.m		7.31 a. m.
p. m.		a. m.
5.58	Red Lake Falls.	5.48
10.08	Crookston.	8.25
2.51	Grand Forks.	9.40
3.30	Via Red Lake Falls.	11.50
7.32	Forest River	11.40
6.58	Grafton	11.40
P. M.		P. M.
5.13	Pembina	1.34
4.03	Morris	2.44
2.?0	Winnipeg.	4.25

CHAS. S. FEE, G. P. T. A. W. S. MELLEN, G. M. J. [illegible] DUFFY, Agt.

WE GREET YOU

Once again! How time does fly! The echoes of last year's greeting have hardly dsed away and yet in a few short weeks we shall be wishing eachother a

Merry Christmas

Another time. To men engrossed in the cares and perplexities of business the years speed by as months—but they can not rob us of time to welcome the holiday which was once the happiest day in the year to us, and which is so closely linked with cherished memories of childhoood and youth.

OUR HOLIDAY OFFERINGS,

Plush Dressing Cases, Plush Manicure sets, silvered dressing cases, Plush Whisk Broom Holders, Oder and Perfume Sets, Plush Shaving Sets, Plush and Leather Paperettes, Plush and Leather cuff and Collar Boxes, Albums from 50c to $6.50 each. Tin and wood Toys in endless variety. Toy Books, Story

Books

About Dec. 15th we will receive a stock of Story Books, suitable for Young and Old.

China Cups and Saucers, Decorated Lamps, the Largest assortment of Dolls in Eastern Polk County. All our goods are marked in plain figures at lowest prices. We do not add 50 per cent. to the price of goods and promise to give with every dollar's worth of goods a 25c toy. Remember the place. The Old Reliable Drug Store.

W. A. SCHREIFER.

Green Bay, Winona & St. Paul

Railroad. Best and most Direct Line Between

LACROSSE,
WINONA,
Neillsville,
Eau Claire,
Grand Rapids,
Stevens Point,
New London,
Appelton,
Neenah,
Menasha,
Oshkosh,
Fon du Lac,
GREEN BAY.

And all Points in
EASTERN WISCONSIN,
Iron Districts of Northern Michigan and Lake Superior Regions.

Close Connections and Quick Time,

See That Your Ticket Reads Via
GREEN BAY, WINONA & ST. PAUL Railroad.

S. W. Champion,
Superintendent, Green Bay, Wis.
J. B. Last,
Ass't Gen. Pass. Agt., Green Bay, Wis.

I. LEMIEUX,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON,
Officein residence, First street, Red Lake Falls, Minn.

JOHN WATSON,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON,
Office in residence, Sixth street, Red Lake Falls Minn, 4

First National Bank

RED LAKE FALLS, MINN.

JAS. I. WYER, Pres.
JOS. SMITH, Vice President,
THEO. GARCEAU, Cashier

Capital....$50,000.
Surplus..... $5,000.

Careful Attention and Prompt eturns given all Collections.

ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

Flack is doing a big holiday business.

Mrs. A. Biddler returned to [illegible] Saturday evening.

Work is progressing rapidly on Joseph Helm's hardware emporium.

Commissioner Rhinehart came over from East Grand Forks Friday.

Land Agent W[illegible] in the county seat last week during the blizzard.

H. O. Gjerberg is fixing up the Commercial hotel stable, for a livery and feed stable.

The Braasberg String Band of Fertile advertises a dance there for to-morrow evening.

Miss Delima Huot has been ill for the past week with dyphtheria at her home in Huot.

To-morrow night the sociable and entertainment will be held at the Presbyterian church.

Buy your holiday goods of Flack the Jeweler and get a nice present with every 50c purchase.

Miss Emma Woodahl of Euclid has opened school in the South Side intermediate department.

Ole Temley, a stalwart citizen of Emardville, was in town Friday and subscribed for the NEWS.

Red Lake Falls schools have turned out a large number of teachers, and the list is constanly increasing.

Miss Rose Zeh arrived home Tuesday morning from West Superior after a pleasant visit among relatives.

Ezeb Normandeau is kept rustling to accommodate patrons at Wm. Findeisen's blacksmith and wagon shops.

Tuesday was the feast of the Immaculate conception, mass being celebrated in both St. Josephs and St. Mary's churches.

The thermometer has been soaring away up among the 30's the past week. It must be pretty warm, judging from this.

Cyprien Gosselin has opened up a real-estate office in his Bottineau avenue building. His card appears in another column.

District court opened Monday. The number of criminal cases on the calendar far exceeds any recent record—being 35.

Miss Benton drove to Gentilly yesterday. She will teach the school in Dist. 45, Miss Lizzie Boyle having resigned the position.

Jas. Larkins went up to Lambert Saturday. He returned Manday with six head of cattle which Jas. Phalen has been keeping.

The young ladies of the city contemplate giving a leap year dance. It will be a success, with our Red Lake Falls girls behind it.

Mr. and Mrs. Adam Zeh returned from West Superior, Wis., this week, and are guests at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Kaufer.

Rev. Lavick is absent attending to clerical duties in Dakota. He will return Sunday in time to hold services as usual at 2 p. m. in the Bergdorf building.

Miss Zona Wilksns was down from her school near St. Hilaire, to spend the Sabbath at home. Miss Wilkins enjoys teaching and is giving good satisfaction.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore La Point arrived from East Grand Forks Tuesday evening. Mr. La Point has bought a blacksmith shop at Terrebonne, and the family will reside there in the future.

Joe Prudham is one of the many Gentillyites who appreciate our superior wheat market. Mr. Prudham says he gets an average of two cents per bushel more for his wheat here than elsewhere.

Red Lake Falls business constituency is steadily widening. As our facilities increase for coping with competitors, so does the volume of business grow. Another year will see still greater progress.

W. J. Richardson and wife, who have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. Z. Perron returned to Stevens Point, Wis., Monday. They had a very pleasant visit, and would have stayed longer but for pressing business engagements.

Adam Zeh will open an office and buy cattle to ship to Jerome & Co., West Superior. With two meat markets and two purchasing agencies, Red Lake Falls ought to be able to take care of the superfluous beef around here.

A runaway [illegible] for, revelling in the sociability of a saloon, forgot the team. They probably ran home without doing much damage.

The delay in thrashing will have a tendency to distribute the volume of business over a longer period of time, and the usual tremendous fall rush is obviated.

It's County Superintendent Carruth now. He was appointed to that position at the last meeting of the county comissioners. After his appointment he gave a reception.

The southwest corner lot, Main and 1st sts was yesterday sold to J. P. Harren. Next spring Mr. Harren and W. A. Riechel will erect a building on this lot, the ground floor to be occupied with a shoe store and the upper store with a photograph gallery.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church will give a dime social in their building on Broadway, Friday evening Dec. 11, 1891. The Rogue's Art Gallery will be on exhibition. All should see this rare collection of views and curiosities.

Louis La Bissoniere is in charge of a drug store in St. Paul. The proprietor of the drug store and his wife died the same day, intestate. They having no relatives, Louis was placed in charge by the probate court until such time as it can be disposed of.

Red Lake Falls is the natural market and commercial centre of as fine a countsy as is to be found. It is true we have not drawn our rightful share of patronage, but it is coming to us. A good way—the best way—to reach the intelligent class of farmers is to advertise in the NEWS.

The village attorney has filed his opinion as to the legality of voting additional railroad bonds. The exact amount that may be voted is $3,000. This settles one point in the right of way matter. The amount, if raised at all, will have to be got by personal subscription. It will rest with the crocuses during the winter and may blossom again with them in the spring.

Dan Anderson, one of Emardville's progressive farmers, took the train here Friday evening, bound for New York. He will sail from there to Norway, to see his wife and children. He will make an effort to induce them to return with him in the spring, and failing in this, will remain in the old country. Mr. Anderson's friends have a sufficiently high opinion of his persuasive powers to predict that he will return in the spring accompanied by his family.

Rev. F. L. Arpin Sunday took charge of St. Mary's church, as pastor, his appointment having come from Duluth during the week. Rev. Arpin's selection meets with the entire approval of the parishioners. During Father Arpin's sojourn here he has won the esteem and affection of all with whom he came in contact. Mass will be held Sunday, beginning at 10:30. Fr. Arpin will now remain in the city, administering to both parishes, while his mission at Argyle will be in charge of another priest.

Register Locken in Crookston Times: It is a significant fact that there are more mortgages being satisfied and few newer ones being recorded this fall than ever before in the history of the office. Heretofore the chief income of the office was the fees for recording realestate mortgages, a regular bonafide transfer was a rarity. This has been reversed during the past year. Now the principal business is recording warrantee deeds, and our income from the mortgages put on record is hardly enough to keep a prohibitionist in whiskey.

Pat Ford was in from Wylie Monday and made us a pleasant call. It is not generally known that Pat is a military hero, but he avers that "Grant's Memories" are nowhere aside of his—although modesty prevents their publication. In 1863 Mr. Ford was a member of the military company, headed by Governor Ramsey, and piloted by Pierre Bottineau, who were sent up to negotiate a treaty with the then powerful Chippewa nation. The camp was struck at the point now known as the Mouth of the River—where the Clearwater flows into the Red Lake river. They remained sixteen days, returning after assurances that the Chippewas had no intentions of seconding the barbarities of the Sioux in the southern part of Minnesota. Chief Hole-in-the-day was at that time at the height of his power, and was the leading spirit among the Indians during the negotiations.

O My! Those beautiful Dolls at the Drug and Jewelry Store are just too sweet for anything.

DR PRICE'S

Cream Baking Powder.

Used in Millions of Homes—40 Years the Standard.

[illegible] YOU EAT

Candies, Nuts, Fruits? Ovide Emard sells such. Fresh and cheap, fresh and cheap. The finest and the best. When you think of Candy, or nuts or fruit or fancy groceries or

TOBACCO

Or pipes, or schoool supplies, or writing inks, or photograph albums or autograph albums,

OR PENS

Go to Ovide Emard and he will give you digestible prices that will please you.

For every dollar purchase you make at the Drug and Jewelry Store you will receive a 25c present.

Best horseshoeing done at Findeisen's.

Fred Gesswein has a fine new realestate sighn.

More new goods just received at the Drug and Jewelry Store.

Peter Logan, of Brooks, and John Conroy of Maukato, are enjoying the sights in town to-day.

For every 50c purchase at my store you will receie a 10c present.

Flack the Jeweler.

All kinds of COAL for sale at Hoskin's elevator.

32 W. T. SPILLANE.

Buy your candy, nuts, figs and popcorn of Flack the Jeweler. A fine new stock just received.

At S. Elstad's blacksmith shop near the depot, you can get guaranteed work. First-class horse shoing by an old experienced workman.

Make a 50c purchase at the Drug and and Jewelry Store and get a nice present free.

Flack the Jeweler.

Mat Skala's place on Broadway stil retains its popularity, and not without reason—Mat has dexterity and tact. A full stock of wines, liquors and cigars. When in need of liquors for medicinal purposes.

Horseowners, Take Notice.

At the request of many of my customers I have secured the services of a first class horse shoer and respectfully solicit a share of your patronage. First class work guaranteed.

Wm. Findeisen.

Team of working horses for sale. Weight 12 and 14 hundred. P. & J. Meehan, Thief River Falls, Minn.

Buy your presents at the Drug and Jewelry Store and gladden the hearts of your father, mother, sister, brother or sweetheart.

MARKETS AT NORTH SIDE ROLLER MILL.

Mascot (Fancy Patent) per 98lb. sack	$2.50
Favorite (Family Straight) per 98lb sack	$2.25
Echo, per 98lb sack	$2.25
Shorts, per ton	$12.00
Graham, per 100 lb. sack	$2.50
Bran, per ton	$10.00
Ground feed per ton	$13.00

WHEAT.

1 Hard, 78c. 1 Nor. 76c 2 Nor. 78c 3 Nor. 62c

The Polk Co. Alliance will hold their SemiAnnual Meeting at the Court House in Crookston, Tuesday, Dec. 29th 1891, at ten o'clock a. m. for the purpose of electing one delegate and one alternate to attend the state farmers alliance, to convene at Minneapolis January 15th, 1892, and such other business as may properly come before said meeting. Each sub alliance is entitled to three delegates.

JOHN D. KNUTESON, Secretary.
H. G. MITCHELL, President.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank, Red Lake Falls Minn., for the Election of Directors will be held at the rooms of the Bank Tuesday, Jan. 12, 1892, between the hours of 10 a. m. and 4 p. m.

Jas. I. Wyer, Pres.
Theo. Garceau, Cashier.
Red Lake Falls, Minn. Dec. 11 1891.

REAL ESTATE,

INTELLIGENCE AND COLLECTION OFFICE

SPECIAL BARGAINS NOW ON HAND

In Desirable Property. Call or Write for Particulars.

Office on Bottineau Avenue, Red Lake Falls.

SANTA CLAUS makes his headquarters at Flack's.

[illegible]

TONSORIAL HALL!

N. MORISETTE, PROP.

Everything First Class!

SHAVING,
HAIR-CUTTING,
SHAMPOOING!

Shaving 15 cents.
Haircutting 25 cents.

MainStreet, - Rd Lake Fall

PATENTS!

Pension, Postal, Land and Indian Depredation Claims.

U. S. and Foreign Patents obtained;
Interferences conducted;
Special examinations;
Trade-marks, copy-rights, labels and designs registered.

Rejected cases prosecuted; Infringment suits conducted in any United States Court.

If you have an invention, send us a sketch, photograph or small model, together with a brief description of the most important features and we will advise you the course to pursue. If you are in posession of patents and the same are infringed, or if you are charged with infringement, submit the matter to us for a reliable opinion.

NATIONAL BUREAU OF CLAIMS.

Box 35 Washington, D. C.

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Nov. 24, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on January 9th, 1892, viz, Paul Prul, hd 11856 for the s½ ne¼ and lots 1 and 2, sec 6, twp 149, r 42.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz.

Foussaint Beaudry, Joseph Benoit, Joseph Leroux, all of Terrebonne, Polk Co., Minn.; John Quesnell, of Mentor, Polk Co., Minn.

nov26d31 H. H. Dickmann, Register.

Land office at Crookston, Minn., Nov. 27th 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register or Receiver U. S. Land office at Crookston Minn. on January 1, 1892, viz: Euclide Beaudry Hd 10794 for the NE¼ sec 23 Twp 150 Rg 44.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:

John T. Beaudry, Crookston, Louis Arbert, Ambroise Delorme, Louis Guilmette all of Rld Lake Falls, Minn.

dec. 3-jan 6 Hugh Thompson Register

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

(First publication Dec. 3.)

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of fifty and 25-100 dollars, interest, which became due on the twenty-first day of November 1891, which default has continued to the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Luc Dumas, mortgagor, to D. S. B. Johnston Land Mortgage Company, a corporation duly incorporated and organized under the laws of the state of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the twenty-first day of November, 1887, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 22nd day of November, A.D. 1887, at 4:15 o'clock p. m., in book 38 of mortgages, on page 122.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said D. S. B. Johnston Land Mortgage Company, mortgagee, to William J. Peck, by written assignment, dated the twenty-fourth day of April, A.D. 1888, and recorded in the office of said register of deeds, on the ninth day of May, A. D. 1888, at 1 o'clock p. m., in book 36 of said mortgage records, on page 96.

And whereas, the said William J. Peck, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of six hundred fifty and 25-100 dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent per annum from the twenty-first day of November, A. D., 1891, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz:

The south west quarter (sw¼) of section twenty two (22), in township one hundred forty nine (149) of range forty-five (45) containing one hundred and sixty acres, more or less, according to to the government survey thereof, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, or his deputy, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 16th day of January, 1892, at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of six hundred fifty and 25-100 dollars, and interest, and eighty-six and 45-100 dollars taxes paid by said assignee on said premises, and fifty dollars, attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 2, 1891.

WILLIAM J. PECK, Assignee of Mortgagee.
D. D. WEBSTER Attorney for Assignee of Mortgagee, 322 Hennepin ave, Minneapolis, Minn.

State of Minnesota, county of Polk—ss.

In Probate Court, Special Term, Dec. 5th, 1891.

In the matter of the estate of Peter Bischoff, deceased:

On reading and filing the petition of Joseph Bischoff, administrator of the estate of Peter Bischoff, deceased, representing, among other things, that he has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining, settling and allowing the final account of his administration, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to the parties entitled thereto by law.

It is ordered that said account be examined, and petition heard by this court on Monday, the 11th day of January, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the office of the judge of probate, in the city of Crookston in said county.

And it is further ordered, That notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Red Lake Falls News, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 5th day of December, A. D. 1891.

By the Court,
C. M. Benson, Judge of Probate,

dec15-29

For Sale.

I HAVE FOR SALE THE FOLLOWING LANDS,

Improved and Unimproved

FARMS

IN POLK COUNTY, MINN.

Long Time, Small Payments, Low Rate of Interest.

	SECTION.	TOWN.	RANGE.	SETTLER
W½ of Nw¼	29	147	43	Wilson
Nw¼ of sw¼	28	147	43	Wilson
Se¼ of Ne¼	30	141	52	Wilson
Se¼	6	148	42	Sylvesterson
Se¼	8	146	45	Troxell
Ne¼	2	148	45	Dillon
Sw¼	2	148	44	LaDue
S½ of Nw¼	2	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Rivard
S½ of Sw¼	4	149	44	Bombardier
N½ of Nw¼	9	149	44	Bombardier
Se¼	7	146	44	Vaudrin
Nw¼	11	149	44	Tanasse
Ne¼	11	149	44	Emil Fontane
Ne¼	4	149	45	Beaudette
Sw¼	12	149	45	Herbert
E½ of Ne¼ & E½ of Se¼	23	149	45	Patnode
Sw¼	24	149	46	Chayer
Sw¼	20	149	46	Haber
Ne¼	26	149	48	Folk
Ne¼ of Nw¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
N½ of Ne¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
Nw¼ of nw¼	9	150	41	Lemieux
Ne¼	26	150	41	Gabourey
Ne¼	10	150	42	Dagneau
Se¼	13	150	42	Lajambe
Se¼	25	150	42	Sylvester
Nw¼	32	150	42	Lachapelle
Se¼	12	150	43	Deserve
W½ of Se¼	13	15	43	Marlow
N½ of Ne¼	24	150	43	Marlow
Nw¼	17	150	43	Desotelle
se¼	11	150	43	Lizee
Ne¼	23	150	43	Bess[illegible]n
Se¼	23	150	43	Valle
Se¼	29	150	43	Toepin
E½ of Nw¼	31	150	43	Rabillard
Lots 1 and 2	31	150	43	Rabillard
Nw¼	32	150	43	Dandenault
Ne¼	33	150	43	Gaudette
Ne¼	19	150	44	Boutellere
Se¼	31	150	44	Charron
Nw¼	33	150	44	Zaiser
Sw¼	34	150	44	Houle
Ne¼	6	150	45	Garon
E½ Sw¼	6	150	45	LaBelle
Lots 6 and 7	6	150	45	LaBelle
E½ of Sw¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
W½ Se¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
Nw¼	12	150	46	Pare
Sw¼ of Tw¼	3	151	42	Doutre
S½ Se¼	4	151	42	Doutre
Se¼ Sw¼	4	154	42	Doutre
Se¼ of Nw¼	4	150	42	Meilleur
Sw¼ of Ne¼	4	151	42	Meilleur
Lots 2 and 3	4	151	42	Meilleur
N½ of Se¼	18	151	42	Sotourneau
N½ of Sw¼	17	151	42	Sotourneau
Se¼	15	151	43	McIntire
Lots 1 2 and 3	17	151	43	Emard
E½ of Nw¼	17	151	43	Emard
Ne¼ of Nw¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
Nw¼ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
S½ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
W½ of W½	23	151	43	Page
Ne¼	33	151	43	Beausoleel
E½ of Nw¼	7	151	44	Blaire
Lots 1 and 2	7	151	44	Blaire
Nw¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Lots 8 9 and 12	15	151	44	Bottineau
Ne¼ Se¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Nw¼ Sw¼	23	151	44	Bottineau
S½ Ne¼	6	151	44	Muller
Lots 1 and 2	6	151	44	Muller
Se¼	4	151	45	Jones
Se¼	14	151	45	Berry
Ne¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	32	151	45	Fleurie
Ne¼	20	150	46	McLean
Ne¼	24	151	46	Gauthier
Se¼	24	161	46	Tougas
Se¼	8	151	48	Lyle
Ne¼	25	152	42	Paussant
W½ of Ne¼ & w½ of se¼	28	152	43	Beaulieu
Nw¼	30	152	43	Turville
E½ of Nw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
Lot 1	31	152	43	Rourke
Ne¼ of Sw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
N½ of Sw	10	152	44	Loe
Sw¼ of Se¼	10	152	44	Loe
Ne¼	13	152	44	Sandon
Sw¼	15	152	44	Dahlbeck
Nw¼	25	152	44	Rourke
Sw¼	25	152	44	Comstock
Ne¼	34	152	44	Rourke
Nw¼	25	152	45	Carroll
Se¼	28	152	45	Pepin
Nw¼	32	152	45	Pilon
S½ of Ew¼	2	152	46	Kirsch
Lots 3 and 4	2	152	46	Kirsch
E½ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Ne¼ of Se¼	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼	20	152	46	Carlton
Tw¼	26	152	46	Billandeau
Sw¼	4	152	48	Feeny
Fe¼	24	152	49	Brownlee
Se¼	11	153	43	Ness
Nw¼	25	153	44	Ives
Sw¼ of Ne¼	2	152	45	Bray
Lot 2	2	153	45	Bray
W½ of Se¼	2	153	45	Bray
Nw¼ of Sw¼	10	153	45	Bray
Sw¼	4	153	45	Lucian
Nw¼	6	152	45	Lusia
Sw¼	12	153	45	Clement
E½ of E½	14	153	45	Clement
W½ of E½	14	153	45	Coe
Se¼	18	153	45	Labounta Sr.
Sw¼	18	153	45	Labounta
E½ of W½	2	153	46	Lusia
Nw¼	8	153	46	Kelly
Se¼	8	153	46	Hazeltine
Ne¼	14	153	45	Stacy
Nw¼	26	153	46	Cole
Se¼	26	153	46	Labounty
Se¼	28	154	45	Gooler
S½ of Ne¼	32	154	46	Bautain
Se¼	25	153	46	Lusian
Ne¼	34	154	46	Thamas
S½ Ne¼ & 1 1,2	2	152	46	Filbin
Nw¼	32	150	45	Brosseau
Ne¼	30	152	43	Miller
Ne¼	19	152	42	Borup
Ne¼	29	150	41	Stone
Sw¼	10	151	46	Benoit

A. D. Wishard,
RED LAKE FALLS,
ma 21f5 Polk Co., Minn.

NORTHERN PACIFIC

BETWEEN

Winnipeg, Gilby, Dayton, Grafton, Grand Forks-Crookston, Red Lake Falls.

AND ALL POINTS

EAST AND WEST.

There is nothing better than the service on

THE DINING CAR LINE

Through Pullman Sleeping Cars Daily Between Points in the

RED RIVER VALLEY

AND

ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS

PACIFIC COAST TRAINS
PASSING THROUGH
MINNESOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA
IDAHO, ORENON AND WASHINGTON.

CARRY COMPLETE EQUIPMENT OF

Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars,
First and Second Class Coaches,
Pullman Tourist and
Free Colonist Sleepers.

And Elegant Dining Cars.

THROUGH TICKETS Are sold at all coupon offices of the Northern Pacific Railroad to points North, East, South and west, in the United States and Canada.

For further information regarding rates, routes maps, etc., address

CHAS. S. FEE,
G. P. & T. Agt.,
St. Paul, Minn.

J. A. DUFFY
Local Agt

CHICAGO & ATLANTIC

In conjunction with the Erie System operates Fast Vestibuled Trains between Chicago and the Atlantic Seaboard. you may travel in the most Elegant and complete Pullman Vestibuled Trains ever constructed and save $1.50 to Buffalo and Niagara Falls, $2.00 to New York $2.35 to Albany and Troy, and $3.00 to Boston and New England Cities.

No rival line offers the advantages of a system of through first and second-class day coaches and Pullman Dining cars chicago to New York.

It is the only line operating pullman cars to Boston and New England via Albany.

Entire trains are lighted by gas, heated by steam. Pullman dining cars run through in either direction.

Pullman chair and sleeping cars to Columbus, O., and Ashland, Ky., Daily.

No extra charge for fast time yeap unsurpassed accommodations afforded on these luxurious trains.

Get an Estimate

Of the Cost of Your Building - From

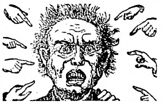
JAMES BRADY,

CONTRACTOR
AND BUILDER.

Foreman of the Construction of

North Side Roller Mill.
P.&J. Meehan's Saw Mill.
J.D. Marshall's residence.
And others

Office at residence on hamilton av.



HE Missed his Opportunity! DON'T Miss Yours, Reader. The majority neglect their opportunities, and from that cause live in poverty and die in obscurity! Harrowing despair is the lot of many, as they look back on lost, forever lost, opportunity. Life is passing! Reach out. Be up and doing. Improve your opportunity, and secure prosperity, prominence, peace. It was said by a philosopher, that "the Goddess of Fortune offers a golden opportunity to each person at some period of life; embrace the chance, and she pours out her riches; fail to do so and she departs, never to return." How shall you find the GOLDEN opportunity? Investigate every chance that appears worthy, and of fair promise; that is what all successful men do. Here is an opportunity, such as is not often within the reach of laboring people. Improved, it will give, at least, a grand start in life. The GOLDEN opportunity for many is here. Money to be made rapidly and honorably by any industrious person of either sex. All ages. You can do the work and live at home, wherever you are. Even beginners are easily earning from $5 to $10 per day. You can do as well if you will work, not too hard, but industriously; and you can increase your income as you go on. You can give spare time only, or all your time to the work. Easy to learn. Capital not required. We start you. All is comparatively new and really wonderful. We instruct and show you how, free. Failure unknown among our workers. No room to explain here. Write and learn all free, by return mail. Unwise to delay. Address at once. H. Hallett & Co., Box 880, Portland, Maine.

Red Lake Falls News

Terms, $1.50 per Year.

P. & JAS. MEEHAN, Proprietors.

MINNESOTA NOTES.

The Villard roller mill is running to its fullest capacity.

A new and fatal horse disease has appeared at Union.

Considerable building activity is predicted at Anoka next season.

The Austin Register runs a column headed "Men, Women and Chumps."

The students of the Wasionja seminary have organized a literary society.

The closing session was a successful one on the St. Croix river, in a logging sense.

The lower rooms of the public schools have been closed on account of diphtheria.

Work on the new church at Wasioja has been suspended on account of the cold weather.

Winona reports that this is the earliest date for the freezing of the Mississippi since 1880.

Rev. Father Dwyer, of Luverne, has abandoned the libel suit which he began against Mr. Crain.

Forty cars were loaded with flour at New Ulm in one day from the Eagle, Empire and Roller mills.

Rev. Eyrich, of Le Sueur, has accepted the call of the Evangelical congregation of New Ulm.

Mrs. A. L. Darling, who has been a resident of Brownsville since 1858, died Friday of consumption.

Mrs. Gesina Overbeck and Mrs. Nancy Shane, two old and estimable ladies of St. Cloud, died Friday.

Reports from many portions of the state indicate that this is one of the coldest Novembers ever witnessed.

Improvements have been made on the Catholic church at Waverly. The whole property has not cost less than $25,000.

No effort has been made in Houston county to raise its share of the World's fair fund, and it is thought nothing will be done.

An unknown man was killed on the Burlington track opposite Winona. He was well dressed, and was evidently not a tramp.

Carleton college students fight with brass nuckles like genuine thugs. One student was nearly killed, says the Waseca Radical.

The foreman of the railway bridge at Hastings reports that 503 boats, 501 barges and 42 rafts passed up and down the river the past season.

The barn on Kramer's farm at Minden, near Sauk Rapids, was burned with five horses and cows. The fire was caused by the explosion of a lantern.

Ole Skirley was sentenced by Judge Buckham, at Fairbault, to three years hard labor at Stillwater for highway robbery committed at Northfield nine years ago.

The Odd Fellows of Winona presented M. L. Mertes, a blind man, a purse of $856.10. It was subscribed by Odd Fellows in different parts of the state.

Mr. and Mrs. Ole O. Behem, of Grand Meadow, have been arrested charged with stealing from the pack of a peddler, which was left at their house over night.

At a marriage in Austin, while the wedding party was marching down the aisle of the church after the ceremony, the organist played the well known hymn, "Onward Christian Soldiers, Marching as to War."

Some of the creameries of Freeborn county paid as follows per 100 pounds of milk during October: Clark's Grove, $1.20; Manchester, $1.18; Bancroft, $1.16; Riceland, $1.12.

District court is in session at St. Peter, Judge Webber presiding. Mrs. Mary Miller was indicted for murder in the second degree. She shot her husband at Nicollet last August.

Olive Branch lodge D. of R. I. O. O. F. at Hastings has elected: Mrs. W. W. Williams, N. G.; Mrs. Almond Empey, recording secretary, and Mrs. Julia M. Sonderman, treasurer.

Magnus Peterson and his wife, of Moorhead, had a little domestic infelicity which culminated in a pretty good sized row, for which Magnus was fined $25 by a Moorhead justice.

George De Graff, a boy 15 years of age, was arrested from the farmer with whom he had been working all summer. In his possession was found a gold watch and other valuables.

The jury in the libel case of Joseph Zimmerman and A. H. Traux & Co., vs. the Duluth Tribune, returned a verdict of $400 in favor of the plaintiff. The amount asked was $10,000.

An effort will be made to have more millitary drills at Carleton college. Lieut. Abbott, the efficient commander of the Shattuck corps at Faribault, has taken charge of the manoeuvers and Carleton is expected to make great progress in the millitary art.

B. O. Espin, proprietor of the Gilbert house, at Albert Lea, adds his testimony to the effectiveness of the Keeley institute at Des Moines, where he spent two weeks. There are over 20 patients. It is expected that others from Albert Lea will go there.

L. P. Hunt, of Mankato, president of the state board of the World's Fair commission, stated in Duluth that already fifty counties have guaranteed their respective shares. It is intended to place $20,000 of the money in a state building and the rest will be used in obtaining exhibits.

The Mankato Review is authority for the statement that a case was recently tried before a New Ulm justice the proceedings of which were conducted in German, Congressman Lind appearing as one of the attorneys. Mr. Lind is, however, a Scandinavian.

Mr. and Mrs Morris left a theatrical troupe at Luverne and desided to settle down in the village of Adrian. Mrs. Morris opened a millinery shop and her husband obtained a large class in music. They became very popular. Now comes orders from the woman's real Husband at Newark to arrest the parties for adultery and robbery. The womans real name is Pike. The guilty parties became suspicious, packed up their goods and left for other fields.

THE VERY LATEST.

News From all Quarters to Suit the Taste of Everybody.

Events of the Week Carefully Condensed for Busy Readers.

St. Louis dealers in electrical supplies have combined to regulate supplies.

The condition of cattle throughout the country is reported to be generally good.

Mayor Clarke, of Peoria, Ill., closed the gambling houses in that city Tuesday.

Milwaukee is taking steps to secure the next Democratic National Convention.

Eleven persons were nearly asphyxiated by escaping gas Thursday night at Pittsburg, Pa.

John Powers, living near Clare, Mich., is said to be afflicted with leprosy of a malignant type.

Thursday a Blaine club, believed to be the first of the campaign, was organized at Muncie, Ind.

A drunkard whom he failed to cure has sued Dr. Keeley, of Dwight, Ill., for $12,000 damages.

Two earthquake shocks shook up Seattle, Wash., Sunday afternoon. No damage was done.

Utes are killing deer by thousands in Colorado, taking the skins and leaving the flesh untouched.

Brazilian papers are demanding the impeachment of the last dictator, ex-President Da Fonseca.

The stock of wheat in the country elevators of Minnesota and the Dakotas is given as 8,057,500 bushels.

Mrs. Mary McVey, 70 years old, of Braddock, Pa., has lived 141 days with no food other than buttermilk.

Potter Palmer and other Chicago capitalists, it is alleged, will soon buy the Palace Hotel at San Francisco.

Near Lima, Ohio, John Miller and Joseph Wolph, neighbors, fought with an ax and a hatchet. Both will die.

It is reported that a treaty allowing absolute free trade between the United States and Hawaii has been negotiated.

During the last fourteen weeks Chicago received flour and grain equal to 83,514,000 bu and shipped equal to 72,347,000 bu.

United States Consuls in France report that the conditions for exhibiting at the World's Fair are fairly encouraging.

Congressman W. D. Bynum of Indiana has come out in a card withdrawing from the speakership race. He will vote for Mills.

At Clarksville, Iowa, the schools have been closed and public meetings forbidden on account of the prevalence of diphtheria.

It is believed that the railway disaster near Chattanooga Thursday night was caused by wreckers, who purposely displaced a rail.

It is reported that a wagon train of immigrants were frozen to death in a snowstorm in the mountains south of Knoxville, Tenn.

Influenza is reported to be spreading in France and Germany. The death rate in Hamburg is 280 above the average, due to the disease.

The British minister at Rio de Janeiro telegraphs that Fonseca's readiness to abdicate the dictatorship of Brazil was due to his ill health.

Judson R. Mason and O. C. Mason have sold the Bloomington, Ill., Daily Leader, an afternoon paper, to L. A. Cass, of Kenosha, Wis.

Valentine Wentz, an assistant pressman, of the Leavenworth (Kan) Times, was instantly killed Tuesday morning by a shock of electricity.

Soldiers of the Second battalion, Prince of Wales' Leinster regiment, hanged an obnoxious corporal Friday, but he was cut down in time to save his life.

The representatives of coal roads met at New York Tuesday, and decided to restrict the production of coal for the month of December to 3,250,000 tons.

Prairie fires a few miles west of Colbert Station, I. T., have destroyed great quantities of hay and done much damage to buildings, occupied mostly by poor settlers.

Two world's records were broken Tuesday at Stockton, Cal. Frou Frou, a yearling filly was driven a mile in 2:26, and Fausta, another yearling filly paced a mile in 2:.4¾.

Chauncey Depew Tuesday gave it as his opinion that New York failed to get the Republican National Convention on account of the feeling that New York is hostile to the World's Fair.

Minneapolis mills during the past week ground 161,200 barrels of flour, as compared with 205,585 barrels the preceding week and 188,170 barrels for the corresponding period one year ago.

The Rt. Hon. Edward Robert Bulwer Lytton, Earl of Lytton, British Ambassador to France, known in the literary world as "Owen Meredith," died suddenly from heart disease Tuesday at Paris.

Exports from the four chief Atlantic ports for the past week were: Flour, 211,900 pkgs; wheat, 2,527,930 bu; corn, 359,150 bu; oats, 441,650 bu; rye, 292,500 bu; barley, 131,400 bu; flax-seed, 117,000 bu.

Mrs. John George, of Columbus, Ind., dreamed Monday night that her daughter—3 months old—died, and that she saw her as an angel. The dream awoke her, and she found her baby was really dead.

At a dinner of the Army of the Potomac, in New York, General Palmer, Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, again denounced the use of the Confederate flag and denominated it an old rag of treason.

The president has directed revenue vessels to cruise along the Atlantic coast from the St. Croix river to Charleston, S. C., from Dec. 1 to April 1, for the purpose of affording relief to all vessels found to be in distress.

Minneapolis, Minn., was selected as the place for holding the Republican National Convention by the National Republican Committee, at Washington Monday, on the seventh ballot. The convention will meet June 7.

The St. Paul Jobbers' Union has sent 188 thrashing outfits and about 9,000 laborers into North Dakota. Yet, with all this help, it is estimated that at least one-fourth of the crop still remains unthrashed and will so remain until next spring.

Milwaukee is to make a strong effort to secure the Democratic National convention. The preliminary steps for bringing the convention to that city, if possible, were taken at a largely attended meeting of citizens held Saturday night.

According to an official calculation 100,000,000 poods of grain must be imported from abroad for the food supply of European Russia and Poland. A petition has been presented asking for a loan from the Russian Government for this purpose.

Influenza, which is now prevalent in Berlin is of a violent type. Thirty deaths from the malady have been reported in the past eight days. Physicians estimate that 40,000 persons have been attacked by influenza during the present month.

George Wheaton Allen, better known as "Land-Bill" Allen, the originator of the homestead act, died at the county infirmary, Columbus, O., Sunday, aged 83. He had spent a fortune in the interest of the bill of which he claimed to be the originator.

It is reported that the English are inciting the natives to the north of Grand Case Mount to rebellion against Liberian authority, for the purpose of bringing about complications that will give an excuse for seizing rich territory along the northern border of Liberia.

The Upham Manufacturing Company, of Marshfield, Wis., was the successful bidder for the Huntzinger tract of timber in township 28, range 1 west. The price was $80,000. The tract will cut 10,000,000 feet of pine, which will be manufactured here at the company's mills.

Near Monticello, Ga., at a dance Monday night Joe Thomas shot Wilson Walker dead. The two were rivals in love. Tuesday Wilkes James and Edward Jenkins, also rivals in love, met in a road and began firing at each other. James soon fell dead with a bullet in his brain.

At a meeting of the federation in Topeka, Kan., Friday, it was decided to make an effort to enforce the eight-hour law enacted by the legislature last winter. It is alleged that the law is violated in the office of the state printer and other places. Money necessary to make the fight has been raised.

The Republican National Committee issued Tuesday afternoon its formal call for the National Republican Convention. The document tells when and where the convention will be held, and prescribes the method for choosing delegates. Mr. Channing F. Meeks, of Colorado, was chosen to be sergeant-at-arms of the convention.

A large portion of the business part of Tracy, Minn., is in ashes from a disastrous fire which broke out on Sunday morning. Many families are without homes and every hotel, with the exception of the railroad eating house, is gone. Some suspicions are afloat that the fire was incendiary, but nothing definite can be learned.

ELOPEMENT FRUSTRATED.

A Married Man Attempts to run Away With a Girl.

ALMA, Wis., Dec. 4.—W. A. Hammond, a saloon-keeper, of Nelson, eight miles north of here, came to this place yesterday and hired a team with which he drove toward home. Near that place he was met by the 15 year old daughter of his neighbor, J. F. Butler, returning to Alma with her, where, according to his own statement, they intended to board the train and elope. The girl's mother, however, being suspicious, came down on the very same train and thwarted the plans of the runaway couple by taking the girl home with her. Hammond is a married man and the father of three children, his wife being the daughter of a respectable family. Mr. Butler, the father of the girl, is absent from home, and Hammond took advantage of this fact.

Just Flying.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 2—The fastest time ever made by a railroad train between New York and Washington was accomplished today by a special train over the Pennsylvania railroad. It left New York at 2:45 p. m., and stopped in the station at this city at 7 p. m. Deducting eleven minutes for stops, the actual running time was four hours, or 240 minutes for 228 miles, averaging fifty-seven miles per hour. Some very fast bursts of speed were made on various parts of the line, reaching in instances the extraordinary rate of seventy-five miles per hour.

Keeley Couldn't Cure Him.

FAIRBURY, Iowa, Dec. 2.—Two damage suits have been brought against the Leslie E. Kelley company of Dwight in the Circuit court of this county by Henry M. Munroe, who was a patient at the institution. The amount sued for is $12,150. The suit is based on the claim of Monroe that they failed to cure him from drunkenness, which they guaranteed, and injured his health by the gold-cure treatment. He also claims damages for injured to his character and business done by Dr. Keeley.

Set Out to Be Highwaymen.

DUBUQUE, Iowa, Dec. 4.—Lenard Lochner, the street-car driver shot by boy bandits three days ago, died last night. Hanson, who did the shooting, is 17 years old and a hard character. The Lee boy, his companion, is sorry for his connection with the affair. He prevented Hanson from shooting the officer who arrested them at Oelwein. He said they started out as highwaymen with desperate intentions, resolved to kill all who apposed them.

Were O'er Old to Marry.

MILFORD, Ills., Dec. 3.—Mr. Harvey Richardson, of Iroquois, aged 75, and Mrs. Mary Nolan, 85 years of age, were married about a month ago. They have already agreed to live apart.

CAPITAL BREVITIES

Resume of Important Events at the National Capital.

What Is Being Done by the Executive and Other Departments.

Bugbee, present judge of Alaska, has been asked by the president to resign on account of charges of drunkenness and gross immorality. The indications are that Bugbee's successor will be appointed as soon as congress meets, and Alaskan affairs will be generally overhauled on account of numerous irregularities. Gov. Knapp will also doubtless have to go.

The treasury department is in receipt of two $100 bills, a $50 bill and a $20 bill, all counterfeits executed with a pen by John Bradley, an inmate of the Central Insane Asylum at Indianapolis. The bills are all poor counterfeits, but the $50 note has been passed and the $20 note has been in circulation so long that it is almost worn out.

AFTER THAT $5,000,000 LOAN.

President Baker, of the World's Columbian Exposition, called on the president by appointment and discussed the subject of the proposed government $5,000,000 loan. The president, while he did not indorse the proposed application for aid, expressed his intention to do all that can properly be done by him to help along the Exposition, and said that if he ultimately concluded to recommend that congress extend further aid to the project he would do it from a conviction that it was his duty, and would give no half-hearted support to the measure.

RECOMMENDS A LOAN OF $5,000,000.

Ex Senator Palmer, president of the national commission of the World's Columbian Exposition, has submitted to President Harrison the report of the commission in regard to the progress and condition of the exposition work. It concludes with a strong indorsement of the action of the board of control in applying for a loan of $5,000,000 by the general government to advance the interests of the project. This report and the report of the board of lady managers previously submitted to the president will form the basis of a special message to congress some time in December.

WILL NOMINATE REED FOR SPEAKER.

Col. David B. Henderson of Iowa, who was one of the aspirants for the speakership when Speaker Reed was elected, has arrived here for the winter. He says the republicans will make Tom Reed their caucus nominee for the speakership to further emphasize their appreciation of his services in the last congress. With regard to the silver question, Col. Henderson says an effort will surely be made to pass a free silver bill during the coming session. It ought to pass the house, and may pass the senate, in view of the votes of the new silver states. The sentiment for free silver is just as strong in certain quarters now as it was last winter.

SECRETARY PROCTOR'S SUCCESSOR.

It is not improbable that President Harrison has a surprise in store for the country in the shape of an announcement that he has concluded to appoint Assistant Secretary of War Gen. Lewis A. Grant to be the successor to Secretary Proctor. The information has been given out quietly by some of Gen. Grant's friends that his appointment has been decided upon, and their statements are given color of accuracy by the fact that Monday afternoon Secretary Blaine and Vice President Morton called upon Gen. Grant and had a protracted chat with him. Gen. Grant is from Minnesota, and has been a very popular assistant secretary of war, standing very well in the estimation of the president and Secretary Proctor.

WERE GIVEN DECENT BURIAL.

Mr. Anibal Cruse, the first secretary of the Chilian legation, denies absolutely the reports which have been published to the effect that the bodies of Gens. Barbosa and Alcerecca, the two generals of Balmaceda's army, were for eight days after their death exposed on the public plaza and subjected to other indignities before burial. While Mr. Cruse is now in Washington as one of the members of the Chilian legation, he was at the time of the death of the two generals in Chili, and he says from his own personal observation that the bodies were buried the day of the battle of Placilla, in which battle Barbosa and Alcerecca were killed, and without profanation or indignities. Mr. Cruse witnessed the funeral and says the generals were given a proper and decent burial.

DECISION IN THE MINERAL LAND CASE.

Commissioner Carter of the general land office has rendered a decision in the case of Richard P. Barden and others against the Northern Pacific railroad company. The land in controversy is within the grant of the company and was returned by the surveyor-general as agricultural land. Subsequent to the date of the filing of the map of the definite location of the road it was discovered to be mineral. The contention of the company was that, as the land was not known to be mineral at the date of the filing, it passed absolutely under the grant. The commissioner, however, holds that the discovery of the mineral character of the land subsequent to the filing of the map of definite location but before the patent issues excepts the land from the grant. This case is now pending in the United States Supreme court on appeal from the United States Circuit court of Montana.

CLAMORING FOR SMALL COIN.

The holidays are fast approaching and all the dealers are complaining of the scarcity of small coin. There seems to be an absolute dearth of pennies, and the shortage appears to be due entirely to the penny-in-the-slot machine. The condition of affairs in New York city illustrates the scarcity that exists throughout the east. Last March there were $40,000 in United States copper locked up in the subtreasury in that city; at present there are $104,000. In the city of New York alone there are sixty tons of these one-cent pieces kept out of circulation. One of the penny weighing machines alone last week sent to the subtreasury $1,400 in one day for change into more suitable coin. Notwithstanding all this small money now locked up in New York there is a clamor for it all over the country and the mints are doing their utmost to supply the demand that comes with the opening of the holiday trade.

HAD LEFT HUSBAND.

The Wife of the Menominee Suicide in Ignorance of His Death.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Dec. 4.—Mrs. Munski, of Menominee, widow of the butcher at that place who blew out his brains the evening of Thanksgiving Day, had left her husband a few days before. After Munski's deed the neighbors not knowing where Mrs. Munski was became excited and suspected she had been murdered by her husband. They dug in the cellar of the house in the belief they might find her body. Mrs. Munski had left at home eight children, the youngest a year and a half old. Finally the authorities took the matter in hand and Deputy Sheriff Campbell, of Menominee came to Eau Claire to-day to look the woman up. She was found at the residence of Mayor Wie, where she had hired out as a domestic. She had given another name there. She had not heard of the tragedy and was taken home.

Ben. Butler's Illness.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—A special to the World from Boston says the illness of Gen. Butler is very serious. Every effort has been made to keep the matter secret, but it can now be safely said that the gravest doubts of his recovery are entertained by those in a position to known most about his condition, and some of them assert that he will never be able to leave his house. The general, who is lying at his home in Lowell, took a severe cold a few weeks ago. He has been under the constant care of physicians ever since. But he gets no better from day to day.

Cannot Take Seats in the House.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—At least three of the Democratic members from New York will not have their names upon the roll of the house when that body is called to order by the clerk a week from today. These three members are Representatives Bourke Cockran, Joseph J. Little and Alfred C. Chapin, who were voted for on the 4th ult. to fill vacancies. There is no question of their election, but they cannot be put on the rolls until their certificates arrive, and these will not be forthcoming until the state board of canvassers meets some time during December and can vasses the vote.

How It is Regarded in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—The candidacy of St. Paul for the Democratic national convention is not being discussed to any great extent in Washington. Leading Democrats look toward the northwest with considerable favor as a convention location since the Republican convention went to Minneapolis and it is believed that St. Paul will have a good fighting chance when the national committee gathers here. Many easterners maintain, however, that the convention should be held in New York. Boston, New York and Detroit are to make a hard fight for it.

The Milwaukee's Extension.

CHAMBERLAIN, S. D., Dec. 2.—It now looks as though an early extension of the Milwaukee railroad to the Black Hills is certain. A party of contractors arrived here last night and crossed the Missouri today to look the ground over They are examining the lay of the country for a distance of 30 miles west of here in order to see what amount of work will be required to construct the road bed for the new road. It is expected that much preliminary work will be done this winter. The Milwaukee is undoubtedly looking to their interests.

Revolution Still Rife.

LONDON, Dec. 2.—The lateat dispatches from Rio Grand do Sul are of an alarming nature. The national guard has revolted, and fears are entertained that the issue will be a grave one. The authorities of Rio Grande do Sul are obstinate in their refusal to comply with the orders from Rio Janeiro, instructing them to reinstate the former officials of the state, and a conflict with the federal authorities may be looked forward to unless wiser counsel prevails.

Apaches at War.

WILCOX, A. T., Dec. 2, —The Apaches are on the war path and have committed several depredations. One man has been killed and another wounded, and the settlers are arming to protect themselves. Maj. Wm. L. Downing, who lives about 30 miles south of this place, came in great haste Thursday night and reported that one of his men had been murdered by a war party of Indians, who disappeared soon after the killing and cannot now be found.

Heroic Elevator Boy.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, Dec. 4.—The Evans block, a fine stone building, was badly injured by fire to-night, and the Northwestern National Bank was burned, though the books and funds were unharmed. The elevator boy proved himself a hero by going through the smoke and fire to warn the people, while he himself had to be taken down a ladder.

Fighting the Rum-Sellers.

SIGOURNEY, Iowa, Dec. 5.—The Keokuk County Temperance alliance is on the warpath. Permanent injunctions have secured against ten saloonkeepers and property holders in Whatcheer, and one in Harper. Temperance fighting is going on fiercely.

THE NEXT HOUSE.

Its Political Complexion Grouped by Localities.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—So that every one may understand distinctly the condition as to political power in the next house of representatives, the political complexion of the members from each state is here given in groups as to locality:

	Dem.	Alli.	Rep
NEW ENGLAND STATES
Maine	0	0	4
Vermont	0	0	2
New Hampshire	2	0	0
Massachusetts	7	0	5
Connecticut	3	0	1
Rhode Island	2	0	0
Total	14	0	12
MIDDLE STATES.
New York	23	0	11
New Jersey	5	0	2
Pennsylvania	10	0	18
Ohio	14	0	7
Total	52	0	38
WESTERN STATES.
Indiana	11	0	2
Illinois	13	0	7
Michigan	8	0	3
Iowa	6	0	5
Minnesota	3	1	1
Wisconsin	8	0	1
Nebraska	1	2	0
Kansas	0	7	0
North Dakota	0	0	1
South Dakota	0	0	2
Colorado	0	0	1
Wyoming	0	0	1
Total	50	10	24
PACIFIC STATES.
California	1	0	5
Idaho	0	0	1
Nevada	0	0	1
Oregon	0	0	1
Washington	0	0	1
Montana	1	0	0
Total	2	0	9
SOUTHERN STATES.
Alabama	8	0	0
Arkansas	5	0	0
Florida	2	0	0
Georgia	6	4	0
Kentucky	10	0	1
Louisiana	6	0	0
Maryland	6	0	0
Delaware	1	0	0
Mississippi	5	2	0
Missouri	14	0	0
North Carolina	8	0	1
South Carolina	5	2	0
Tennessee	8	0	2
Texas	11	0	0
Virginia	10	0	0
West Virginia	4	0	0
Total	109	8	4

Tolstoi.

Tolstoi has recently been described by a Danish writer who had visited him, and the London News thus summarizes the result: "The oldest son, aged 27, has taken the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, and has accepted an official appointment on the State Prisons Board in order that he may avoid the appearance of too emphatically opposing his father's opinions, which he does not share. He is a musician and composer, inheriting an ardent love of music from his father. The next son Illja, is married, and lives quietly on the estate in the province of Tula. The third believes more in his father's doctrines than any other of the family. The eldest daughter, Tatjana, is no adherent to her father's teaching. She is artistic and paints well. The second, Mascha, has chosen her father's mode of life. Dressed as a peasant girl, she labors in the fields, and gives her leisure to working and caring for the poor. There are four young children, the smallest of whom is 3 years old. Countess Tolstoi, notwithstanding the claims of this large family, finds time to attend to her husband's English correspondence. The Count receives letters in four or five languages, and always replies in that in which he is addressed. His daughters help to write the answers. The German letters are dealt with by a young gentleman of that nationality.

GENERAL MARKETS.

CHICAGO.

WHEAT—Closed Nov., 91⅞c; Dec., 92⅜c; May, 99¾c.

CORN—Closed; Nov., 68⅝c; Dec., 47c; May, 42⅞c.

OATS—Closed; Nov., 33½c; Dec., 31¾c; May, 32⅜c.

PROVISIONS—Mess Pork closed; Dec., $8.27½; Jan., $11.1 ; May, $11.52½. Lard—Closed; Dec., $6.07½; Jan., $6.20; May, $6.47½.

CATTLE—Quotations range from $5.50@5.85 for good to choice cattle; $5.00@5.40 good shipping steers; $2.85@4.00 common to fair steers.

HOGS—Sales ranged from $3.32@3.75 for light; $3.70@4.10 for heavy.

SHEEP—Quotations range from $4.25@4.40 for Western; $3.50@4.80 for natives and $3.90@5.25 for lambs.

WOOL—Quotations as follows:

Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana and Eastern Iowa.

Coarse tub	28@30c
Medium tub	30@33c
Fine unwashed	16@19c
Medium unwashed	22@25c
Coarse washed	28@30c

Nebraska, Dakota, Minnesota, Kansas and Western Iowa.

Fine unwashed	14@16c
Medium unwashed	17@20c
Coarse unwashed	17@19c

NEW YORK MONEY MARRET.

Money on call easy at 3 to 4 ℘ cent; closed offered at 3 ℘ cent.

Sterling exchange quiet and easy at 480½ for 60-day bills and 483¾ for demand.

Government Bonds—Closing quotationss 4's, coupons, 117.

NEW YORK PRODUCE MARKET.

WHEAT—Closing prices: No. 2 red, Dec., $1.06; Jan., $1.07⅜.

CORN—Market closed: No. 2, Nov., 72c; Dec., 58⅞c.

OATS—Market closed for Mixed Western, 38@41c; White do., 40@44c.

BUFFALO.

WHEAT—No. 1, hard, $1.04½.
CORN—No. 2, 57c.

MILWAUKEE.

WHEAT—Cash, 89⅛c; Dec., 89c.
CORN—No. 3, 45½c.
OATS—No. 2 White, 34c.

ST. LOUIS.

WHEAT—Cash, 93⅜c; Nov., 93⅝c.
CORN—Cash, 42½c; Nov., 42½c.
OATS—Cash, 32⅛c; Nov., 32½c.
PROVISIONS—Pork, $9.25. Lard, $6.05.

"When My Ship Comes In."

"When my ship comes in," runs the young man's song,
"What brave things shall I do
With the strength of my wealth and the joyous throng
Of friends stout-hearted and true!"

He watches and waits 'neath storm and sun
By the shore of his life's broad sea,
And the days of his youth are quickly run,
Yet never a sail spies he.

"My ship has gone down!" in soberer strain
Sings the man, and to duty turns.
He forgets the ship in his toil and pain,
And no longer his young hope burns.

Yet again by the shore he stands grown old
With the course of his years well spent,
And gazing out on the deep—behold,
A dim ship landward bent!

No banner she flies, no songs are borne
From her decks as she nears the land;
Silent with sail all sombre and torn
She is safe at last by the strand.

And lo! To the man's old age she has brought
Not the treasures he thought to win,
But honor, content and love—life-wrought,
And he cries, "Has my ship come in?"
—M. A. de Wolfe Howe, Jun., in Harper's Weekly.

ESQUIMAU TOYS.

HOW THE LITTLE CHILDREN OF THE NORTH AMUSE THEMSELVES.

Dolls of Bones, Wooden Walruses with Fierce Mustaches, and Ghostly Birds with Unbending Dignity.

Did you ever see a group of children get together on the sidewalk and play the fascinating game of "Esquimau"? It is not unlike the "Muffin Man," but then it requires different words, and so it certainly is another game entirely. All the youngsters gather in a ring and slowly jig around and around, while half of them shrill in a queer singsong:

Oh, do you know the Esquimau?
The Esquimau,
The Esquimau?

The query is solemnly answered with great alacrity by the other half of the circle, who shriek:

Oh, yes, we know the Esquimau,
The Esquimau,
The Esquimau,
He lives in the land of ice and snow,
Of ice and snow,
Of ice and snow.

Then the whole band hop solemnly in simulation of the supposed antics of the Esquimau.

The funniest part of it all, according to a gentleman who has recently returned to this city from the arctic regions, is that the little Esquimau youngsters have an almost identical game—singing an odd little tune of their own and going through queer antics, unhesitatingly believed to be exact representations of the children of the far-away South.

You would think that so much of the little Esquimau's time would be spent trying to keep warm that he wouldn't have a great deal left for play. But those little fur-clad tots in the ice and snow are having more fun than a circus and summer vacations rolled into one.

They tag around after their male relatives just as the small boys do here, and they fidget their snub-nosed mammas almost to death by stealing off among the icebergs in a little bit of a tippy cranky craft made of skins and things. They listen round-eyed to tales of harpoons and of deadly bouts with polar bears. They tell their small sisters brave tales of their own dauntless courage, and when a bigger boy shouts "Polar bear!" they run shrieking to their relatives, just as if they lived on California street or somewhere in the mission.

The Esquimau small boy is amazingly like other small boys. He's round-faced and brown-cheeked and chubby beyond belief. He wears queer garments of skins and of leathers. He doesn't know what a hat is. He never ate a pound of candy or a dish of ice-cream in his life, and he never heard of a baseball game, but he's lots like other boys for all that.

As for the girl, she's precisely like her blonde sister down here, who hasn't the faintest notion how good whale's blubber is. She knows just the same kind of games. When one brown tot "goes visitin'" another brown tot she lugs her favorite doll with her, and then she sits right down in the dark little hut and begins to "play house."

That doll of hers is a strange-looking being. It has a flat face made of wood or bone and it has the stiffest kind of arms and legs, not a joint in them, and its eyes are just painted on the face, and it's a lucky doll that has a hair on its head; but little Miss Esquimau loves that doll just as much as if it were flaxen-haired and had red cheeks and shining blue eyes. Dolly couldn't speak "mamma" if you squeezed it to pieces, and it would never think of such a thing as letting you turn its head, but Miss Esquimau doesn't mind that a bit. She just dresses and undresses her and whips her and cries over her dreadful misdeeds quite as if her name was Maude Athel Van Buren instead of being an unpronounceable thing in consonants and a grunt.

She has a good many gowns, too, has little Miss Iceberg. O, yes. Why, there's her minkskin walking gown, and her otter sledging get-up, and her sealskin cloak, and, finest of all, her feather dress. Pretty things they are, these gay skin garments. They are wonderfully made, delicately sewed, and sometimes they are wondrously embroidered with quills from the fretful porcupine.

Those benighted little beetle brows have never heard of Noah's ark, but they have a substitute for its weird animals among their toys. Wooden walruses, with fierce mustaches, and ghostly birds, whose unbending dignity suggests the splendid reserve of those familiar patriarchs, Shem, Ham, and Japhet, so distinctly that you look around for the little green trees and spotted dogs that always stand guard over the ark.

They don't have trains of cars to play with, those blue-nosed shiverers; they wouldn't know what to do with them if they had, but they have a jolly substitute. There's a tiny sledge of bone, drawn by four sleuth-like dogs, and there are bold forerunners going on before and daring hunters walking nonchalantly behind. There's a toy for you. There's something even better than that, though. There's a regular Santa Claus of a doll, sitting in a sledge and driving four beautifully snarling dogs.

When the long winter dark comes on the boys sit in the low huts and make tiny boats of fish skin cunningly stretched over a skeleton of firm wood. While they are tinkering away at these pretty boats the small sister sits beside them on the bearskin and make soft little fur boots for her doll.

The mother is close by making nets or trimming a robe with a delicate border of porcupine quills. She can tell the loveliest fairy tales, can that little bit of a fat, roly-poly mother—fairy tales all about queer little seals who can turn up their fur hoods and turn into the splendidest bow-legged men. There are strange legends about the crow and his wife, and tales of the domestic life of the big white bears. When the boy grows weary of the legends he runs out and has a tumble in the snow. There's always plenty of snow—such sleigh rides, such snow fights—only think of the fun those little blue-chins have.

They have the funniest kind of footballs. They look like huge potatoes that have been put down cellar and sprouted. They're all covered with long tufts of fur that flies about in a most confusing way when the ball goes round. They make snow shoes for themselves, too, and for their dolls, and they go out "shoeing."

Not such a bad idea, this living at the North Pole, is it? That is when you're a youngster. When you're grown up you want books and papers and concerts and theaters and soup and dinners with more than one course, and it's different.

But then it's always different when you're grown up.

A Japanese Flower-Show.

In Lafcadio Hearn's paper in the Atlantic, The Chief City of the Province of the Gods, he describes a Japanese flower-show. He writes:

Often in the streets at night, especially on the nights of sacred festivals (matsuri), one's attention will be attracted to some small booth by the spectacle of an admiring and perfectly silent crowd pressing before it. As soon as one can get a chance to look one finds there is nothing to look at but a few vases containing sprays of flowers, or perhaps some light gracious branches freshly cut from a blossoming tree. It is simply a little flower-show, or, more correctly, a free exhibition of master skill in the arrangement of flowers. For the Japanese do not brutally chop off flower-heads to work them up into meaningless masses of color, as we barbarians do; they love nature too well for that; they know how much the natural charm of the flower depends upon its setting and mounting, its relation to leaf and stem, and they select a single graceful branch or spray just as nature made it. At first you will not, as a Western stranger, comprehend such an exhibition at all; you are yet a savage in such matters compared with the commonest coolies about you. But even while you are still wondering at popular interest in this simple little show the charm of it will begin to grow upon you, will become a revelation to you; and despite your Occidental idea of self-superiority you will feel humbled by the discovery that all flower displays you have ever seen abroad were only monstrosities in comparison with the exquisite natural beauty of those few simple sprays. You will also observe how much the white or pale blue screen behind the flowers enhances the effect by lamp or lantern light. For the screen has been arranged with the special purpose of showing the exquisiteness of plant shadows; and the sharp silhouettes of sprays and blossoms cast thereon are beautiful beyond the imagining of any Western decorative artist.

Mistaken Identity.

An American lady visiting in England one day rashly alluded to fleas by their common name, and it was only when her English listeners looked slightly horrified that she realized that she should have spoken of those offensive insects as "f sharps," or applied to them some equally euphonious title. That unfamiliarity with them is confined to their names, rather than their persons, may be guessed from the following story, which is told about a proposed entertainment of performing fleas, a long while ago, before the king of Prussia.

All the royal party had assembled about a platform, on which the exhibition was to take place. The entertainment was called "Napoleon and his Generals."

The court sat in expectation, but the "professor," who was manager of the affair, shook his bushy mane and rolled his eyes in anguish, while he wrung his long hand and marched up and down his little cage. At last he gasped:

"Napoleon is missing!"

He paused and cast his eagle eye over the distinguished company. He observed that the princess royal fidgeted a little. Throwing his whole soul into his eyes and voice, he approached that august lady and the king.

"Sire, madam," he cried, "this exhibition is a poor man's all! Without Napoleon, his generals are valueless. There can be no entertainment without him. An unfortunate entreats. Allow me."

The princess wore an old-fashioned fichu. In the fraction of a second the professor had turned back several of its white folds, made a capture and proudly returned to his troop. Arrived on the stage, he ventured to relax his hold and examine the captive.

"Oh," he groaned, in despair, "it is a wild one!"—Exchange.

Big Caterpillars.

Australia, it would appear, has some gigantic caterpillars. A. S. Orliff of Sydney mentions one moth larva, abundant during the summer season, which is from seven to twelve inches long. Species are numerous which vary from six to eight inches in length.

There are 40 000 women studying in the various colleges in America, and still it is not more than twenty-five years since the first college in the land was opened to women.

THE PANTHER LOOSE.

And He Creates a Deal of Excitement for Donald Burns.

Donald Burns traveled for fifteen years with Barnum's circus, says the N. Y. World. He now has an establishment here from which he supplies animals to circuses and menageries, and has in stock a particularly large and ferocious panther.

When Burns reached his store at 7:30 a. m. yesterday, John Miller, an employe, was standing outside.

"Oh, Mr. Burns, the panther is loose!" he cried.

"Well, we'll have to get him back in the cage," said the old animal trainer. "You get me a rope."

With a piece of clothesline arranged with a running noose in one end Burns entered the store. The panther sat on top of his cage licking his paws. With a quick movement Burns threw the lasso. It missed, and the panther made a leap for the trainer, who stepped out and closed the door.

Peering through a window Burns saw the panther making a round of the place, scaring the other animals terribly. He squeezed his paw between the iron bars of cages and shook them. A little monkey seized the paw. He lived about two minutes. The blood on the panther's paws infuriated him. He began a war-dance in the center of the room and the other animals howled.

Finally he went back to the top of his cage and Burns decided to make another effort to lasso him.

"Now, when I yell you open the door," he said to Miller. "Then grab the end of the rope and pull with me when I tell you to."

The door was opened softly again, and Mr. Burns threw the lasso. When the animal saw the rope coming he threw up his left paw and the noose dropped over his head and paw.

"John, John, open the door," yelled Burns. "I've got him; come and help me."

But John's courage failed him, and despite Burns' yells for help no one went to his assistance. A crowd gathered around the door, but no one entered. Miller rushed about on the outside like a crazy man.

"When I found that Miller would not come in," said Mr. Burns yesterday, "I braced myself for the struggle that I knew was coming. The animal was a year old and had just been brought from India.

"I figured on his pulling from me, like all panthers, but the lasso caught under the shoulder, and so he didn't feel it so much around the neck. I pulled hard and strong and so did the panther for a moment or two, but in the twinkling of an eye he seemed to shrink his body and slipped out of the noose. I picked up an iron floor-scraper and jumped aside as soon as he leaped for me. I tried to hit the beast with the scraper, but missed him. Then we fenced around the room, the panther leaping for me and I endeavoring to hit him. I seized a box of pepper and tried to throw some into his eyes, but I couldn't connect. I had a dog upstairs and I kept calling him, but he was tightly chained.

"Fully fifteen minutes passed in this way. The cages, barrels and other obstructions in the room served to protect me. When the panther jumped I would dodge behind one of these, and he would go over my head. Finally I got a paper-file from the desk. It was only a little piece of pointed iron wire, about six inches long, but I felt a bit stronger when I got that in my hands.

"Then I missed my footing in trying to prod the brute, and he was on me in a second. He caught me in the arm above the elbow. I jabbed the spindle into his side and he let go and leaped to the other end of the room. The blood spurted out of the hole I made in his side.

"We came together again, and before we separated I was bitten in several places. Luckily for me the panther was not an old one, and the teeth were not long. They were long enough to tear through the flesh terribly, though.

"I was getting weak from loss of blood when a policeman from the Oak street station opened the door and closed it quickly. I had the panther by the throat, but he was working out of my grasp. I yelled again for help, and two longshoremen came to my rescue. They beat the panther off, and with poles handed in from the outside we drove the beast into his cage again."

Mr. Burns was badly lacerated about the body, and his face, too, showed marks of the desperate struggle.

Miller is out of a job.

How to Ride a Swimming Horse.

To begin with, it must not be supposed that a horse always swims naturally, and with ease, the moment he is off his feet in the water. The animal, under such circumstances, has but one notion, to keep his head out of the water, and to lift his shoulders as high as possible.

In doing this his hind quarters sink, and he finds himself almost standing upon his tail, or at least in a position three-quarters erect.

In such a position, if the rider draws upon his reins, or throws his body back in the least, the animal's hind quarters will sink more and more, his body will take a vertical position, and, beating the water uselessly with his fore-feet, he will finally sink.

As soon as the horse gets off his feet in the water, let the rider grasp a handful of the animal's mane, leaning at the same time well forward upon his shoulder, but without touching the horse's head. The rider's knees should be pressed tightly to the horse's sides, otherwise he is likely to be swept off by the water.

This is the only position which will enable a man to remain in the saddle and the horse to swim at the same time.

The reins must be held loosely and each well to one side. If the horse is to be guided in the water give the loose rein a little jerk in the direction desired. But it is in the highest degree important never to pull on the reins.—Revue du Cercle Militaire.

The average wealth of every family of five in Massachusetts is $4 810, but it is by no means distributed that way.

FORTUNES IN CHICAGO LAND.

Astonishing Rise in Value of Property in the Windy City.

Without taking into account the annexation of outlying districts the city has fairly jumped with "leaps and bounds." Like all rapidly growing cities, its people are fond of pointing out the humble beginnings of its sturdy pioneers who started the pace in the bewildering strides for business supremacy. How Potter Palmer sold calico "prints" at 70 cents which were bought just previous to the war at 3 1-2 cents, and thereby "hived" $15,000,000; how Marshall Field knew when to "take occasion by the hand" and reaped thereby profits which would make A. T. Stewart green with envy; how Leiter, his Hebrew partner, came to select twenty-four of the best business corners in Chicago are scraps of history dwelt on with pardonable pride. The history of these men is the history of Chicago. Pluck and foresight tell the story.

This great city is not stopping to stone the prophets of disaster, but has gone right ahead and its enterprising burghers have laid out enough "sites" outside the corporate limits to accommodate two or three municipal empires the size of London. The city is growing perpendicularly as well as horizontally. Imagine a city with an area twelve times as large as New York so congested that eighteen and nineteen story buildings have become a necessity.

The Tacoma Building, thirteen stories high, has 2,400 tenants. The Chamber of Commerce, same number of stories, has about three thousand tenants. Double these for callers and you have 6,000 souls per hour emptying on a sidewalk space of 100 feet or so. There are more tenants in these few feet than in five blocks in New York or fifty in Pittsburg. Land is so high priced that "sky-scrapers" seem to be a necessity. You can buy some of the choicest parts of Broadway, New York, for $6 000 a foot, and $4 000 a foot will buy the Splane Post-office corner, probably the most valuable angle in Pittsburg, and yet you cannot get a choice of Dearborn street frontage, south of the river here for $8,000 a foot, which only ten years ago sold for $100 a foot front. Chicago has doubled in population every ten years since the first census in 1854, and why should not values jump also? Within five years land around Calumet Lake, Thirty-third Ward, fourteen miles out, has increased in value ten times! On the other hand there are parts of the Thirteenth Ward that have not increased $1 in value in ten years. J. R. Walsh, the newspaper capitalist, made $1,500,000 last year in real estate here, and J. R. Trude, the lawyer, cleared $1,300 000 in three years in "dirt." Mike McDonald can count 151 pieces of rent-producing property which pays better than any game ever played by the outcasts of "Poker Flat." While I was here Henry W. Snyder sold the northeast corner of Michigan and Eda street for $88 000, he bought it just one week before for $78,000. The ground on which the Mallers building stands was bought from John V. Farwell two years ago for $346,000. Its rental now pays 5 per cent on $500,000. The front foot value is now $3,000 per foot. One year ago plenty of it could have been bought for $1,000. The Oak Hill addition to Hammond was sold recently to an Iowa syndicate for $250,000. M. M. Fowler purchased the same property about one year ago for $70,000.—Chicago Cor. Pittsburg Dispatch.

In a Thunderstorm on Pike's Peak.

A Boston lad recently had a thrilling experience on Pike's Peak in a thunderstorm. In a private letter he writes:

"I was a few rods ahead when suddenly I heard Jackson cry, 'My God, look at that!' Turning, I saw a sight that fairly made my blood run cold. Less than half a mile distant was that terrible cloud, one blaze of lightning, rushing towards us with terrific speed and on a level with us. We had little time to be frightened before the cloud was upon us. I was fifty feet ahead of Jackson when the storm struck us. Simultaneously came a downpour of sleet and snow and a terrible flash. Will and I were thrown to the ground completely stunned by the shock. When we recovered consciousness we found that a large rock lying directly in our path had been shattered by the lightning. To retreat was as bad as to advance, so on we went. All at once we discovered that the electric fluid was running over us. Sparks flew from our fingers, from our noses, our ears, and from our mustaches. We sat down on the rocks, but this would not do, as we were wet to the skin, our clothes frozen stiff, and we were in danger of freezing to death. On we pushed, the lightning striking all around us, the sparks streaming from our bodies, and the air full of a sulphurous smell. We expected that every moment would be our last. Three separate times during that terrible walk we were knocked down by electric shocks."

Queen Mary's Lapdog.

Queen Mary of Scots had a favorite lapdog, which is said to have been present at the execution of its poor mistress in Fotheringay castle. After the royal lady had been beheaded the faithful creature refused to leave her dead body and had to be carried out of the hall by force. At that period lapdogs were the pets of men as well as of women. Dr. Boleyn, a relation of the unhappy Queen Anne Boleyn, owned one "which," as it is written, "he doted on." Anne once asked him to grant her one wish and in return he should have whatever he might desire. Knowing his affection for the dog, she begged it of him and of course the doctor had nothing to do but to give it to her. "And now, madam," he said, "you promised to grant my request." "I will," quoth the queen. "Then, I pray you, give me my dog again."—Exchange.

The growth of horseracing in the last ten years is illustrated by the fact that in 1880 the money added to prizes by the racing associations amounted to $18,000. Now it totals $4,000,000.

A WAR TOUCH.

Reminiscence of Rebellion Times as Told by Col. "Billy" Wilson.

Col. "Billy" Wilson of Wilson's zouaves was one of the well-known characters of New York city a quarter of a century since, and many an anecdote is told of him to this day by those who were active in the stirring times of the war. A Mail and Express man heard two stories of the war veteran recently from a well-known retired member of the bar, who is rich in reminiscences of old New York.

Col. "Billy" was a rough-and-ready sort of man, and, withal, a brave one, and just the man to lead the regiment that bore his name. That regiment had a good record, and though it was composed in part of much of the riffraff of the town, and had many doubtful characters among its members, it could "fight."

Thereby hangs a story.

Col. "Billy" was one day sitting at his desk—this was in 1861—taking the names of recruits. A typical tough slouched in, coming up close to the colonel's chair. His clothes were in tatters, his hat broken and his face showed a week's growth of beard. Even his walk was "tough."

"Does youse do recruiting?" said the patriot.

The colonel turned in his chair slightly and answered in the affirmative.

"Yer does, eh! This is straight!"

"What is your name and age?" asked the recruiting officer. He received an answer.

"Is your health good?"

"Well, jess as good as yours."

"You'll probably do," said the colonel suavely. Then he commented politely upon the service, saying he thought the new soldier would not find his duties unpleasant, and directing him to go to the doctor and be examined.

As the conversation lagged, the colonel said:

"Can you fight?" This roused the tough citizen in a way he could not resist. He edged up to the chair, shoved his doubled fist very close to Wilson's nose, and shouted, with an emphasis unprintable:

"I can lick you."

Col. "Billy" used to tell this story with great gusto. The new recruit proved one of the best soldiers in the regiment, which, on account of its tough personnel, was placed on a sand island off the coast of Florida, where, when the southerners attacked it, they were driven back in fine style.

It was related of Col. "Billy" that when, with flying colors, the regiment marched down Broadway en route south, he marched some distance in advance of his men. He was asked why and replied:

"I'm 'fraid some of the rascals will pick my pockets."

How Do You Walk?

As soon as a man comes into my shop and takes off his shoes, writes a St. Louis shoemaker, I can tell whether he is a good walker, and it is astonishing to find how few men know the proper way to step out. If the shoe is worn down at the heel, not on the side, but straight back, and the leather of the sole shows signs of weakness at the ball of the foot, a little greater on the inside just below the base of the great toe, I know that the wearer is a good walker. If, however, the heel is turned on one side, or is worn evenly throughout, and the sole is worn most near the toe, I know that I have to deal with a poor pedestrian. The reason of difference in position of the worn spots lies in the fact that the poor walker walks from his knee and the good one from his hip. Watch the passer-by on the street and you will at once see the difference. Nine men out of ten will bend the knee very considerably in walking, stepping straight out with both hips on the same line, and the toe will be the first to strike the ground. The tenth man will bend his knee very little, just enough to clear the ground, and will swing the leg from the hip, very much as the arm is swung from the shoulder, and not from the elbow. By so doing he calls upon the muscles, which are strongest, to bear the strain, and increases the length of his stride four or six inches. The heel touches the ground first and not the toe. A slight spring is given from the ball of the foot on making another stride. Men who walk in this fashion cover the ground 30 per cent faster with the same exertion than those who walk from the knee. In pugilism the old rule is to strike from the shoulder and not from the elbow. In pedestrianism it is to walk from the hip and not from the knee.

The W. C. T. U. and Chewing Gum.

The ladies of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union have done wisely in taking up the subject of the chewing of gum. There is no form of intemperance so generally prevalent in the young ladies' boarding-schools and on the various baseball grounds of this great country. Nor is there any habit of more stealthy and insidious growth. Once plunged into the slyly alluring vice of gum-chewing, there is no other resources for the victim than to buy more gum.

The ladies have gone into statistics and they throw out the statement that more than $6,000,000 per year is chewed up by the girls of New York alone. This ought to furnish a cud of reflection which should take the place of gum for a few moments, but the chances are that it won't.

The girls will listen to the figures, elevate their eyebrows a moment in mild surprise, and may make some faint endeavor to understand how that $6,000,000 could be better kept in circulation. But in the end they will relapse into saying nothing and chewing gum.

The W. C. T. U. is hovering about the outskirts of a great but most unpromising field of reform.—N. Y. World.

Experientia Docet.

"I've got $10,000; I want to build a house."

"You can't do it."

"Why not?"

"It takes $20,000 to build a house for $10,000."—Puck.

A PHOTOGRAPH WARDROBE.

Classic Drapery for Lady Sitters Who Pose as Beauties.

"What do you use that lace curtain for?" asked a visitor in a photograph gallery, says the Detroit Free Press.

"That isn't a curtain," said the photographer as he folded up the coarse length of cheap lace; "that's classic drapery for my lady sitters who pose as beauties. Look at this, and this."

He pointed to several pictures in the showcase, where girls who were gotten up to look like actresses or professional beauties had their photographs on exhibition.

"These girls haven't enough money to buy a piece of lace even as cheap as that. They are all employed at the very humblest and poorest paid work, but you would never guess it to look at their pictures. After Miss H., my assistant, has draped them in that lace they look as if they had just stepped out of a ballroom or a picture frame. Here is one coming now. Look at her."

She was a bright-faced, olive-skinned foreigner, dressed in a light-brown alpaca dress that was hideously unbecoming. Her black hair was strained away from her face in hard braids. She disappeared with Miss H. into a retiring-room, soon to emerge another person. The tight coat sleeves of her dress were pushed up to her elbow, and her high corsage so folded in as to show a round, slim throat.

The lace was belted at the waistline and puffed on the shoulder. The hard braids were let out and left a fluffy effect of crimped hair, transferring an ordinary girl into a very pretty one. The operator then took her in hand to pose for her picture.

"She will send that picture home to her friends in Norway or Sweden, and they will all see how improved she is," said the photographer with a pardonable glow of pride, "and it doesn't cost them a cent extra for all that fixing up. I have an old fur-lined circular of my wife's that I use as a background for a winter picture. It looks as if the girl has just unfastened it, and comes out splendidly, and it gives them an air of comfort and elegance combined. It's a great scheme and sells lots of pictures, but don't give it away. The girls might not like it."

A DISTRESSING HABIT.

The Inhaler of Tobacco Smoke Cannot Be Cured.

It is inhalation of tobacco smoke. Our readers may not agree that it is new, but in the sense that it has become of late years enormously prevalent and a peril that now first confronts society, it may be so considered. Ten years ago only about 400,000,000 cigarettes were manufactured in this country yearly; now the number reaches into the billions. The cigarette habit has extended and affected all ages; even the boys smoke more than ever, despite legislation.

It is not, however, the cigarette smoked in the ordinary fashion that does harm; it is in the inhalation of the smoke. This introduces quickly and delightfully a narcotic poison into the system, and awakens in the habitue a sensation as delightful as that produced by opium. The old cigarette-smoker would not exchange a few deep whiffs of his cheap cigarette for the finest Havana that could be bought with gold. It is an intoxication in which he revels and to which he has become a slave. He is a "cigarette fiend." He admits it and smiles over it for a time.

The seriousness of the cigarette to inhalation lies not alone in the fact that it involves a steady absorption of poison, but in the utter hopelessness of the habit, and the entire inability of the indulger to give it up. Once a cigarette inhaler, always one. In this respect it resembles with painful similarity the opium habit, to which it has many points of resemblance. One may stop the use of the pipe or cigar, or the use of tea or beer or whisky, but the morphine and tobacco inhalation habit, if well established, are practically incurable. The patient may stop for months or even years, but he invariably returns to his old love. Such is the experience of the writer, corroborated by the testimony of other physicians.

Tobacco smoke contains aqueous vapor, carbon soot, nicotine, traces of certain organic acids and of such hydrocarbons as creosote, and of products of the aniline series, such as pyroline. It is the nicotine, however, which probably does the harm.—Medical Record.

The Favor He Did Him.

Judge Gordon, now of the Pennsylvania Supreme court, was once approached by a young barrister with whom he had enjoyed friendly personal relations, says the Philadelphia Record. The young man wanted a favor in the license court, over which Judge Gordon then presided. "Judge," began the young lawyer, "I have been a good friend of yours." "Yes," answered the judge, with a look of surprise in his eyes. "I went into the convention for you," the young man continued. "Yes, I know that," again answered the judge, "and I shall be happy to do anything I can for you." "I would like a favor; I have a friend for whom I would like to get a license." "Stop!" exclaimed Judge Gordon sternly. "I will do you a favor by not sending you to jail. Good day." The young lawyer has not yet recovered from the shock.

Opening Up Africa.

Dr. Peters reports that he has found a garden spot in East Africa, "delightful in temperature, healthy and fertile." What is more to the point he says that war is a thing of the past and he can maintain order with forty soldiers. Africa is being opened up to settlement at a rate that seems to be slow, yet is much greater than that which attended the early settlement of this country. It seems quite probable that within the next half century East Africa will become one of the most attractive of countries to enterprising emigrants from Europe.

Two states have a population less than the new territory of Oklahoma—Nevada and Wyoming.

A Complete Reference Library

AT ABOUT 2 CTS. A DAY.

REVISED ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA

20 Large Octavo Volumes, 7,000 Pages, 8,000,000 Words, and 97 Maps Printed in Colors, Bound in Jute Manilla,

AND THE WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS FOR ONE YEAR

ALL FOR $7.50!

This is the GREATEST OFFER ever made by any Newspaper. The Revised Encyclopædia Britannica is a Dictionary of Art, Science and Literature to which is added descriptions of American Cities with a History of their Origin and Growth, together with Accurate Information of their Situation, Population, Resources, etc., etc,

The Best, Cheapest, Completest and Latest Revised Encyclopædia and the Greatest Newspaper,

THE WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS FOR ONE YEAR FOR $7.50 !

AND WE PAY THE FREIGHT.

Address WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS, St. Paul, Minn.

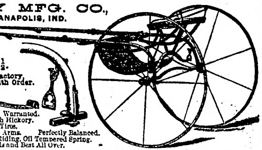
PARRY MFG. CO.,
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.



No. 7½.
Price, $18.00 at Factory, Cash with Order.

Strictly First-Class. Warranted.
All Second Growth Hickory.
Steel Axles and Tires.
Low Bent Seat Arms. Perfectly Balanced.
Long, Easy Riding, Oil Tempered Spring.
Best Wheels and Best All Over.

IF YOU CAN'T FIND THEM FOR SALE BY YOUR MERCHANTS, WRITE US

WE are making a specialty this season of what we call our PARAGON HARNESS. Made of the FINEST STOCK and the very BEST WORKMANSHIP. Such a harness cannot be bought for less than $25. at retail. But we are willing, in order to introduce it, to SELL ONE SET ONLY to one person as a sample for * $16.50.

$25.00 HARNESS FOR $16.50

IN GENUINE RUBBER $18.50.

DESCRIPTION OF HARNESS.

A fine Buggy Harness stitched twelve stitches to the inch, except traces which are stitched ten. Is made to represent a $50 harness. It has a 3 or 3 1-2 hand laced, leather pad saddle, with covered seat and jockeys; is made from fine stock. Bridle is of usual dimensions, has fine blinds, nice leather front and beautiful rosettes with glass centers, nice nickel bit. Check-rein, either overdraw with nose piece, or side check. Nice russet or black reins. The breast-collar, neck-strap, breeching and girt folds are made either of patent enamel or plain harness breeching leather as preferred and the layers on the same are cut wide and straight, and being stitched so very fine and nicely creased, give to the harness a costly custom-made appearance. The hip and back straps are doubled and stitched, nicely creased and finished throughout. Boxloops of beautiful design as on custom-made work. Trimmings either Davis Rubber, Nickel Wire or Brass Wire, or a Fancy style. We refer you to the publishers of this paper as to our responsibility. Remit by Express or Money Order. Money refunded if goods are not satisfactory.

BOSTON HARNESS CO.
Concord Junction, Mas

Red Lake Falls
Iron Works,

P. & J. MEEHAN, Proprietors.
J. Z PERRON, Manager.

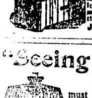
SAW AND GRIST MILL
MACHINERY MADE AND REPAIRED.

Repairing Thresher Engines
AND BOILERS AND
AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS

Circular Saws Hammered. Satisfaction Guaranteed, Correspondenc solicited.

BRING IN YOUR WORK

Scrap Brass and Copper Bought.



PERFECTION IN BUTTER MAKING.

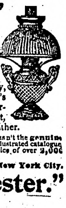
The O. K. OUTFIT EXCELS THEM ALL.

THE O.K. CREAMERY

Has the largest cooling surface; takes less cooling material; less labor, and gives Best Results. All cream raised between milkings. Skimming Glass whole depth of can, showing condition of milk without touching Creamery. Send for O. K. Catalogue.
JOHN S. CARTER, Sole Manf'r, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

"Seeing is Believing."

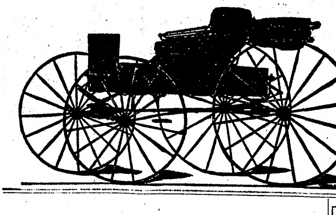
And a good lamp must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.



Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer hasn't the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue and we will send you a lamp safely by express—your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.

ROCHESTER LAMP CO., 42 Park Place, New York City.

"The Rochester."



WARRANTED WAGONS & BUGGIES

MANUFACTURED BY

EASY WAGON GEAR CO.

DETROIT, MICH.

If you wish the easiest riding, most durable and attractive Wagon or Buggy made, ask your Dealer to show you these goods. A written warranty furnished with every one. Take no other. You may as well have the BEST. It costs no more than an inferior article.

CATALOGUE SENT IF REQUESTED.

We Would Like to Call the Attention of

Capitalists

Manufacturers and Others Desiring a Place for

INVESTMENT

To the

Superior Advantages of

RED LAKE FALLS

Its Many WaterPowers and other natural advantages. It is only a question of a few years until this will be one of the leading cities of Minnesota. Investment in real estate or water privileges are sure to secure to the investors handsome returns.

WE RE

In the Cnter of Vast

Farming District.

Yearly consuming large amounts of imported products of manufactures. This vast tract of land is watered by the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers. Within the limits of the city are

12 DISTINCT WATER POWERS.

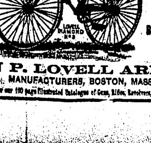
The only natural water powers on these streams. There are fine openings for paper and pulp mills, woolen and other factories. Parties outside desiring any information concerning property, address

---

LOVELL DIAMOND CYCLES.

STRICTLY HIGH GRADE.

No. 1, Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 2, Cushion Tires, $95.00
No. 3, Ladies' Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 3 C, Ladies' Cushion Tires, $95.00
No. 4, Convertible Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 4, C, " Cushion Tires, $95.00



OUR Cushion Tires ARE Warranted
ALL PARTS Interchangeable.

$85.00

No better machine made at any price.

Bicycle Catalogue Free.

$85.00

JOHN P. LOVELL ARMS CO.,
MANUFACTURERS, BOSTON, MASS.

Send six cents in stamps for our 100 page Illustrated Catalogue of Guns, Rifles, Revolvers, Sporting Goods of all kinds, etc.

ANDERSON'S SHORTHAND TYPEWRITER
Prints a Word at One Stroke.

THIS is the machine that is used in the Office, Court-room, and for reporting lectures and sermons.

While its speed is greater than any other known method, it is so simple that any intelligent person can gain a speed of 100 or more words per minute, in five or six weeks, without the aid of an instructor. Circulars and testimonials sent to all who mention this paper.

E. T. PIERCE, FAYETTE, OHIO,
Sole Agent for U. S. and Canada.

THE NEW WEBSTER

JUST PUBLISHED—ENTIRELY NEW.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

A GRAND INVESTMENT
for the Family, the School, or the Library.

Revision has been in progress for over 10 Years. More than 100 editorial laborers employed. $300,000 expended before first copy was printed. Critical examination invited. Get the Best. Sold by all Booksellers. Illustrated pamphlet free.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Publishers,
Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

RALPH & BOURDON,

Proprietors of the

CITY
DRAY
LINE.

WOOD & COAL.

Anything in our line done Promptly and at very Reasonable Rates.

GIVE US A CALL

INDIANA RANGE CO.

MANUFACTURERS OF WROUGHT STEEL RANGES

Guaranteed to be the most economical, most durable and most perfect Range on the market. Suitable for hard or soft coal, or wood.

Send for catalogue to

INDIANA RANGE CO.
EVANSVILLE, IND.

PASTOR KOENIG'S NERVE TONIC

Sleeplessness Cured.

I am glad to testify that I used Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic with the best success for sleeplessness, and believe that it is really a great relief for suffering humanity.

E. FRANK, Pastor,
St. Severin, Keylerton P. O., Pa.

Does What It Purports to Do.

PIKETON, Ohio, March 2, 1891.

I went with my brother to see the Rev. Koenig and he gave the Nerve Tonic to him—the first I ever heard of it—and it cured him. Since then I keep Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic on hand in my store and have sold it with good satisfaction, and believe if directions are followed it will do what is recommended.

JOHN W. HALEY.

FREE—A Valuable Book on Nervous Diseases sent free to any address, and poor patients can also obtain this medicine free of charge.

This remedy has been prepared by the Reverend Pastor Koenig, of Fort Wayne, Ind., since 1876, and is now prepared under his direction by the

KOENIG MED. CO., Chicago, Ill.

Sold by Druggists at $1 per Bottle. 6 for $5. Large Size, $1.75. 6 Bottles for $9.

The Police Gazette

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensations, and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, barber or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends whereever it goes. Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00. Send Five Cents for sample copy.

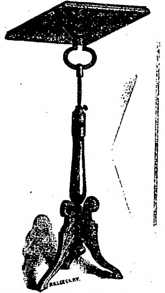
RICHARD K. FOX,
Franklin Square, New York City

Good Looks.

Good looks are more than skin deep, depending upon a heathy condition of all the vital organs. If the Liver be inactive you have a Bilious Look, if your stomach be disordered you have a Dyspeptic Look and if your Kidneys be affected you have a Pinched Look. Secure good health and you will have good Looks. Electric Bitters is the great alterative and Tonic and acts directly on these vital organs. Cures Pimples, Blotches, Boils and gives a good complexion. Sold at W. A. Schreiter's Drugstore, 50c per bottles,

---

Adjustable Extension Stand.



KELLER CO. NY.

Uses: Book Stand, Music Stand, Atlas Stand, Album Stand, Bible Stand, Flower Stand, also Lamp, Lecture, Parlor, Library, Office, Dictionary and Checker Stand and Easel. Hard wood, rubbed finish, height 34 inches. Height extended, 50 inches. Weight 12 lbs.; size of top 14 x 18; shipped K. D. Price, $5. KEELER & CO., Furniture Man'f'rs, 81-91 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

ADAM SCHMITZ

DEALER IN

Horse Furnishing Goods,

5/A HORSE BLANKETS
5/A HORSE BLANKETS

EVERYBODY WANTS ONE.

Two or three dollars for a 5/A Horse Blanket will save double its cost. Your horse will eat less to keep warm and be worth fifty dollars more.

LIGHT AND HEAVY HARNESS, Whips, Combs, Brushes, Trunks, Valises.

The celebrated STANDARD HORSE AND CATTLE FOOD. Every stock owner should test its merits. For sale by ADAM SCHMITZ.

Broadway Red Lake Falls

Librarian
Minnesota
Historical Soc

RED LAKE FALLS NEWS.

JAS. MEEHAN JR. } P. MEEHAN } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF CITY

Vol. VIII No. 51. RED LAKE FALLS, POLK COUNTY, MINNESOTA, DECEMBER 17, 1891. TERMS, $1.50 PER YEAR

CHRISTMAS - IS - COMING!

AND AS USUAL SANTA CLAUS IS MAKING HIS HEADQUARTERS AT

The Drug and Jewelry Store,

Where can be found the finest assortment of

Toys and Holiday Goods, ALBUMS TOILET CASES, WORK BOXES, DOLLS, CUPS AND SAUCERS, ROCKING HORSES, ETC, ETC. Something Nice and Cheap

Remember, we have the goods. Call and see us at the old stand.

W. J. Flack, Proprietor; Miss Mattie Gervais, Assistant.

☞P. S.—Also Watches, Jewelry and Musical Goods in Large Variety.

Joseph Smith & Co.

HAVE, AS USUAL, A COMPLETE Stock of General Merchandise, Including a Fine Assortment of Goods Suitable For Holiday Gifts.

A large stock of Ladies Winter Dress Goods, Cloaks, etc. and general furnishing goods.

A Large Stock of Gents Furnishings. Call and Examine Stock.

Frank E. Hunt,

DEALER IN

GENERAL : HARDWARE.

P & J MEEHAN,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. J. HOWE & CO)

Manufacturers and Dealers in

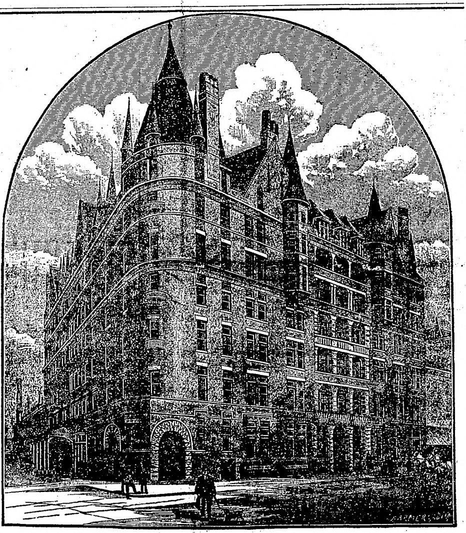
LUMBER,

LATH,

SHINGLES

Sash, Doors, Moldings, Building Paper,

Yards and Office on Main St.



The Manitoba Hotel, Winnipeg.

A Revolution in Hotel Life in Canada.

On December 31st the Northern Pacific railraod open at Winnipeg their new hotel The Manitoba. This structure which is unique in design and complete in all the arrangements that go to make a first class hotel and a comfortable home for travelers, is located in the centre of the bussiness portion of the city at the corner of Main and Water streets, and is by far the finest hotel and railway station in Canada.

The Manitoba will be conducted on the American plan. The fact that it has been placed under the management of Mr. W. J. Gunning for years steward of the Minnesota club of St. Paul, gives assurance that the table and services will be perfect in every respect.

The building contains in the basement and on the first floor all the necessary adjuncts of a first class hotel such as the rotunda, reception rooms, barber shop, laundry, toilet rooms, turkish baths, bar, billiard rooms, etc.

On the second floor are beautiful parlors and dining rooms, all finished in California red wood. The main dining room which extends through two floors is magnificent in size, and decorations. Private dining rooms adjoin which are unsurpassed in their furnishings.

The private parlors and bed rooms are 205 in number, many of them with bath rooms in addition. The furniture throughout is in keeping with the fine general appearance of the building.

The sanitary arrangements are perfect. A complete steam heating and electric plant, situated in a separated building, will supply the house with warmth and light.

In the first floor of the hotel are ticket offices, waiting rooms, etc. of the Northern Pacific railroad, affording easy facilities for travelers taking this line south, east or west. Trains make their arrival and departure from a large iron shed which is adjacent to an extension of the hotel containing baggage rooms and express offices.

It Should Be in Every House.

J. B. Wilson, 371 clay St, Sharburg, Pa., says he willnot be without Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds that it cured his wife who was threatened with Pneumonia after an attack of "LaGrippe" when various other remedios and several physicans had done her ho good. Robert Barber, of Cooksport, Pa., claims Dr. King's New Discoveru has done him more good than good than anything he ever used for Lung Trouble. Nothing like it, Try it. Free Trial Bottles at W. A. Schreiter's Drug Store. Large bottles, 50c. and $1.00.

* * *

Mat Skala's place on Broadway stil retains its popularity, and not without reason—Mat has dexterity and tact. A full stock of wines, liquors and cigars. When in need of liquors for medicinal purposes.

Electric Bitters.

This remedy is becoming so well known and so popular as to need no special mention. All who have used Electric Bitters sing the same song of praise.—A purer medcine does not exist and it is guaranteed to do all that is claimed. Electric Bitters will cure all diseoses of the Liver and Kidneys, will remove Pimples, Boils, Salt Rheum and other affections caused caused by impure blood.—Will drive Malaria from the system and as well as cure all Malarial fevers.—For cure of headache, constipation and Indigestion try Electric Bitters—Entire satisfaction guaranteed, or money refunded.—Price 50c. and $1.00 per bottleat W. A. Schreiters Drug Store.

* * *

Make a50c purchase at the Drug and Jewelry Store and get a nice present free,

Flack the Jeweler.

A Sad Mistake.

Is to have a stable of fine horses and have the distemper start among them with nothing to prevent its spreading. Heed the warning, and check it in the first stages of the disease by using Metzger's Pink Eye and Distemper Cure, as it has never been known to fail. Cures horses of old chronic coughs, colds, chills, epizootic, and all throat, lung Bronchial and nasal troubles. Especially good in hay fever or heaves. Price $1 per bottle or 6 for $5. For sale by W. A. Schreiter

* * *

Bucklin's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for cuts bruises, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores etter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25 cents per bottle. For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

A Fact

WORTH KNOWING.

AT

Wells'
Confectionery
Stand.

On Main st
You can secure rare bargains in Toys and Books as I am closing out My present stock

AT COST

To make room for

Christmas Goods

◆

Don't Forget

That I carry a fine line of Fancy Groceries, Fresh

Maple Syrup, Fine Jellies, Canned Pine-Apples, All kinds of Canned Goods.

Potted Hams, Canned Beef, Boston Baked Beans, Etc.

CIGARS

The Finest and Favorite Brands.

CANDY

Fresh, the Finest Quality.

(I supply this couple with sweets.)

Don't forget to call at

C. B. WELLS.

Red Lake Falls News

TERMS, $1.50 PER YEAR.

P. & JAS. MEEHAN, PROPRIETORS.

MINNESOTA NOTES.

Gustav Hallgren, of Red Wing, received fatal injuries in a runaway Saturday.

The Preston Times writes up 27 of the business man of that place in rhyme.

At Albert Lea the Orthodox church and the Universalist unite in union meetings.

Diphtheria has so subsided at Buffalo that the public schools have been re-opened.

The Austin public schools are over crowded. More teachers will be required next year.

W. J. Evans has tendered his resignation as secretary of the Winona board of trade.

The new packing house at Winona has commenced operations. It is owned by O. Cassidy.

The Fairmont News complains that there is more drunkenness in that place than ever before.

The Albert Lea science association now has about 60 members. A banquet will be held Dec. 16.

Charles V. Peasley, of Fairbault, held for shooting J. W. Colburn, is at large under $4,000 bonds.

The Methodists at Litchfield have refitted the interior of their church and made other improvements.

An athletic club has been organized at Winona and Charles Moth, the wrestler, engaged as instructor.

Rev. L. V. Nash, of Scotia, Neb., has been called to preside over the Presbyterian church at Austin.

J. Whitney, charged with being an accessory in the murder of Shields at Little Falls, has been discharged.

Andrew C. Ellestad, an aged farmer living two miles from Mabel, committed suicide by poisoning himself.

William Kahler, an old resident of Northfield, has purchased the Hotel Arlington at Fairbault and taken possession.

Rev. J. T. Hill, of Minneapolis, has been engaged to do the pastoral work of the Baptist church at Northfield for a few months.

Prof. Forde has assumed the management of the opera house at Mankato in place of C. H. George, who goes to California.

A dwelling house, two miles from Lake City, belonging to Hon. George C. Stout, of Lake City, was destroyed by fire. Loss $800.

Y. M. C. A. statistics at Winona for November show an average daily attendance at the rooms of 103, as against 90 last year.

The West Superior city council has ordered a survey for a foot passenger and wagon bridge across the St. Louis river at West Duluth.

A. H. Brayton, one of the oldest settlers of Houston county, died at the age of 61 years. He was president of the La Crescent alliance.

At Stillwater the prison board met and appointed Managers O'Brien, Dunn and Norrish a committee to purchase a new twine plant.

Fire has again broken out on the coal docks at Duluth. Already several hundred tons of coal have been destroyed on the Lehigh docks.

Washington county's share of the World's fair fund, $1,900, has been raised by a joint note, aided by a $100 subscription from Isaac Staples.

The Christian church at Rochester is holding revival meetings. Prof. Per, of Excelsior college, and Rey. Grant McNeil are among the speakers.

Michael Flaherty, the engineer who was badly squeezed under the engine at Duluth is rapidly improving and his physician thinks he will recover.

Prof. H. M. Luther, of the Shattuck school at Fairbault, is dead. He was recently from Connecticut, to which state his remains will be taken.

Louis Murray was arrested at Moorhead for stealing a dog skin coat. He was fined $20 and cost, in default of which he was committed to jail.

John Frazer, while at work in the woods about 45 miles from Fosston, had his feet and legs so badly frozen that it will be necessary to amputate both feet.

Prof. Manford J. Holmes, of the state normal school at Winona, has been elected a member of the American academy of political and social science, at Philadelphia.

The Bear's Ear boom company at Pine City has let a contract of driving 1,000 piling to A. Brackett. The boom extends from Pine City to Lake Pokegama, a distance of seven miles.

The Citizens National bank of Mankato attached the safe of J. Q. A. Marsh, and the sheriff took it and its contents to his office in the county jail. Marsh failed for $65,000 through endorsing his son's notes.

Alvina Schlie, the girl who was to marry John Miller, who was murdered at Nicollet, is in jail at St. Peter, in a cell next to that of the woman who murdered Miller. Miss Schlie is charged with having stolen the dead man's watch and pocketbook containing money.

E. Demuth, a fisherman and trapper, was drowned in Lake Pokegama, near Pine city. His sled, mittens and cap frozen on the ice led to his discovery. He had saved enough money to send for his family, and they are expected to arrive from Germany in a short time.

At the eleventh annual meeting of the Minnesota Valley medical association held at Mankato the following officers were elected for the ensuing year. Dr. W. H. Rowe, president; Dr. L. A. Elether, first vice president; Dr. E. P. Steel, secretary, and Dr. G. F. Merritt, treasurer.

The Siderial Messenger, a monthly review of astronomy published at Northfield, will complete this month its 10th volume. It will be improved and enlarged. Prof. W. W. Payne is editor. It is one of the leading astronomical journals of the United States. With the January number its name will be changed to the Siderial Messenger and Astra-Physical Journal.

THE VERY LATEST.

News From all Quarters to Suit the Taste of Everybody.

Events of the Week Carefully Condensed for Busy Readers.

The United States steamship Boston has arrived at Montevideo.

The Academy of Music, at New York is to be turned into a circus.

Austria has decided to take part officially in the World's Fair.

The water in Lake Ontario is said to be at the lowest level ever known.

Much suffering is reported in Indiana in consequence of the coal miners strike.

Austria has formally removed the prohibition on the importation of American pork.

Six thousand people saw the launching of the new United States cruiser No. 9 at Baltimore.

The Metropolitan Club of New York is said to have blackballed the Duke of Marlborough.

A couple named Block was arrested at Bay City, Mich., for passing counterfeit $20 gold certificates.

Milton George, of Chicago, was elected President of the Illinois Farmers' Alliance at Galesburg.

The convention of the International League of Press Clubs will be held at San Francisco Jan. 14.

Between 20 and 30 men were drowned in the Hudson river Friday by the capsizing of twelve barges.

The Atchison (Kan.) Champion, property of the late Col. John M. Martin, is offered for sale at $25,000.

The three big trees from California, to be exhibited at the Chicago fair, are nearly ready for shipment.

At Creston, Iowa, Joseph Man, his wife, and their two children were fatally burned by a gasoline explosion.

Robbers held up a train on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Road. The brigands secured about $1,000.

M. R. Cohen business manager of the Dodge City (Kan.) Cowboy Band, committed suicide at Milwaukee, Wis.

Mrs. Elizabeth Russell was arrested at Eau Claire, Wis., charged with poisoning Mrs. Bertha Erickson last April.

At Haverstraw, N. Y., the Clinton dynamite works were blown up Wednesday afternoon. Five men were killed.

Galesburg, Ill., Friday completed the raising of $50,000 with which to secure the location of a $100,000 sugar factory.

James A. Blake, of Michigan, disappeared from New York on the 24th ult., and no trace of him has since been found.

Beerbohm figures that France has already bought enough wheat to supply 60 per cent of its requirements for the year.

The stock of wheat in the Northwest is figured at 19,770,700 bushels, an increase since last Monday of 674,800 bushels.

It is said that the establishment of new Catholic dioceses in the Northwest will be recommended at the Vatican soon.

Robbers bound and gaged Mrs. Elizabeth Simmons, 70 years old, of Tranquility, Ohio, and stole $3,000 secreted in her house.

Geis & Co., lithographers at Buffalo, N. Y., are reported to be insolvent, with $175,000 nominal assets, and $275,000 liabilities.

Fire destroyed the Western Normal College at Shenandoah, Iowa, causing a loss of $50,000, on which there was $38,000 insurance.

The fire in the Lake Superior Iron company's hematite shaft at Ishpeming, Mich., has been extinguished. The mine will be rebuilt.

After Jan. 1 the Illinois Steel Company will begin the use of crude oil instead of coal in its puddling furnaces at Bay View, Wis.

Thomas Lowry, of Minnesota, is said to favor the nomination of Governor Merriman for Vice President on the Republican ticket.

Typhoid fever is epidemic at the Catholic orphanage, four miles west of Alliance, Ohio. Twenty-five cases were reported Wednesday.

The City Council of Dubuque, Iowa, contemplates operating its own electric light plant. One thousand dollars can be saved each month.

Three workmen were thawing out dynamite at Corunna, Mich., Tuesday when it exploded, killing one and seriously wounding the other.

A. P. Bradley, the suspended secretary of the railways and canals department, has been dismissed from the service of the Canadian Government.

Wesley Scott, of Scottsville, Ind., is the oldest postmaster in point of consecutive service in the United States, having been in office fifty-one years.

Gov. Francis is reported, on good authority, to have decided on a special session of the Missouri Legislature Jan. 15 with a view of redistricting the State.

The firm of J. Olkenheimer, of Dubuque, Iowa, will soon begin the manufacture of white enameled pottery by a process hitherto known only in Germany.

The Hon. Thomas Ryan, Minister to Mexico said, at Topeka, Kan., Friday that Mexico's exhibit at the Columbian Exposition would be extensive and creditable.

The grand jury at Darlington, Wis., found indictments Saturday against a large number of persons concerned in the lynching of Anton Sieboldt in October last.

Gen. John C. Black, of Chicago, is said to have written to a friend at Coldwater, Mich., stating that he is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Illinois.

The treasurer of Allen county, Ohio, brought suit at Lima, the Ohio residence of Senator Brice, against that gentleman for $15,000, being the delinquent taxes for last year.

The New York democratic committee adopted a resolution declaring that the best interests of the party demanded that Gov. Hill serve out the term for which he was elected.

John Howard Parnell, brother of the late Irish leader, sailed from New York Wednesday for Ireland. He has a plan whereby he hopes to unite the waring Irish factions.

Sir Alexander Campbell, lieutenant-governor of Ontario, was attacked by a stroke of paralysis last week and is now considered in a critical condition. He is 69 years of age.

J. M. Daniels, cashier of the Exchange Bank of West Bend, Iowa, and manager of a lumber company, is supposed to have left for Canada. His shortage is estimated at $10,000.

Congressman William J. Coombs of Brooklyn has ready a bill to be introduced in the house providing for the reduction of customs duties to a "tariff for revenue" basis.

The Belle Center Bank, in Logan County, Ohio, was robbed of $1,300. The safe had been blown open with dynamite. Only cash was taken; the securities were not disturbed.

It is now known that robbers who held up the 'Frisco night express in the outskirts of St. Louis secured about $100,000. The police are without any clew as to the identity of the robbers.

At Omaha, Neb., Tuesday it was decided to postpone the hearing of complaints against the Missouri Pacific for violating the interstate commerce law until the next term of court.

The wall of a building partly destroyed by fire recently was blown over upon fifteen workmen at St. Paul, Minn., Friday noon. Eight were killed, three were fatally and four severely hurt.

Commander Evans, of the United States cruiser Yorktown, was assured by the Intendente of Valparaiso, Chili, that he would insure the safety of all American seamen landing in Valparaiso.

Five boys, while playing on the beach at Southampton, England, found a bomb and not knowing what it was began playing with it, when it exploded killing one boy and fatally wounding the others.

A most terrible catastrophe has occurred in a colliery located at Nifka, in Russian Poland. Further intelligence is anxiously awaited and hopes are expressed that the loss of life, which the first dispatch places at 180, is overestimated.

Conrad Disstler of troop F. 8th cavalry, says Sitting Bull was murdered in cold blood by the Indian police sent to arrest him. Disstler, who was an eye-witness, says the chief made no attempt to resist arrest.

Col. Joseph S. Conrad, Twenty-first United States Infantry, died at Fort Randall while on a tour of inspection of his regiment. He was stationed at Fort Sidney, Neb., and caught cold which resulted in pneumonia.

Francisco Hernandez who robbed the paymaster of the 11th battalion of the Mexican army in Chihuahua, Mexico, and killed a policeman in escaping, has been captured at El Paso, Tex., and extradited. He will be shot.

The Cincinnati physicians agree that the influenza or "grip" of two years ago has returned to the city and nearly all report a considerable number of cases. Other cities in Ohio, notably Dayton and Columbus, have many cases.

It is rumored that the Russian government is about to issue a decree prohibiting the exportation of horses from Russia. This, it is thought, indicates that the Russian government is preparing for war in the near future.

It is reported that John C. Eno, ex-president of the Fifth National Bank of New York, who embezzled $2,000,000 and fled to Canada to escape arrest seven years ago is about to settle with his creditors and return to New York.

M. B. Curtis, the actor, has had a hearing on his application to the Supreme court of California for release on bail pending his trial for the murder of Officer Grant. The application was refused and Curtis must remain in jail.

The five mercantile appraisers of Philadelphia—Patton, Houseman, Crawford, Bell, and Hunter—indicted for fraud in office, were Thursday sentenced to dismissal from the office. The costs of the prosecution were assessed against them.

Mr. John F. Weichers, of the insolvent firm of Field, Lindley, Weichers & Co., asserts that Edward M. Field, head of the firm, robbed him of the $150,000 capital which he invested, and also of $50,000 government bonds belonging to Mrs. Weichers.

Timothy E. Byrnes, president of the Minnesota league of republican clubs and organizer of the National league of republican clubs, has been indicted for forgery. He is said to have raised $36,000 by the free use of other people's signatures.

The epidemic of influenza is increasing in severity at Paris and Berlin. Hundreds died in Paris of the disease last week, and in Berlin supplementary barracks have been erected at the hospitals to accommodate the large number of influenza patients.

Hundreds of women are engaged in rolling paper for cartridges at Spandau, Germany. This work has hitherto been done in prisons, but that source of supply is not sufficient. The gun casting apartment of the Royal Arsenal is working night and day.

The Des Moines, Iowa, cotton mill burned Saturday and is probably a total loss, as it was impossible to reach it by the fire department. The establishment cost about $100,000. It was the only cotton mill in Iowa and had been in operation about four years.

Dom Pedro, ex-Emperor of Brazil, died at Paris Friday. His last conscious words were an expression of his deep affection for Brazil and his regret that he could not go back there to die. His death will probably put an end forever to the attempts to revive the Brazilian empire.

Marshalltown (Iowa) capitalists who are interested in the Dakota and Minnesota Mining company, whose headquarters are in the Chamber of Commerce building, Chicago, are worried over a report that the concern is insolvent. Its treasurer, Charles Mylus, is in Europe.

United States armored cruiser No. 203 was launched at the yard of the Cramp Ship Building Company at Philadelphia Wednesday in the presence of 15,000 people and christened New York. When completed this vessel will be the most formidable that ever carried the United States flag.

The will granting the President power to decree the suspension of duties on cereals and all classes of animals coming from foreign countries so as to meet the emergency caused by the failure of crops in various States, was passed by the Mexican Chamber of Deputies without a dissenting voice.

The Boston Traveller says that the sworn report of Cashier Work, President Potter, and Director French upon the condition of the Maverick Bank Sept. 25 gives a list of over thirty names of men who had secured loans beyond the 10 per cent limit. Irving A. Evans owed the bank $157,000.

B. S. Barrett, a prominent Cleveland (Ohio) piano dealer, who disappeared more than a year ago, leaving behind him about $7,000 worth of forged promissory notes which he had used as collateral, and who was recently captured in West Virginia, was sentenced to six years in the penitentiary.

Dispatches from China announce that according to the latest estimates from 300 to 500 Christians, several native priests, a Mongolian prince and some unconverted natives were massacred. Many churches were pillaged and burned, especially in the towns of Tsientchang and Pingsuten.

The detective force of the police department and the detective force of the press of New York are each and all scurrying after an identification of the dead wretch who blew himself into pieces at Russell Sage's office Friday last. The police Sunday arrested one W. D. Southworth, who was seen at times with the dead man.

At a meeting of the citizens of Detroit and the larger cities of the State irrespective of politics, Saturday, it was decided to attempt to secure the Democratic National convention for Detroit. The Democratic State Central committee is organizing for the preliminary work, the Hon. Don M. Dickinson being the leader in the work.

The South Carolina House of Representatives has passed, by a vote of 49 to 34, a prohibition bill. The bill absolutely prohibits the sale of beer, liquors, wines, etc., in any portion of the State or the transportation of either by railroads, express companies, etc., under heavy penalties. It was passed after a bitter fight lasting two days. The law is said to be framed on that now in force in Iowa.

Bradstreet's figures on the available supply of wheat show that the total is but 17,000,000 bushels greater than it was a year ago at this time. That the accumulation should have been so small, in view of the unprecedented movement in the west and northwest, is a matter upon which the bulls are congratulating themselves. They consider that the fact goes to confirm their claim that in spite of our enormous crops the exports are going to take care of the surplus and leave us none too much for our own requirements in a crop year when opening conditions are of the most unfavorable character.

Russell Sage, the New York millionaire broker, escaped death as by a miracle Friday. The entire Empire building, in which was his office, was shaken to its very foundation by the explosion of a dynamite bomb hurled by a crank, who made a demand upon Mr. Sage for the immediate payment of $1,250,000, the ultimatum being, in case of refusal, the death of the millionaire, the crank himself and those employed in the office. Mr. Sage turned to walk away when the bomb was thrown; the explosion came with a force that was absolutely startling, completely wrecking the second floor of the building, throwing pedestrians in the street to the ground and startling people for blocks around. Those who were close at hand saw a man blown through one of the windows of Sage's office into Rector street. A few minutes later Mr. Sage himself, with blood streaming from his face and hands, was helped out and found not severely hurt. The man who threw the bomb, was blown to shreds. Several others were seriously injured. The dynamite crank is thought to be Hiram D. Wilson, aged 45, an escaped lunatic and a native of Glens Falls.

CRISP PLUCKS THE PLUM.

Deadlock on the Speakership Contest Finally Broken.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—After a long and bitter struggle, the like of which has not been known in congress for years, the Democrats have succeeded in nominating Charles F. Crisp for speaker. Many Democrats have acknowledged that the fight went far beyond the speakership. Mills, the defeated, represented the Cleveland idea of tariff reform, while every anti-Cleveland man has been for Crisp. Moderate tariff Democrats in Washington are jubilant over the result of the caucus.

Speaker, Charles F. Crisp, Georgia.

Clerk, James Kerr, Pennsylvania.

Sergeant-at-arms, S. S. Yoder, Ohio.

Doorkeeper, Charles A. Turner, New York.

Postmaster, Lycurgus G. Dalton, Indiana.

Not Necessary to hold an Inpuest

SEATTLE, Wash., Dec. 11.—The coroner and district attorney of King's county today finished investigating the landslide on the Northern Pacific. They found there is no necessity to held an inquest over the bodies of the men killed in the accident, because no charge of criminal neglect on the part of the company could be sustained. Four bodies have been recovered and further search is being made.

Change of Editors.

NEW YORK, Dec. 11.—William Dean Howells will retire from Harper's magazine on January 1 and take editorial control of the Cosmopolitan magazine, jointly with John Brisben Walker.

The preponderance of supply over demand has put the market on horses away down. The season is now beginning when horses will be practically nothing but expense for a few months. In consequence a great many equines are offered for sale at astonishingly low rates. To any one wanting to buy horses the market now offers a good thing, but the seller is correspondingly on the other side of the fence.

CAPITAL BREVITIES

Resume of Important Events at the National Capital.

What Is Being Done by the Executive and Other Departments.

Admiral Walker was ordered Friday to proceed at once to the South Atlantic station with the Chicago, Atlanta and Bennington, and assume command.

Sir Julian Pauncefote and representatives of the British West Indian colonies are said to be endeavoring to make a reciprocity treaty with the United States.

President Harrison has written heads of departments asking that a record of the efficiency of clerks be kept and that they be promoted according to their deserts as shown by the records.

The Postmaster General Tuesday issued an order directing that all promotions of clerks in the fifty postoffices now under the civil service law and rules be made only after a competitive examination.

Land patents to the number of 4,253 have been issued by the land office in four and a half days. This is the highest record ever made. An extra force of clerks is employed on 820 mineral patents recently approved.

The public debt statement, issued Tuesday afternoon, shows that the net decrease of the interest and non-interest bearing debt during the month of November was $2,570,139.59. The total cash in the treasury is $743,356,750.16.

The Chilian minister has notified the secretary of state that the government of Chili has canceled the commission of Don Emilio Puyo, Chilian consul general at San Francisco, and that his official relations with this government are terminated.

By the government treaty with Germany to remove the duty on American wheat, which was concluded some time ago, the duty is reduced on wheat and other cereals about 30 per cent, as it is also on pork. The terms of the treaty will be made public before the first of the year.

There has been considerable acrimony generated in New Mexico over the contest over the titles to the Las Vegas land grant. The original survey gave the grant 596,000 acres, and this amount was claimed by private parties. Secretary Noble has decided that the grant belonged to the city of Las Vegas and should be opened to settlement.

Acting Secretary Spaulding has informed an inquiring firm that the department holds that imported black plates dipped in this country for the purpose of making tin and terne plates are American plates. Black plates rolled from imported bars or billets should be similarly classified. There is no provision in law, he says, restricting the manufacturers to the use of American tin.

REPORTED INDIAN TROUBLES.

The officials of the Indian bureau have thus far received no information of an outbreak among the Apache Indians in Arizona. If the depredations reported have really been committed the Indian officials are inclined to the opinion that they are not the work of San Carlos Apaches but of a few renegades who escaped capture with Geronimo three years ago and who have since been in hiding in the mountains of south Arizona and northern Mexico.

WHY THEY FAIL TO PASS.

In his annual report to the secretary of the navy Commodore Ramsay, chief of the bureau of navigation, devotes much attention to the naval academy. He says that a large number of candidates for admission to the naval academy fail to pass the required mental examination. It is believed that this is chiefly due to want of proper instruction and of time for preparation. It is therefore recommended that the statutes be so amended that appointments to the academy shall be made one year in advance of the time of admission, as is now provided for appointments to the military academy.

ENGLAND CAUSES A HITCH.

English interests are causing a hitch in the negotiations for reciprocity with Costa Rica, as they tried to do in the negotiations with Brazil. If it were not for the pledging of customs duties for the payment of interest on $10,000,000 worth of bonds, mostly held in England, Costa Rica would have made a treaty under the reciprocity section of the McKinley bill some months ago. The agreement is now well under way and both governments are awaiting negotiations with the English bondholders before it is completed. Secretary Blaine and the Costa Rican minister here have agreed that the arrangement shall follow the lines of the treaty which was proposed in '85, but which was never ratified by the two governments.

VESSELS ORDERED TO MONTEVIDEO.

Secretary Tracy has issued an order detaching the Newark from the squadron of evolution and directing Admiral Walker to proceed at once with the Chicago, Atlanta and Bennington to the South Atlantic station and assume command. The order assigning Admiral Benham to the command of that station is revoked, and he will probably remain in the United States on waiting orders. The Newark will, it is expected, be placed in Admiral Gherardi's command as part of the North Atlantic squadron. Admiral Walker's command will comprise five vessels, his flagship the Chicago, the Atlanta, Bennington, Yantic and Essex. With headquarters at Montevideo he will have an effective fleet ready for immediate service in either the South Atlantic or South Pacific.

PRESIDENTIAL POSTOFFICES.

The annual report of the first assistant postmaster-general on the subject of salaries and allowances will show that the adjustment on presidential postmasters' salaries in effect July 1, 1891, resulted in 128 offices being assigned to the first class, 603 to the second class, and 2,245 to the third class, making a total of 2,984 presidential offices July 1, 1891. This was a net increase of twelve first class, fifty-two second class, and 188 third class offices, the aggregate amount of presidential salaries being $5,047,700, or an increase of $434,200, or 9.4 per cent, as compared with the same item for 1890. The gross receipts which accrued at presidential offices for the four quarters ended March 31, 1891, amounted to $50,305,057, being an increase of $4,675,696, or 10.7 per cent, as compared with the same item for the previous year. The aggregate expenditure for compensation to postmasters for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1891, amounted to $14,526,990.

UNCLE SAM'S MONEY.

E. H. Nebeker, treasurer of the United States, reports that the ordinary revenues of the government for the last fiscal year were $392,612,447, or $10,468,835 less than those of the year before. The net ordinary expenditures, exclusive of the amounts paid in premium on bonds purchased, were $355,372,684, an increase of $57,633,138. The surplus revenues were thus cut down from $105,344,4 6 to $37,239,762, which last summer was applied to the reduction of the public debt. The postal revenues amounted to $65,762,908 and the expenditures to $72,067,581, an increase of about $5,000,000 on both sides. On June 30, 1890, there stood charged to the treasurer on the books of the department a balance of $691,527,4 3, representing the excess of previous receipts over expenditures. To this was added the receipts of the year from all sources amounting to $766,821,3 5, which made an aggregate of $1,457,348,798 to be accounted for. The disbursements authorized by the warrants of the department, including those on account of the public debt, were $731,126,376. There was left $726,222,332, for which the treasurer was required to be able to produce cash or other assets.

The reduction effected during the year in the principal of the bonded debt and the circulating notes, which cannot be reissued, amounted to $116,510,273 and required an expenditure of $126,991,494, including the premiums on bonds purchased. This sum was made up by taking $80,751,731 from the reserve in the treasury in addition to the surplus revenues of the year. The consequent reduction in the annual interest charge was $4,322,092.

PENSIONS.

Secretary Noble in his annual report refers to the relief afforded by the act of June 27, 1890, to thousands of disabled veterans and their dependent relatives, who, through lapse of time, are not able to prove the origin of disability in the line of duty as required by prior enactments. It is shown that first payments have greatly decreased in amounts, that the allowances of original pensions will soon be made, that there will then be a great decline in the sum necessary to pay pensions and the lists will rapidly decline from death and other causes. There were 222,521 first payments made during the fiscal year, requiring $33,552,274.31, being less in amount by $69,792 than the 130,514 first payments of the previous year required. The average value of first payments in fiscal year of 1890 was $435.71, while the average value in 1891 of first payments in all claims was $130.23, and first payments of claims under the act of June 27, 1890, was only $71.28. The present issue of certificates is about 30,000 per month, and it is thought that the pension bureau will be able to carefully adjudicate 350,000 claims during the present year. The work at this rate will allow all lawful pension claims within the next thirty months, and, of course, all first payments will then have been disposed of. This alone will cause a drop of $30,000,000 in the appropriation, and the list will thence on constantly diminish by natural causes. It is predicted that the pensions will, when the highest point is reached, not exceed very greatly the present sum, and be subject to a great decrease immediately after. The estimate for 1893 is $144,956,000, as ascertained since the report was printed.

UNCLE SAM ON DECK.

AMERICAN SHIPS OF WAR WILL SHORTLY BE IN CHILI.

Formal orders have been issued directing Acting Rear-Admiral Walker to proceed at the earliest practicable moment with the Chicago, Atlanta and Bennington to Brazilian waters and assume command of the South Atlantic station. These vessels are now at Hampton Roads. The only cause for delay will be in getting a number of long-time service men to replace those on the Chicago, whose terms expire within the next few months. Telegrams were sent to the principal recruiting rendezvous to send all available recruits at once to that vessel.

The main purpose in sending these additional vessels to the South Atlantic is unquestionably on account of the Chili affair. The Brazilian troubles are of secondary importance, but offered a sufficiently convenient excuse for getting an additional naval force within easy reach of Chili. The squadron will rendezvous at Montevideo, Uruguay, the present headquarters of the South Atlantic station. This being the yellow fever period in Brazil, the fleet will steer as clear as possible from that coast. Rear-Admiral Walker's only stop in Brazil will be at Bahia unless some trouble should arise requiring his presence at Rio. From the former port he will go far out to sea and will not stop again until he reaches Montevideo. Upon his arrival there he will assume command of the station. His fleet will then comprise five vessels—the Chicago, Atlanta, Bennington, Yantic and Essex. Once at Montevideo, these vessels will be within easy reach of Chili and at the same time be on hand to look after interests in Brazil should any rupture occur.

It is not going too far to say that the administration is now pretty well convinced that a satisfactory answer will not be made by Chili to the demand for indemnity and that these vessels may soon be needed to join in a demonstration for bringing Chili to her proper senses.

The present movement in sending Admiral Walker's fleet to the South Atlantic is in a measure anticipatory of congressional action in the matter. Should it be decided to use moral persuasion in bringing about the desired end there is little doubt that Admiral Walker would be sent to Chilian waters and placed in command of all the forces that could be concentrated there.

My Grandmother's Waffle Iron.

The old waffle iron hangs under the stairs,
A simple arrangement of diamonds and squares,
And 'tis no small matter, the amount of batter
That iron has graduated onto a platter.
But 'tis something awful, as you sit with your jaw full,
To think what is lawful to put in a waffle.

Take skim milk so sour that the pigs scarce will eat it.
Take an egg that's so lazy you just have to beat it,
Take flour that's so heavy, with soda you raise it.
Add a spoonful of salt or else you won't praise it.
Now mix it all up with a stir and a clatter,
Then fill the greased iron; be careful, don't spatter!

There, there, I had almost forgotten the butter!
Here it is, duly melted, I hear its fierce sputter.
In that hot bed of coals not forgetting to turn it,
You must cleverly bake, taking care not to burn it.
Now, friends, is there not indeed something awful
In making and baking an old-fashioned waffle?

But the old waffle iron hangs under the stairs,
A simple arrangement of diamonds and squares,
And 'mid all the events which its history shares,
It never has once been sent out for repairs.
—Lucy Wade Herrick in the Homemaker.

THAT WICKED BOB.

In an elegantly-furnished room three girls were seated, busily examining and criticising sundry patterns of silk and other delicate fabrics that lay upon the table.

"I think I shall decide upon this blue crepe," the fairest girl remarked, holding the pale-colored material against her chin. "It suits me, does it not, Margery?"

"Beautifully!" Margery responded; then, with a half sigh and a half laugh, she added, "How nice for you to have so many pretty new dresses; I begin to envy you, Violet!"

"Your turn will come," Violet said, leaning indolently back in her chair; you will marry next, Margery, and unless I am much mistaken the happy man is at this very moment beneath our roof."

Margery reddened, and gave a proud little toss of her head, nor was her confusion lessened by the laughter of her companions.

"You are so absurd, Violet!" she remarked, in a tone of reproof; "there is no one here whom I am likely to marry.

Violet drew herself suddenly erect, and gazed at her friend with a wise expression in her eyes.

"How about Colonel Hardwick? He is handsome, rich, and a hero, and since his arrival has shown a marked preference for your society. You are difficult to please, Margery, I know, but surely you can find no fault with the colonel?"

"No," Margery admitted, reluctantly; "except that he is a little conceited."

"Conceited!" Violet exclaimed, with profound indignation; "did you hear her, Effie? Colonel Hardwick conceited? Why he is one of the most modest and unaffected men I have ever known!"

"I only wish he would fall in love with me," Effie chimed in, with a pretty pout; "but no such luck! When you are near, no ones cares to look at me."

"It is a good thing Tom couldn't obtain leave of absence, then," Margery observed, dryly.

Effie shrugged her shoulders, and a smile dimpled over her face.

"Oh, Tom! I don't count him," she answered. "He's a stupid fellow, and thinks there is no one like me in the world."

"An opinion others seem to share," Violet said, in a soft whisper. "Poor Tom!"

"I'm sure you need not pity him," Effie began; but before she could say another word the door was flung noisily open, and a handsome youth of about fifteen rushed into the room.

"I say, girls—such a lark!" he exclaimed, flinging himself on a chair, and looking maliciously from one to the other. "There's a chance for you to win a pair of gloves if you only make haste."

"What an awkward boy you are," Margery said, jerking her dress from under his feet; "your dirty boots have made marks all over my skirt."

"Never mind—I didn't mean it." Bob answered, calmly; "but why do you sit here when the sleeping beauty—or rather beast—and new gloves await you outside?"

"Speak plainly, Bob; tell us what you mean," Effie urged, laying a soft, coaxing hand on his shoulder; and Bob blushed like a school-girl as he answered:

"It's the colonel. He's been out riding, and I supposed over-tired himself. Anyhow, he's lying fast asleep on the sofa in the corridor, giving you girls a fine opportunity."

"Poor colonel!" Violet said, her voice full of sympathy. "He has not quite recovered from the effects of his wound."

Margery's face was averted, so it was difficult to guess whether or not she shared in the general compassion.

But presently Bob turned upon her, his eyes brimfull of mischief.

"I know you, Margery, are dying to win the gloves. Go, my dear girl, and rely upon our discretion to keep it dark."

Violet and Effie laughed; but Margery looked round with flashing eyes and her features quivering with suppressed passion.

"How dare you, Bob! You are a most illmannered, objectionable cub. You are not fit to be in any decent society. I should like to whip you."

Bob seemed staggered for a moment; then he rose up with much dignity, and stared scornfully at his sister.

"I daresay you would," he retorted. "Good gracious! what a temper you've got! I'm thankful the colonel did not see you."

"Hush!" Violet exclaimed, giving him a slight push toward the door. "You ought not speak like that to your sister; it is not kind of you. Go now, Bob, or I shall have to turn you out."

"I think you've turned me out as it is," Bob responded, sulkily. "I'll go, of course; but you need not drop down on a fellow so. I was only joking."

With a last fiery glance at Margery he strode from the rooms, banging the door after him. In the corridor he paused for an instant, a look of irresolution on his face.

"I'll pay Miss Margery out for this!" he muttered, his breast still heaving resentfully. "It would serve her right if I——"

He broke off sharply, smiled broadly to himself; then, with a gliding, catlike motion went down the corridor, disappearing in a moment round one of the many quaint turnings.

* * * * * * *

About fifteen minutes later, Colonel Hardwick, lying in a semi-somnolent state on a comfortable couch beneath one of the stained windows, was roused by the sound of a woman's silken skirt rustling close to him.

He lay perfectly still, not curious enough to open his eyes; he heard the steps approaching, and a faint perfume of heliotrope was wafted to his nostrils, then someone bent over him, and a soft, quick kiss was pressed on his brow.

It cost him an effort not to move; that kiss seemed to send an electric current through his veins, and his heart was strangely stirred. He waited, his eyes tight shut, and his breath coming regularly from his lips, until he felt he was safe; then, with great caution he lifted his eye-lids sufficiently to discern the slowly receding figure.

A girlish form, clad in a trailing dress of rich grey silk; the head was partly concealed by a white lace scarf, but Colonel Hardwick just caught a glimpse of a pair of bright blue eyes, and a few thick short curls of brown.

"Little witch!" he thought, smiling; then a passionate light sprang to his eyes, and he added: "Margery, my sweet darling!"

He dressed for dinner that night with unusual care, and before descending to the dining-room placed a small piece of heliotrope in his button-hole. His face, generally so grave wore a very tender expression, a tenderness which deepened when he found himself near Margery.

He noticed, with intense satisfaction, that she was dressed in grey, and amongst the cluster of roses at her breast was mingled a little heliotrope.

Presently Bob, who had been sitting rather quiet, nodded across the table at the colonel, with one of his most knowing smiles.

"By the way, colonel, I caught you napping this afternoon," he said, loud enough for all to hear. "It's a good thing the girls were busy elsewhere, or you might have had a fine lot of gloves to buy."

Colonel Hardwick laughed quietly.

"I think I have one pair to buy," he answered, and looked at Margery with so much meaning in his eyes that she blushed hotly, and felt uncomfortably confused without knowing why.

The next day, as Violet sat alone in her room, just before dinner, she was surprised to see Margery enter, looking curiously white, and bearing a pretty, hand-painted box in her hand.

"Can you understand it?" she exclaimed, her tones low and concentrated, and she flung the box on Violet's lap. "Someone has been playing me a trick, I should think."

Violet glanced at the beautiful white gloves and at the card slipped beneath them. A few words were pencilled upon it, that she read before answering.

"My dear, Colonel Hardweik sent you these, and he seems to think you won them yesterday while he slept," she said at last. "I cannot understand it any more than you do—there must be some mistake."

"A mistake!" Margery answered, blazing out with sudden passion. "It is an insult, and as long as I live I will never forgive him!"

"Hush! be reasonable, Margery," Violet went on, speaking very gently. "I have known Colonel Hardwick nearly all my life, and I know him to be both honorable and reverential toward ladies. Someone evidently kissed him yesterday, and being half-asleep he did not quite recognize the culprit."

"Then he had no right to presume that it was I!" Margery retorted, her anger deepening. "I will never—never speak to him again."

"Yes, you will. If you are wise, my dear Margery, you will give him back his gift, and tell him to discover the rightful owner, I am sure there is one."

"Do you think it could have been Effie?" Margery asked, cooling down a little.

Violet shook her head.

"No; she was with me until the dressing-bell rang, and when we passed through the corridor he was not there."

Margery remained silent, and the pallor returned to her face.

Once or twice Violet stole a look at her friend, and felt grieved to see her so sorrowful.

The girl was very quiet during dinner, and avoided Colonel Hardwick in so marked a manner, that he at last began to understand something was wrong; and he was not the only one at the table who felt uncomfortable.

"Will you be in the library in half-an-hour?" she whispered the first opportunity she had of speaking to him unheard, "I have something to say to you—alone."

He bowed, hiding well his surprise; something in her voice and expression had plainly shown him no tender motive had prompted her words.

In growing disquiet he waited with patience in the library, until the time appointed for the meeting.

At last she walked softly into the room, and he saw that she carried his gift in her hand.

With a dim presentment of coming trouble, he allowed her to break the silence.

"You sent me these?" she said, placing the gloves on the table. "Why did you?"

He looked at her gravely.

"You won them," he answered as quietly. "When I slept yesterday, did you not kiss me?"

"Certainly not! You know I did not," Margery exclaimed, the pallor on her cheeks giving place to a scorching flush; then she trembled, and bowing her head, burst into tears. "How could you believe that? how could you?"

He was at her side in a moment, and had drawn her quivering form in his arms.

"My darling! My sweet Margery! do not cry," he said, vainly trying to soothe her. "If I have made a mistake, I beg your pardon, although I have been living in a fool's paradise since yesterday, believing you cared for me a little."

Margery's sobs grew less bitter, and her head drooped until it touched his breast.

"What made you think it was me?" she asked.

"You had on the grey silk I saw you in at dinner last night; and as you bent over me I smelt the heliotrope you were wearing. Besides, I recognized your eyes—there are none so blue and beautiful in the house."

For an instant Margery remained lost in thought, then she raised her head, a light of understanding on her face.

"It must have been Bob, that horrid Bob;" she cried. "He is my height, and his eyes are like mine. Now I know why my dress was so crumpled when I went to put it on, and why my lace wrap was torn!"

She broke off, and becoming suddenly aware that Colonel Hardwick's arms were still enfolding her, made an effort to release herself. But he only held her closer.

"I will not let you go until you have said that you have forgiven me. I will not then let you go until you have said that you love me!" he whispered, passionately. "My own dear love, that wicked Bob shall not part us; we will give his jest a happy ending."

Margery gazed at him shyly; then her eyes fell before the ardor she saw in his. But he was waiting, and her heart pleaded strongly for him; so that at last, with a sigh and a smile, she softly murmured—

"I do love you, and it grieved me very much to think you had formed such a bad opinion of me. Bob deserves to be punished."

"I thought nothing of you but what was good and tender," he replied, and, lifting her face, he pressed his lips to hers. "My dearest!"

When they returned, later, to the drawing-room, two pairs of eyes regarded them with curiosity.

Margery nodded gaily across at Violet: but that astute young lady read deeper into her heart and the colonel's and she knew her unspoken wishes had come to pass.

Bob, who had not recovered from his recent discomfiture, felt a vague longing to turn and fly when Colonel Hardwick and Margery approached him.

"You are a clever young gentleman," the colonel remarked, pleasantly. "But I should advise you not to personate your sister again; it might lead you, and her, into trouble."

"I only did it for a lark," Bob answered, hanging his head. "She made me angry, and I wanted to revenge myself."

"Well, as it happened, you did not do much harm, so I suppose we must forgive you."

"We!" Bob muttered, under his breath, as the two passed on. "Now I see why he pretended to be asleep, and why Margery made such a fuss. They ought to thank me for bringing matters to a crisis, instead of talking about forgiveness. The gratitude of of some people is extraordinary!"

With which reflection he turned on his heel, crossing over to where Effie sat, sought balm for his wounded feelings in her bright society. Deep down in his heart, however, there lurked a feeling of relief that his joke had ended so pleasantly.

SEX IN DIAMONDS.

Queer and Interesting Facts Told by Jewelers About Precious Stones.

In the big show window of a jewelry store rested last week, says the Jewelers' Review, a small tray that gathered a crowd of curious spectators to the window. Every time the sunlight played upon the plate glass the tray coruscated with prismatic hues of dazzling brilliancy.

The tray is well known to the trade. It is designed to display remarkable variations of the color of the large African mine diamonds, and contains examples of all the colors known. It possesses great interest for novices in gems, and the jeweler is called upon half a dozen times a day to explain the beauties of the specimens.

The jeweler picked out one sparkler with a pair of diamond tweezers and held it forward in the show window.

"This is a Brazilian gem," he said, "like which there is only one other in the world, in Paris, and the French one is not so pure or so large as this. This is what is called a black diamond, and is valued at $2,500. It weighs a trifle less than four carats. Its beauty lies in the fact that it changes its color in different lights.

"In this strong sunlight you see it is almost black, but it gives forth a prismatic radiance greater than that emitted by the best of the black gems. In gaslight, you observe, the black hue becomes a rich golden brown, and the play of colors is changed, too.

"Diamonds of this sort are regarded by the superstitious miners as 'gold stones,' that is, gems possessing a power of imparting good luck to the owner in the search for hidden gold. This stone was secured in Paris, whither it was brought in rough for cutting by a Rio Janeiro merchant.

"Here," continued the jeweler, "is another curiosity." He picked up a three-carat white stone with the tweezers. "It is a specimen that will prove to you that there is a difference of sex in the gems. This is what is called the female, a multiplying diamond."

He held the gem under a strong magnifying-glass and pointed to four or five smaller diamonds clustered about one of the facets at the edge of the table of the stone. "The male gem," the jeweler said, "is sharp-pointed and never gathers these embryo gems. There is a fine specimen alongside the pink stone. It surprises most people who see those specimens to be told that they are of different sex as well as colors, but such is the fact."

Doctor—"You should not drink so much Bourbon; it will do you no permanent good. You should drink milk, for it contains all the elements of blood." Patient—"But I'm not bloodthirsty."—Pharmaceutical Era.

THE LEPROUS DUKE OF PORTLAND.

A Terrible Recital of the Last Days of a Noted Lord.

What a colony there must be in that nether world of dead French poets! Le Comte de Villiers de l'Isle Adam joined this colony not long ago; and I have been reading here at Aix that one book of his which the best French critics have pronounced "a collection of masterpieces," the "Contes Cruels." Well may they be called the "Cruel Tales," for there is scarcely one of them that is not a tragedy in little; or, worse yet, a bitter farce, that mocks at the tragedy that underlies it. One of these terrible tales is founded on the cruel history of the late Duke of Portland, who died, as every one knows, of leprosy.

When I first went to London the high garden walls behind which the Duke dwelt in his horrible solitude were pointed out to me; and it used to seem to me whenever I went by the place that the day turned cold. M. de l'Isle Adam adds to the story, which the world knows well, the thrilling note of romantic love. According to him the Duke's leprosy was first made known in answer to a summons from the Queen. She had heard of his return from foreign travel and his seclusion, and she sent for him to come to court. When his reply arrived a young girl was reading to her Majesty and the dispatch was put into her hands to open and read. She broke the seal, unfolded the letter and glanced at it with her eyes blue and clear as the summer heavens. Then suddenly she shut these eyes, bright with youth and hope, and blindly and without one word reached out the letter toward her royal mistress.

The Queen took it and read it. It was the announcement of Duke Richard's leprosy as the reason for his not obeying the royal summons, and the girl who had opened it was Helena, his betrothed wife. The Queen's hand trembled as she read and then held the papers in the flame of a candle until they were consumed. "My Lords," she said to some of his nobles who had witnessed this scene—"my Lords, you will never see again our beloved Duke of Portland. He will never again sit among you in Parliament. We shall grant him a dispensation from his duties, and we will keep his secret. Do not seek to see or to speak with him."

Then she sent the messenger, who waited, to report to the Duke what he had heard, and after this she rose to go away by herself into her innermost chamber, but she turned to dismiss her young reader, and lo! the girl lay as one dead—she had fainted. One does not know what letters went and came between the Duke and Helena. But at last, one evening of autumn, there came to the girl a note written by one of the Duke's secretaries, in which were only two words: "This evening."

It was toward midnight when Helena entered the gates whence the world had for a long time been excluded. She came to a place where a man lay upon the turf wrapped in a mantle and with a mask over his face. She threw herself on her knees beside him, sobbing bitterly. He strove to lift his head, but it sank back again helplessly. "Adieu," he cried, "adieu, Helena! You are free henceforth." "And you—you are delivered," she answered, and then the silence between them was long. Suddenly there came from the lips of the masked man a profound sigh. "Till our next meeting," she heard him say in a strange voice, like that of a vanishing soul, and all was over. When the attendants returned Helena said quietly: "The Duke is dead." Three days after in the journal of the court all men might read the tidings that Helena H——, the betrothed of the late Duke of Portland, had taken the veil and entered a convent of the Carmelites.—Louise Chandler Moulton in Boston Herald.

Results of Pasteur's Discovery.

Prior to 1886 the bite of a dog known to be affected by rabies was followed by certain death. Since then the death rate of persons bitten by dogs known positively by experiment to have been mad, or in which a diagnosis of rabies had been made by competent veterinary surgeons, was, under the Pasteur treatment, reduced to but little over nine-tenths of 1 per cent. In other words, of 7,925 persons treated under these two conditions all but 73 recovered. Of 1,540 persons treated for hydrophobia through dogs supposed to have been mad only seventeen died, making a total number of deaths of only ninety out of 9,465 patients treated, less than 1 per cent. There seems to be but one conclusion to reach from these figures, that, so far from being ineffectual, the Pasteur treatment has reduced the death rate from dog bite to insignificant figures. Within five years it is demonstrated that 1,330 lives have been saved through the discovery of this one man.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Curiosities About Gold.

Gold is so very tenacious that a piece of it drawn into wire one-twentieth of an inch in diameter will sustain a weight of 500 pounds without breaking.

Its malleability is so great that a single grain may be divided into 2,000,000 parts and a cubic inch into 9,523,809,523 parts, each of which may be distinctly seen by the naked eye. A grain and a half of gold may be beaten into leaves of one inch square, which, if intercepted by parallel lines drawn at right angles to each other and distance only the one-hundredth part of an inch, will produce 25,000,000 little squares, each of which can be distinctly seen without the aid of a glass.

The surface of any given quantity of gold, according to the best authorities, may be extended by the hammer 310,184 times. Eight ounces of this wonderful metal would gild a silver wire of sufficient length to extend entirely around the globe.—St. Louis Republic.

"That child is really dangerous. He always was curious, and now he's just old enough to take advantage of the keyhole." "O, I see. He has come to the peer-age."—Baltimore American.

THIS IS A REMARKABLE COUNTRY.

The Newly-Arrived Emigrant Makes a Startling Discovery.

Hans Friedrich Endrichkeit arrived in this city a few days ago by one of the Hamburg-American Packet company's steamers. He was on his way to visit a sister, who is the wife of a baker in Boston. It was the first time Hans had set foot on American soil and he found everything very strange. He set sail on the steamer Pilgrim Monday evening for Fall River. His ticket entitled him to berth 103 on the steerage deck.

Hans had a hearty dinner aboard the steamer and spent the evening with his pipe on the upper deck. About 10 o'clock he decided to turn in for the night. In the main saloon he found a door numbered 103 and supposed it led to his sleeping apartment. He turned the knob and entered.

The stateroom in question had been engaged by a young couple who were returning from their wedding tour. The husband had left his wife to retire while he had a good-night cigar in the open air. When Hans Endrichkeit entered, therefore, he was somewhat surprised to find a young woman in the lower bunk of his apartment. She was sleeping soundly. Her diamond bracelet and a tiny gold watch were on the dresser and her dress adorned the back of a chair.

"This is a remarkable country," said Hans to himself, as he added his big silver watch to the other jewelry. "I s'pose the last one in fastens the door," and he turned the brass key quietly. A few minutes later he was in the upper bunk, sleeping as peacefully as the young woman in the cot below.

There came a rap at the door. Hans was snoring, but the young woman awoke.

"Who's there?" she inquired.

"It's me," replied a familiar voice ungrammatically.

Then the bride discovered Hans' clothing and gave a scream that was heard from one end of the main saloon to the other. Passengers poked their heads from their staterooms and wondered what was the matter. The instant the door of No. 103 was unlocked the frantic husband jumped in and seized poor, inoffensive Hans. He dragged him from his bunk, and after pommeling him soundly threw him bodily into the saloon. He was about to follow up his attack with a chair when Capt. Davis and Detective Agnew appeared on the scene and interfered. They hurried Hans into cover and then sent back for his clothes. He was a very battered, frightened passenger who was conducted to bunk No. 103 in the steerage.

The angry bridegroom apologized for his violence when he learned how Hans had made his mistake. The latter still believes that this is a remarkable country.—N. Y. World.

She Was Jealous.

A thin, wiry-looking little woman with black eyes and a coldly severe look about the lips was walking up one of Detroit's principal streets by the side of a round-faced, beardless and perfectly innocent and harmless-looking short and very fat old man, clad in a flopping linen duster and a suit of blue jeans, says the Detroit Free Press. They stopped at a fruit stand and the old man bought two bananas of the rosy-cheeked Italian girl in attendance. Then the couple moved on, and when they had gone about ten feet the woman hissed out bitterly:

"At your old tricks, Medad Higgins!"

"What do you mean, Marier?" he asked, wonderingly.

"Aw, yes, what do I mean?" she sneered, in tones so cold that all the thermometers in that block dropped three degrees. "Some folks can be mighty innocent even when they are caught. As though I didn't see you flirting with that sassy fruit-stand girl!"

"Gosh-a-mighty, Marier!"

"Aw, I would tremble if I were you. You can look mighty innocent, can't you, Medad Higgins? Ain't you ash-a-a-med of yourself? It jist seems as if you cayn't go nigh a girl without flirting with her. I'd be ash-a-a-a-med if I was you."

"Great Scott! Marier, what'd I say or do?" he said, helplessly.

"I'd have the face to ask, Medad! What bizness had you saying anything to her? I heard you say: 'Pleasant day, ain't it?' and 'How's bizness today?' and 'Good-by' in that flighty, flirty way of yours. Sh-a-a-ame on ye! There's no tellin' how much further you'd have went if I hadn't been along. La, Medad Higgins, if I done my duty I'd bring this up at our next church meetin' and have you church-mauled for such bizness. But I'll spare you this time on account of your children and grandchildren, but another time I'll not spare you, and the church and the world shall know how weeked you air!"

And they walked on, Medad looking as though he had been miraculously saved from an awful and impending shame.

Japanese Copper Mines.

A copper mine in Japan, which was first worked 1,183 years ago, is soon to be reopened. The Hochi of Japan is responsible for the statement of the fact. The mine is in the Musashi province, and it is recorded in old Japanese works that this was the first copper mine ever worked in Japan. It was opened in the fifth year of Keiun, 1,183 years ago, and the event was marked by changing the name of the era to Wado (Japanese copper.) That there should be detailed record of these remote happenings is not remarkable in a country which boasts the possession of a written history extending back twenty-five centuries. Seven or eight of the ancient workings are said still to exist just as they were eleven centuries ago, and trial diggings are now being made with a view to reopening the mine.

"Barbers are too fond of conversation." No. You wrong them. What they like is soliloquy. You'll find if you attempt to do any of the talking most barbers will drop lather in your mouth."—Puck.

HINDU ARCHITECTURE.

The Magnificent Temples That Rear Their Columns in Burning India.

Hindu architecture, strictly so called, first made its appearance about the fifth century A. D. at the time when Buddhism had begun to decline and Brahmanism was beginning to take its place. The original purity of the Buddhistic architecture was beginning to be lost about this time by the absence of the many higher esthetic qualities, though very considerable vigor is evinced by these works and a rich effect is produced by the elaborate and profuse ornamentation. The earliest types of Hindu temples are to be met with in Orissa, the most celebrated of which is the great temple of Bhuvaneswara, which is supposed to have been built in the seventh century A. D., says the Nineteenth Century. Of the elaborate carving and splendid sculpture work of these earlier temples Dr. Fergusson speaks very highly:

"Most people would be of opinion that a building four times as large would produce a greater and more imposing effect, but this is not the way a Hindu ever looked at the matter. Infinite labor bestowed on every detail was the mode in which he thought he could render his temple most worthy of the Deity, and, whether he was right or wrong, the effect of the whole is certainly marvelously beautiful. The sculpture is of a very high order."

Next there are some excellent specimens of architecture to be met with in Bundelcund, Rajputana, the Maratha country, and southern India. Temple building in the south did not commence till very late, at a time when the north was under Mohammedan rule. The earliest temple—that of Tanjore—was built so late as the fourteenth century. Nevertheless, during these five centuries numerous structures bewildering in their richness, grandeur and beauty have sprung up. Among these may be mentioned the elegant and graceful pagoda of Tanjore, the ancient and venerated temple of Chiamburam, with its gopuras, or gateways; the elegant temple of Parvati, and the magnificent hall of 1,000 columns; the magnificent temple of Serangam, with its fifteen elaborately carved and ornamented gateways; the great temple of Madura, with its nine gopuras and an elaborately sculptured hall of 1,000 columns; the celebrated shrine of Rameswuram, with its four great (though unfinished except one) gopuras, the glory of which consists in its corridors, which extend to a total length of 4,000 feet, and the great temple of Conjerveram, with its large gopuras, a hall of 1,000 columns, some fine mantapas and large tanks.

Speaking of the corridors of the Rameswuram temple, Dr. Fergusson says:

"No engraving can convey the impression produced by such a display of labor when extended to an uninterrupted length of 700 feet. None of our cathedrals are more than 500 feet, and even the nave of St. Peter's is only 600 feet from the door to the apse. Here the side corridors are 700 feet long and open into transverse galleries as rich in detail as themselves. These, with the various devices and mode of lighting, produce an effect that is not equaled certainly anywhere in India. * * * Here we have corridors extending 4 000 feet, carved on both sides, and in the hardest granite. It is the immensity of the labor here displayed that impresses us, much more than its quality, and that, combined with a certain picturesqueness and mystery, produces an effect which is not surpassed by any other temple in India, and by very few elsewhere."

German Soldiers.

To a colonel in the French army a writer in a German contemporary attributes the following: "The Germans (says the colonel) are in truth good soldiers, brave and honorable. We should have reason to be proud of them as allies. I lay seriously wounded, dying from thirst, on the battlefield of Sedan, when two German soldiers came by. I called to them in German, 'Trinken!' One hastened to me and handed me his field flask. 'Here, comrade, drink,' said he. As I drank, a bullet struck him. He fell. When the ambulance came to take me off the field I told the bearers not to forget the soldier. But he was dead. I would have given anything to shake the hand of that brave man who, in a hail of bullets, had so nobly befriended an enemy. As wounded and as prisoners of war we had nothing to complain of. I have fought in the Crimea, in Lombardy and Mexico, and am well able to form an opinion on the matter."—London News.

Profits of New York Newspapers.

The profits on the big papers of New York are enormous. They are gold mines to their owners. All the daily papers are said to be making money except the Recorder and the Advertiser, the new papers. The Herald is supposed to be the most profitable of them all, and is followed by the Sun, the Morning Journal, the Tribune, and the Staats-Zeitung, in the order named. Mr. Bennett's income from the Herald is estimated all the way from $800,000 to $1,200,000 per year. The Sun is said to be paying 40 per cent per annum on the capital invested. The profits of the Morning Journal and the Tribune are probably very near as large.—N. Y. Letter.

Recession of Vegetation.

Vegetation in the Alps recedes downward from year to year. Formerly Alpine roses grew at an altitude of 7,600 feet. Now they are seldom found higher than 6,500 feet, and are at that height stunted. Beeches have gone down 1,200 feet. Various berries which once flourished 7,500 feet above sea level do not grow in higher altitudes now than 5,800 feet.

Ably Seconded.

There was only one piece of pie left on the plate, and Willie's mother pressed the visitor to take it. He declined, but she insisted. Willie had no pie, and that was more than he could stand. In a voice of bitter sarcasm he howled out:

"Keep on worryin' him, maw! Keep on worryin' him! He'll take it after a while!"

THE NEWS.

Entered at the post office at Red Lake Falls as second-class mail matter.

Official Paper of the City.

Lambert Letter.

Fabius Morin, who has been working on the new church building here has started for Quebec where he will visit during the winter. He intends returning in the spring.

The christening ceremony of the infant baby of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bergeron was celebrated Tuesday. Mr. Abraham Paquin and Miss Disange Baudoin were sponsors.

On the 25th the Catholics of this parish will have a fair. It will be held dur the day and in the evening. Those having the fair in charge expect it will be a great success. The committee in charge extend a cordial invitation to all to be present.

Terrebonne.

Lovely weather.

Mrs. J. Ducharme drove to Crookston on Monday, returning Tuesday.

Miss Delma Ducharme of Crookston is visiting relatives and friends.

Miss Eugenie Le Freniere closed a four months' term of school Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Lanctot and Mr. and Mrs. Frances Riel of Gentilly were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Therien this week.

A baby boy was born to Mr. and Mrs. Laurent this week. It is the fourth boy to Mr. and Mrs. Laurent, and we think congratulations are in order.

Miss Nellie O'Neill Friday closed a seven months' term of school, and departed Monday for her home in Crookston. Miss O'Neill is a practical and progressive teacher and the Terrebonne schools would do well to retain her.

An Appeal to the People of Minnesota.

The attention of the charitable people of Minnesota is hereby called to the duty devolving upon them of taking some prompt and efficient steps to send aid to the starving people of Russia.

The facts regarding the wide-spread destitution in that empire, are already quite well known, having been published widely in the journals of our state; and the statements have been confirmed by official information received at the departments of general government. There are, it seems certain, twenty million people in Russia who are to-day in a destitute condition, and a large majority of them absolutely suffering for food at the beginning of a long and severe winter. The distress and suffering which must ensue, unless these millions of unfortunates receive speedy relief from some other nation, is terrible to contemplate, and appeal to the sympathy and generosity of humane people everywhere. Something must be done at once, or the suffering in Russia will be appalling, and perhaps whole populations will die of hunger and disease. A recent writer in the Illustrated American, speaks of the famine as follows:

"In one village of 150 families, forty-seven people died of hunger in a fortnight. Reports of terrible suffering come also from the province of Tambow. Travelers say that all along the railroad, and especially around the stations, are crowds of thousands—gaunt, hungry, dying. They have abondoned their homes where the last crumb has been eaten, and have flocked in despair to the railroad, recognizing in it the one link that unites them with the prosperous world outside. There they beg piteously of all passengers, and there they are dying and being buried by their dying comrades where they fall. In Samara only two per cent of the people have a winter's supply of food, and mor than one-third of the inhabitants are absolutely destitute.

This country, overflowing as it is with plenty, should not forget that Russia befriended us in the time of our dire distress. We are more favorably situated perhaps, than any other nation, to aid these starving people. Our harvests have been unexempled: our surplus of food products unprecedented. Prosperity abounds on every hand, and we should, as a humane people, give our unfortunate fellow beings in far away Russia, some of the surplus substance which Almighty God has showered upon us.

I have designated as a committee to receive contributions of flour, wheat, rye, and other bread stuffs, Messrs. W. C. Edgar, and Chales Mac C. Reeve, of Minneapolis, and George B. Evans, of St. Paul. The metropolitan daily newspapers will doubtless be glad to accept cash donations.

I therefore call upon the people of this state to make such donations for this purpose as the means of each will permit. Let a generous response be made, for we, as a people, are abundantly able, and the blessings of a divine Providence will be our reward.

W. R. MERRIAM,
Governor.

An Anglo-Saxon Holiday.

The English speaking people may, we think, properly claim Christmas as peculiarly an Anglo-Saxon holiday. It is true that it is also a festival of the Christian church, but it is easily demonstrated that a similar festival—without the element—was observed by the Germanic tribes long before the Roman legions crossed the Alps. In fact, it would seem that Christmas was not originated by the church, but that the priesthood adopted the feast-day, remodeling it to serve as a vehicle for religious ideas, and turning its generous and social spirit to account in the service of the church. Did you ever think that today English is spoken by one hundred and ten millions of people more than speak any other language on earth? China has two hundred and fifty millions of people, and India one hunderd and ninety-eight, but there are not one hunderd millions in either country who speak a tongue that is intelligible to the rest of the population. Where will you enjoy this holiday this year? At home. Good; but if you intend to visit friends, or go to the "old home" just make note of the fact that "The Burlington" is the line from this section to Chicago, St. Louis, Peoria, Quincy, Galesburg, Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha, Des Moines, Burlington, Hannibal, Denver, Cheyenne, Deadwood, Winona, La Crosse, Dubuque, Galena, St. Paul and Minneapolis. If you wish to go to any other place, apply to Burlingtgn agents, or those of connecting lines, for information, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen., Pass. Agent C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

St. Paul Correspondence.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Dec. 14, 1891.

Great progress has been made in the effort to secure for this city the Democratic national convention. As far as can be learned, the delegation of leading democrats of the Twin Cities who have gone to Washington to feel the pulse of the executive committee, are meeting with great encouragement. The present market site (cor. 7th and Wabasha sts) will be turned into a large auditorium with a seating capacity yf 15,000. Subscriptions to secure a guarantee fund are being made and the several committees are meeting with such great success that they have decided to make the fund $100,000 instead of $50,000. If the convention does not come to St. Paul it will not be the fault of its citizens, for everyone seems to have his shoulder to the wheel.

The famous Koran case for the murder of a certain Weisser was brought to a close last week, Koran being set free. Of course it was the great Erwin that saved him. It was the general feeling of the public that he (Koran) would be acquitted as soon as Erwin had made his opening speech on the case. The many friends of Koran, and especially those who knew his wife, intend to give him a torchlight procession one of these nights.

Last Wednesday Gov. Merriam issued an appeal to the people of Minnesota asking them to donate as much as their means will permit for the starving Russians. There are, it is said, 20,000,000 in a very destitute condition.

Miss Emma LaBissoniere, who has been in the city since the early part of September, visiting with Mrs. P. D. Couture, returned home Wednesday evening. Miss Emma took home with her a beautiful guitar that she won at the French church fair here.

Messrs. Chas. Gervais and John Beaudreau of Port Arthur arrived here about a week ago and are now attending school in Minneapolis. While here last spring Mr. Chas. Gervais made many friends and on his arrival a week ago all joined and tendered him a reception at John Gervais, Esq.' of this city.

Ig. Donnelly was up from his home in Ninniger, Thursday. Ignatius was looking after his libel suits as he will in a short time bring two suits against the Pioneer for libel. It will be remembered that not long ago he sued the same paper for $100,000 and was allowed $1 damages, but he says it isn't vindication he is after, it's money.

Madame Sarah Bernhardt will visit the Twin Cities once more in February before her return to Europe. Madame Bernhardt will this time appear in Cleopatra.

Hon. Lewis Baker and J. R. McMurrah returned Saturday morning from Washington where they had been lobbying for the convention. They report great encouragement.

FRYNZ.

Caution. Barbed Wire.

What that barbed wire fence has done to your horses Metzger's Veterinary Ointment will heal at once not leaving a scar, and will grow the hair as before. It is natures own remedy, and is warranted to heal any and all cases of scratches, Grease heal, collar and saddle gall, speed cracks, cracked heels, cuts, wounds, stiff or inflamed joints, frost bites, sore eyes, sore teats, mud fever; inflamed and diseased feet, and will grow a new hoof in the quickest possible time. Call at W. A. Screiter's and get a box and try it price 50 cand full lbs $1.00.

Attention Canadians.

WINTER EXCURSIONS TO PRINCIPAL POINTS IN CANADA.

Will again be run from the Northwest at all principles points in at the low rate of $40.00 for the round tirp. Tickets will be on sale in Manitoba daily from Tuesday December 1st to 30th inclusive and Northern Minnesota and North Dakota on Tuesday December 1st and 8th and daily from December 15th to 22nd inclusive and on Tuesday December 29th. Limit of tickets 90 days from date of sale. Those contemplate taking advantage of these low rate excursions should bear in mind that the Northern Pacific in connection with the Wisconsin central from the public highwry from points in the Nortewest to Chicago On December 1st, 8th, 15thr22nd, and 29th through Pullman furnised tourist sleeping cars will be run via those lenes to Chicago with out change, in which the rate for one dauble berth from starting point Chicago will be but $2.00.

Tickets, maps, time table and full information can be obtainet from any agent of the Northern Pacific R. R.

Canadian Excursions.

Excursion tickets to Canada will be no sale via St. Paul and "The North-Western Lina," to Chicago at offices of the Great Northern Rs., from points in Minnesota and Dakota north of and including Crookston and Grand Forks on December 1st, 8th, 15th, 20th, 21st. 22nd and 29th, and from points in Manitoba on December 1st, 8th, 15th, 22nd and 29th, 1891.

To Motreal and points west of Montreal the rate will be $40.00 for the round trip.

Tickets will also be sold to points east of Montreal at a trifle higher rate.

The Montana ann Manitoba Express trains of the Great Northern Ry. arriyes in St. Paul in the morning in time to connect with the "North-Western Line" fast day train leaving St. Paul at 7.50 a. m., arriving in Chicago 9.35 p. m., making connections with late night trains out of Chicago to the east.

Passenger arriving at St. Paul in the morning, desiring to stay over until evening can take the vestibale limited on this line that leaves St. Paul at 7.30 p. m. and arrives Chicago 9 o'clock next morning.

Buy your tickets over "The N orte-Western Line" it is also the only line running a train from St. Paul every morning both week days and Sundays to Milwaukee and Chicago.

M. M. WHEELER,
Traveling Agent.

T. W. TUESDALE,
Gen'l Passenger Agt., St. Paul, Minn.

:- IMPERIAL -:

TONSORIAL HALL!

N. MORISETTE, PROP.

Everything First Class!

SHAVING,
HAIR-CUTTING,
SHAMPOOING!

☞ Shaving 15 cents.

Haircutting 25 cents. ☜

MainStreet. - Red Lake Fall

PATENTS!

Pension, Postal, Land and Indian Depredation Claims.

U. S. and Foreign Patents obtained;
Interferences conducted;
Special examinations;
Trade-marks, copy-rights, labels and designs registered.

Rejected cases prosecuted; Infringment suits conducted in any United States Court.

If you have an invention, send us a sketch, photograph or small model, to gether with a brief description of the most important features and we will advise you the course to pursue. If you are in posession of patents and the same are infringed, or if you are charged with infringement, submit the matter to us for a reliable opinion.

NATIONAL BUREAU OF CLAIMS.

Box 35 Washington, D. C.

SANTA CLAUS makes his headquarters at Flack's.

For Sale.

I HAVE FOR SALE THE FOLLOWING LANDS,

Improved and Unimproved

FARMS

IN POLK COUNTY, MINN.

Long Time, Small Payments, Low Rate of Interest.

	SECTION.	TOWN.	RANGE.	SETTLER
W½ o5 Nw¼	29	147	43	Wilson
Nw¼ of sw¼	28	147	43	Wilson
Se¼ of Ne¼	30	141	52	Wilson
Se¼	6	148	42	Sylvesterson
Se¼	8	146	45	Troxell
Ne¼	2	148	45	Dillon
Sw¼	2	148	44	LaDuc
S½ of Nw¼	2	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Rivard
S½ of Sw¼	4	149	44	Bombardier
N½ of Nw¼	9	149	44	Bombardier
Se¼	7	146	44	Vaudrin
Nw¼	11	149	44	Tanasse
Ne¼	11	149	44	Emil'Fontane
Ne¼	4	149	45	Beaudette
Sw¼	12	149	45	Herbert
E½ of Ne¼ & E½ of Se¼	23	149	45	Patnode
Sw¼	24	149	46	Chayer
Sw¼	20	149	46	Haber
Ne¼	26	149	48	Folk
Ne¼ of Nw¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
N½ of Ne¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
Nw¼ of nw¼	9	150	41	Lemieux
Ne¼	26	150	41	Gabourey
Ne¼	10	150	42	Dagneau
Se¼	13	150	42	Lajambe
Se¼	25	150	42	Sylvester
Nw¼	32	150	42	Lachapelle
Se¼	12	150	43	Deserve
W½ of Se¼	13	15	43	Marlow
N½ of Ne¼	24	150	43	Marlow
Nw¼	17	150	43	Desotelle
se¼	11	150	43	Lizee
Ne¼	23	150	43	Bess n
Se¼	23	1501	43	Valie
Se¼	29	150	43	Tocpin
E½ of Nw¼	31	150	43	Rabillard
Lots 1 and 2	31	150	43	Rabillard
Nw¼	32	150	43	Dandenault
Ne¼	33	150	43	Gaudette
Ne¼	19	150	44	Boutellere
Se¼	31	150	44	Charron
Nw¼	33	150	44	Zaiser
Sw¼	34	150	44	Houle
Ne¼	6	150	45	Garon
E½ Sw¼	6	150	45	LaBelle
Lots 6 and 7	6	150	45	LaBelle
E½ of Sw¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
W½ Se¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
Nw¼	12	150	46	Pare
Sw¼ of Tw¼	3	151	42	Doutre
S½ Se¼	4	151	42	Doutre
Se¼ Sw¼	4	154	42	Doutre
Se¼ of Nw¼	4	150	42	Meilleur
Sw¼ of Ne.¼	4	151	42	Meilleur
Lots 2 and 3	4	151	42	Meilleur
N½ of Se¼	18	151	42	Sotourneau
N½ of Sw¼	17	151	42	Sotourneau
Se¼	15	151	43	McIntire
Lots 1 2 and 3	17	151	43	Emard
E½ of Nw¼	17	151	43	Emard
Ne¼ of Nw¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
Nw¼ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
S½ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
W½ of W½	23	151	43	Page
Ne¼	33	151	43	Beausoleel
E½ of Nw¼	7	151	44	Blaire
Lots 1 and 2	7	151	44	Blaire
Nw¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Lots 8 9 and 12	15	151	44	Bottineau
Ne¼ Se¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Nw¼ Sw¼	23	151	44	Bottineau
S½ Ne¼	6	151	44	Muller
Lots 1 and 2	6	151	44	Muller
Se¼	4	151	45	Jones
Se¼	14	151	45	Berry
Ne¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	32	151	45	Fleurie
Ne¼	20	150	46	McLean
Ne¼	24	151	46	Gauthier
Se¼	24	161	46	Tougas
Se¼	8	151	48	Lyle
Ne¼	25	152	42	Paussant
W½ of Ne¼ & w½ of se¼	28	152	43	Beaulien
Nw¼	30	152	43	Turville
E½ of Nw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
Lot 1	31	152	43	Rourke
Ne¼ of Sw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
N½ of Sw	10	152	44	Loe
Sw¼ of Se¼	10	152	44	Loe
Ne¼	13	152	44	Saudon
Sw¼	15	152	44	Dahlbeck
Nw¼	25	152	44	Rourke
Sw¼	25	152	44	Comstock
Ne¼	34	152	44	Rourke
Nw¼	25	152	45	Carroll
Se¼	28	152	45	Pepin
Nw¼	32	152	45	Pilon
S½ of Ew¼	2	152	46	Kirsch
Lots 3 and 4	2	152	46	Kirsch
E½ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Ne¼ of Se¼	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼	20	152	46	Carlton
Tw¼	26	152	46	Billandeau
Sw¼	4	152	48	Feeny
Fe¼	24	152	49	Brownlee
Se¼	11	153	43	Ness
Nw¼	25	153	44	Ives
Sw¼ of Ne¼	2	152	45	Bray
Lot 2	2	153	45	Bray
W½ of Se¼	2	153	45	Bray
Nw¼ of Sw¼	10	153	45	Bray
Sw¼	4	153	45	Lucian
Nw¼	6	153	45	Lusia
Sw¼	12	153	45	Clement
E½ of E½	14	153	45	Clement
W½ of E½	14	153	45	Coe
Se¼	18	153	45	Labounta Sr.
Sw¼	18	153	45	Labounta
E½ of W½	2	153	46	Lusia
Nw¼	8	153	46	Kelly
Se¼	8	153	46	Hazeltine
Ne¼	14	153	45	Stacy
Nw¼	26	153	46	Cole
Se¼	26	153	46	Labounty
Se¼	28	154	45	Gooler
S½ of Ne	32	154	46	Bautain
Se¼	25	153	46	Lusian
Ne¼	34	154	46	Thamas
S½ Ne¼ & 1 1,2	2	152	46	Filbin
Nw¼	32	150	45	Brosseau
Ne¼	30	152	43	Miller
Ne¼	19	152	42	Borup
Ne¼	20	150	41	Stone
Sw¼	10	151	46	Benoit

A. D. Wishard,
RED LAKE FALLS,

ma 21f5 Polk Co., Minn.

Railroad Tme Table.

LEAVE		ARRIVE
P. M.		A. M.
8	St. Paul.	10.30
8.35	Minneapolis.	9.55
1159	Brainerd	5.05
A. M.
2.37	Wadena	3.22
4.35	Detroit	1.38
		P. M.
5.33	Winnipeg Jct.	12.51
8.00	Fertile.	7.30
10.05 p.m		7.31 a. m.
p. m.		a. m.
5.58	Red Lake Falls.	5.48
10.08	Crookston.	8.25
2.50	Grand Forks,	9.40
3.30	Via Red Lake Falls.	11.50
7.32	Forest River	11.40
6.58	Grafton	11.40
P. M.		P. M.
5.13	Pembina	1.34
4.03	Morris	2.44
2.10	Winnipeg.	4.25

CHAS. S. FEE, G. P. T. A. W. S. MELLEN, G. M. J. A. DUFFY, Agt.

Get an Estimate

Of the Cost of Your Building - From

JAMES BRADY,

CONTRACTOR AND BUILDER.

Foreman of the Constrvction of

North Side Roller Mill.
P.&J. Meehan's Saw Mill.
J.D. Marshall's residence.
And others

Office at residence on hamilton av.

In conjunction with the Erie System operates Fast Vestibuled Trains between Chicago and the Atlantic Seaboard. you may travel in the most Elegant and complete Pullman Vestibuled Trains ever constructed and save $1.50 to Buffalo and Niagara Falls, $2.00 to New York $2.35 to Albany and Troy, and $3.00 to Boston and New England Cities.

No rival line offers the advantages of a system of through first and second-class day coaches and Pullman Dining cars chicago to New York.

It is the only line operating pullman cars to Boston and New England via Albany.

Entire trains are lighted by gas, heated by steam. Pullman dining cars run through in either direction.

Pullman chair and sleeping cars to Columbus, O., and Ashland, Ky., Daily.

No extra charge for fast time yeap unsurpassed accommodationsafferdd dnt these luxurious trains.

NORTHERN PACIFIC

BETWEEN

Winnipeg, Gilby, Dayton, Grafton, Grand Forks-Crookston, Red Lake Falls,

AND ALL POINTS

EAST AND WEST.

There is nothing better than the service on

THE DINING CAR LINE

Through Fullman Sleeping Cars Daily Between Points in the

RED RIVER VALLEY

AND

ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS

PACIFIC COAST TRAINS
PASSING THROUGH
MINNESOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA
IDAHO, ORENON AND WASHINGTON,

CARRY COMPLETE EQUIPMENT OF

Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars,
First and Second Class Coaches,
Pullman Tourist and
Free Colonist Sleepers.

And Elegant Dining Cars.

THROUGH TICKETS Are sold at all coupon offices of the Northern Pacific Railroad to points North, East, South and west, in the United States and Canada.

For further information regarding rates, routes maps, etc., address

CHAS. S. FEE,
G. P. & T. Agt.,
St. Paul, Minn.

J. A. DUFFY
Local A.gt

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Nov. 24, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on January 9th, 1892, viz, Paul Prue, hd 11856 for the s½ ne¼ and lots 1 and 2, sec 6, twp 149, r 42.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz.

Foussaint Beaudry, Joseph Benoit, Joseph Leroux, all of Terrebonne, Polk Co., Minn.; John Quesnell, of Mentor, Polk Co., Minn.

nov26d31 H. H. Dickmann, Register.

Scientific American Agency for

PATENTS

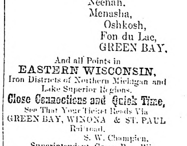
CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the

Scientific American

Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York.

The Mormon Elders' Book on Sexual Strength, mailed free to married men, address F. B. Crouch, 202 Grand St., New York



HE Missed his Opportunity! DON'T Miss Yours, Reader. The majority neglect their opportunities, and from that cause live in poverty and die in obscurity! Harrowing despair is the lot of many, as they look back on lost, forever lost, opportunity. Life is passing! Reach out. Be up and doing. Improve your opportunity, and secure prosperity, prominence, peace. It was said by a philosopher, that "the Goddess of Fortune offers a golden opportunity to each person at some period of life; embrace the chance, and she pours out her riches; fail to do so and she departs, never to return." How shall you find the GOLDEN opportunity? Investigate every chance that appears worthy, and of fair promise; that is what all successful men do. Here is an opportunity, such as is not often within the reach of laboring people. Improved, it will give, at least, a grand start in life. The GOLDEN opportunity for many is here. Money to be made rapidly and honorably by any industrious person of either sex. All ages. You can do the work and live at home, wherever you are. Even beginners are easily earning from $5 to $10 per day. You can do as well if you will work, not too hard, but industriously; and you can increase your income as you go on. You can give spare time only, or all your time to the work. Easy to learn. Capital not required. We start you. All is comparatively new and really wonderful. We instruct and show you how, free. Failure unknown among our workers. No room to explain here. Write and learn all free, by return mail. Unwise to delay. Address at once, H. Hallett & Co., Box 880, Portland, Maine.

Green Bay,
Winona
& St. Paul

Railroad. Best and most Direct Line Between

LACROSSE,
WINONA,
Neillsville,
Eau Claire,
Grand Rapids,
Stevens Point,
New London,
Appelton,
Neenah,
Menasha,
Oshkosh,
Fon du Lac,
GREEN BAY,

And all Points in

EASTERN WISCONSIN,

Iron Districts of Northern Michigan and Lake Superior Regions.

Close Connections and Quick Time,

See That Your Ticket Reads Via
GREEN BAY, WINONA & ST. PAUL Railroad.

S. W. Champion,
Superintendent, Green Bay, Wis.
J. B Last,
Ass't Gen. Pass. Agt., Green Bay, Wis.

REAL ESTATE,

INTELLIGENCE AND COLLECTION OFFICE

SPECIAL BARGAINS NOW ON HAND

In Desirable Property. Call or Write for Particulars.

CYPRIEN GOSSELIN.

Office on Bottineau Avenue, Red Lake Falls.

Land office at Crookston, Minn., Nov. 27th 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register or Receiver U. S. Land office at Crookston Minn. on January 11, 1892, viz: Euclide Beaudry Hd 10791 for the NE¼ sec 23 Twp 150 Rg 44.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:

John T. Beaudry, Crookston, Louis Arbert, Ambroise Delorme, Louis Guilmette all of Red Lake Falls, Minn.

dec. 3-jan 6 Hugh Thompson Register

I. LEMIEUX,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON,

Officein residence, First street, Red Lake Falls, Minn.

JOHN WATSON,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEGN,

Office in residence, Sixth street, Red Lake Falls Minn.

First National Bank

RED LAKE FALLS, MINN.

JAS. I. WYER, Pres.
JOS. SMITH, Vice President.
THEO. GARCEAU, Cashier

Capital....$50,000.
Surplus.....$5,000.

Careful Attention and Prompt returns given all Collections.

ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

J. M. Bray has started a dray line.

Ovide Emard has a fine new show case.

Miss Flora St. Yves was in the city Saturday.

Rev. Fr. Arpin went to Argyle Sunday to hold services.

Jas. Meehan Sr. has been down from Thief River Falls this week.

Realestate business is stirring. Our agents all have their hands full.

Pete Morisette drove to Crookston Tuesday in company with his father.

Buy your holiday goods at home. Our merchants have big stocks this year.

Miss Clara E. Mageau was down from Terrebonne Sunday visiting friends.

Our schools are now running in full blast, with five teachers on the force.

Leon Hubert and his mother arrived from Duluth Monday morning on a visit.

Charles Mead was under the weather the first of the week, but is now out again.

F. J. D tling departed Monday night for Rochester, where the family are now residing.

Readers of the NEWS will see where to purchase goods by looking over the advertisements.

Pete Morisette will shortly receive a new chair and mirror for the Imperial Tonsorial hall.

A number of our merchants have come to the front with holiday announcements. Look their ads over.

Charlie Mead has purchased the building now occupied by Fred Borchers, from Frank E. Hunt.

The sale of Christmas trees this year is greater than ever before. This is going to be a great Christmas.

Isaac Mulvaney returned from Thief River Falls Monday. Isaac says there is no place like Red Lake Falls.

A. F. Zeh spent several days of this week at Thief Riverr Falls, visiting relatives and transacting business.

Cuno & Jeffers are in receipt of a new separator. They will run a thrashing outfit this winter north of town.

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Paradis Tuesday, Joe's geniality since is something remarkable. Congratulations.

Are you appreciative? If so, grasp the magnitude of the offer of Grant's Memoirs, a $3 magazine and the NEWS for $4.50.

Jas. I. Wyer has purchased the corner and adjoining lot on Champagne avenue now occupied by P. G. Falardeau's office

Miss Bridget Hillgrove has completed teaching a very successful term of school at Wyandotte. Miss Bridget's many friends are pleased to see her back.

Construction will soon commence on the Great Northern bridge over the RedLake river. A crew of men is now at preparatory work, the contract having been let.

Andrew Lavik drove to Crookston to meet his father, who was returning from Dakota. They remained in Crookston over the Sabbath, arriving home Monday afternooon.

The managers of St. Joseph's church fair are keeping so quiet that people have almost forgotten a fair was to be held. We have assurances, however, that the bazar will be a grand and gala event.

The Northwestern Roller Mill will soon be running at full capacity. This mill turned out a superior grade of flour when in operation. It is one of the best plants in the state, and that it is not utilized is a source of regret.

Joseph Lafromboise was in from Gentilly to-day. He will start for St.Paul Jan. 4th to attend the annual state farmers alliance covention. From St.Paul he will proceed to Canada as special immigration agent for the Great Northern railroad. He will eb absent about two months.

The NEWS has a Christmas offer: The Cosmopolitan Magazine, monthly, for one year, the NEWS for one year and General Grant's Memoirs, for $4.50. The Memoirs are the Original edition that sold for $7. The same binding. The Cosmopolitan Magazine is a first class publication—like the Century Magazine. The NEWS is your local paper—that's enough. The regular subscription price of the Cosmopolitan is $3.00. Now think about it, ye who like literature.

Fru't can be 35 [illegible] at Schreiters.

Be sure to call on Frank E. Hunt for anything in the hardware line. He has a fine stock.

Agt. Shuler of White Earth was at Red Lake last week and paid out the snug sum of $1,0000 to the Red Lake Indians.

There will be train south Sunday p. m. on about time of regular train to accommodate all Canadian excursionists and others, making connection at Fertil with regular passenger train.

J. A. DUFFY,
Agent.

The best cure for forestry crank Barret would be for him to live in the average log house of our prairie and get a dose of bichloride of freza for the next three months—and we will guarantee the wind will blow through his whiskers when he's in bed—notwithstanding the forest is yet untouched,

Ed. Maloney narrowly escaped taking a header off the Clearwater bridge last Thursday. He was sliding down 7th st hill, and upon reaching the bridge his sled sloughed, running into the timbers at the side of the the bridge, throwing him off. He caught hold of a post, thus preventing a disastrous and probably fatal result.

The National Park cranks who are living in warm houses in the twin cities—suffer little inconvenience when the thermometer is 40 below zero and think less of the wants of the prairie farmer who is awaiting the day when the vast forests of the would be national park will be cut into cheap lumber to enable the farmers family to be in a comfortable home.

The sociable Friday night at the Presbyterian church was one of the most largely attended of any held for a considerable length of time. The Rogue's Art Gallery was a taking novelty and kept speculation rife and merriment effusive. After the older people had retired, the young folks indulged in various games. The proceeds were satisfactorily large and the ladies will probably be encouraged to renew their efforts in the way of affording delightful entertainments, with such gratifying financial and social results.

Mr. August Morin returned from Crookston to-day having given bail to appear in February to answer the endictment brought against him at this term of court. Mr. Morin supposed this case had been previously settled, so far as he was concerned, with the loan company, he having made a trip to St. Paul for the purpose of settling. The indictment was no doubt a surprise to him, and his friends hope he will come out victorious when the day of trial comes.

W. A. Schreiter is one of those who can pray for deliverance from his friends. He has also been handled without gloves by the grand jury and has gone to Crookston to stand trial and explain what medicinal qualities are contained in a certain bottle of pure liquor which he sold to a long, lank knock-kneed, slob-sided countryman of his who pleaded a sick wife but now because compelled to pay some just debt, takes revenge upon W. A. for alleged violation of law.

The Polk Co. Alliance will hold their SemiAnnual Meeting at the Court House in Crookston, Tuesday, Dec. 29th 1891, at ten o,clock a. m. for the purpose of electing one delegate and one alternate to attend the state farmers alliance, to convene at Minneapolis January 15th, 1892, and such other business as may properly come before said meeting. Each sub alliance is entitled to three delegates.

JOHN D. KNUTESON, Secretary.
H. G. MITCHELL, President.

Rev. Jirah McCornack was on Wednesday evening formally installed as minister of the 1st Presbyterian church of this place. In the evening sermons were preached upon the duty of the congregation to the pastor and on the duty of the pastor to the people; both sermons were models of eloquence; everyone who attended was well pleased, not alone for the eloquent words which fell from the lips of the reverend gentlemen—but because Rev. J. S. McCornack will remain in our midst expounding the doctrine of Christianity to which he has devoted a young and vigorous manhood. His popularity grows with time and the Presbyterians of the city have a pastor of whom they may feel proud.

Grand display of holiday goods in Clocks and Silverware at Schreiter's.

O My! Those beautiful Dolls at the Drug and Jewelry Store are just too sweet for anything.

C. B. Wells and wife have been to Red Lake, the past week. While there, the quarterly payment was made and Mrs. Wells and children each received the snug sum of $10.50.

DR PRICE'S
Cream Baking Powder.
Used in Millions of Homes—40 Years the Standard.

For every dollar purchase you make at the Drug and Jewelry Store you will receive a 25c present.

Best horseshoeing done at Findeisen's.

Dolls, Dolls, Dolls, at Schreiter's drug store.

Everything in holiday goods at Schreiters' drug store.

More new goods just received at the Drug and Jewelry Store.

The largest and best assorted line of holiday goods at Schreiter's.

For every 50c purchase at my store you will receie a 10c present.

Flack the Jeweler.

All kinds of COAL for sale at Hoskin's elevator.

32 W. T. SPILLANE.

Buy your candy, nuts, figs and popcorn of Flack the Jeweler. A fine new stock just received.

You will find a nice line of stoves including Radiant Home, Early Breakfast and Charter Oak at Hunt's.

Give us a chance to show you our holiday goods and quote prices. We carry all the latest novelties

W. A. SCHREITER.

Buy your holiday goods of Flack the Jeweler and get a nice present with every 50c purchase.

The largest stock of tin and wood toys in Eastern Polk county sold very cheap at Schreiter's drug store.

At S. Elstad's blacksmith shop near the depot, you can get guaranteed work. First-class horse shoing by an old experienced workman.

If you want a sewing machine be sure and examine Hunt's. He carries the Domestic, Favorite and American No. 7. Prices or terms to suit.

Team of working horses for sale. Weight 12 and 14 hundred. P. & J. Meehan, Red Lake Falls, Minn. Apply at the lumber yards.

Buy your presents at the Drug and Jewelry Store and gladden the hearts of your father, mother, sister, brother or sweetheart.

Conversation cards, card games, authors and lotos at Schreiters.

Pete Paradis' left arm is in a sort of curved position since his drive to Terrebonne Sunday while his right arm has the peculiar sensation of being talked off. The past week he has been effected with absence d'esprit.

Horseowners, Take Notice.

At the request of many of my customers I have securad the services of a first class horse shoer and respectfully solicit a share of your patronage. First class work guaranteed.

Wm. Findeisen.

The Excitement Not Over.

The rush at Schreiter's drug store still continues on account of persons afflicted with Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scrofula, Soreness and inflammation of eyes, sores, pains, etc., etc., to procure a package of Meizger's Pain Eradicator which is sold on a guarantee and is giving entire satisfaction. It is a standard family remedy. Price 50 cents. Trial size free.

A Remarkable Good Man.

He who attends to the comfort of his family and will not suffer himself or allow them to, with that most dreadful of pains, rheumatism. Metzger's Angle and Wormwood oil Liniment is a positive cure for rheumatism and sprains. It is he best external application on earth. One bottle is better than any amount of porous plaster. Price 50 cents per bottle. For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

A Standard Remedy.

Mezger's Pile Ointment has long proven a boon to suffering humanity, and is effective whenever used. Those in need of a remedy of this kind can find none better or more effective and should get a package of Metzger's Pile Ointment, that ii warranted to cure. Price 50c. At Schreiter's drug store.

A Very Narrow Escape.

Yes, I had a very narrow escape, said a prominent citizen to a friend. I was confined to my bed for more than two years and all my friends gave me up. I had running sores on my limbs and after using nearly everything was induced to try Metzger's Pain Eradicator and now here I am, sound and hearty. You will find it for sale by W. A. Schreiter. Price 50c a bottle, trial size free.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retird from practice having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and desire to relieve human suffering I will send, free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Land Office at Crookston Minn. Dec 15th, 1891. Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register or Receiver U. S. Land office at Crookston Minn., on February 4th, 1892, viz: Toussaint Fournier H d No. 14293, for the S. ½, NE ¼ and S½ NW¼ Sec 31 Twp 151 R 43.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:

Joseph Laurent, Frank St Martin, Joseph St. Martin, Henry Prudhomme, all of Terrebonne, Polk county, Minn.

dec17-jan15 Hugh Thompson, Register.

Land office at Crookston, Minn., Dec. 14th, 1891. Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of the U. S. land office at Crookston Minn., on February 1st, 1892, viz: Louis Lefevre, Hd 10,970, for the n½ ne¼ sec 33 and n½ nw¼ sec 31, tp 152, r 42.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz.

Isaiah Morrisette, H. Blivin, Peter Morrisette, Louis Thereau, all of Emard P. O. Polk County, Minn.

jan15 Hugh Thompson, Register.

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Dec. 14th, 1891. Notice is hereby given, that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of the U. S Land Office at Crookston Minn., on February 1st, 1892, viz: Isaiah Morrisette, hd 11,039, for the s½ se¼ sec 5, se¼ se¼ sec 4, nw¼ nw¼ sec 9, tp 151, r 42.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:

Louis Lefevre, H. Blivin, Frank Vallencourt, John B. Derosier, all of Emard P. O., Polk Co., Minn.

jan 15 Hugh Thompson, Register.

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Dec. 10th, 1891. Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of the U. S. land office at Crookston, Minn., on February 10th, 1892, viz: Charles Benoit, pre D S 11,518, for the nw¼ sec 24, twp 150, r 42.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:

Treffez Robidaux, Napoleon Guilmette, J. Ebert Joseph Chanpon, all of Lambert, Polk Co. Minn.

Harry Juvenville, who made Pre D. S. 11191 on the above land on May 28th, 1888, is hereby cited to appear at this office February 10th, 1892, and show cause why said proof should not be allowed and his said entry cancelled.

jan15 Hugh Thompson, Register.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION

—OF—

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK AT RED LAKE FALLS, IN THE STATE OF MINNESOTA AT THE CLOSE OF BUSINESS, Dec. 2d, 1891.

RESOURCES.
Loans and discounts	67,042.01
Overdrafts, secured and unsecured	141.05
U.S. Bonds to secure circulation	12,500.00
Due from approved reserve agents	13,138.46
Due from other National Banks	1,102.89
Banking house, furniture & fixtures	2,457.08
Other real estate and mortgages owned	629.12
Current expenses and taxes paid	682.36
Checks and other cash items	34.93
Bills of other banks	687.00
Fractional paper currency, nickles and cents	11.58
Specie	2,426.00
Legal-tender notes	4,500.00
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer (5 per cent of circulation)	562.50
Total	105,914.98
LIABILITIES.
Capital stock paid in	50,000.00
Surplus fund	5,000.00
Undivided profits	2,059.77
National Bank notes outstanding	11,250.00
Individual deposits subject to check	25,878.34
Demand certificates of deposit	6,061.87
Time certificates of deposit	5,290.00
Notes and bills rediscounted	375.00
Total	$105,914.98

State of Minnesota county of Polk, SS.

I, Theo. Garceau, Cashier of the above-named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

THEO. GARCEAU, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 15th day of Dec., 1891.

H. H. ZAISER, Notary Public,
Polk Co. Minn.

Correct—Attest:
JOSEPH SMITH, JAS I. WYER, FRANK E. HUNT } Directors

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

(First publication Dec. 3)

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of fifty and 25-100 dollars, interest, which became due on the twenty-first day of November 1891, which default has continued to the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Luc Dumas, mortgagor, to D. S. B. Johnston Land Mortgage Company, a corporation duly incorporated and organized under the laws of the state of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the twenty-first day of November, 1887, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 22nd day of November, A.D. 1887, at 4:15 o'clock p. m., in book 38 of mortgages, on page 122.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said D. S. B. Johnston Land Mortgage Company, mortgagee, to William J. Peck, by written assignment, dated the twenty-fourth day of April, A.D. 1888, and recorded in the office of said register of deeds, on the ninth day of May, A. D. 1888, at 1 o'clock p. m., in book 36 of said mortgage records, on page 96;

And whereas, the said William J. Peck, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and the power of sale therein contained: and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of six hundred fifty and 25-100 dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent per annum from the twenty-first day of November, A. D., 1891, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof,

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz:

The south west quarter (sw¼) of section twenty two (22), in township one hundred forty nine (149) of range forty-five (45) containing one hundred and sixty acres, more or less, according to the government survey thereof, in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, or his deputy, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 16th day of January, 1892, at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of six hundred fifty and 25-100 dollars, and interest, and eighty-six and 45-100 dollars taxes paid by said assignee on said premises, and fifty dollars, attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 2, 1891.

WILLIAM J. PECK, Assignee of Mortgagee.
D. D. WEBSTER, Attorney for Assignee of Mortgagee, 322 Hennepin ave, Minneapolis, Minn.

State of Minnesota, county of Polk—ss.

In Probate Court, Special Term, Dec. 5th, 1891.

In the matter of the estate of Peter Bischoff, deceased:

On reading and filing the petition of Joseph Bischoff, administrator of the estate of Peter Bischoff, deceased, representing, among other things, that he has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining, settling and allowing the final account of his administration, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to the parties entitled thereto by law.

It is ordered that said account be examined, and petition heard by this court on Monday, the 11th day of January, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the office of the judge of probate, in the city of Crookston in said county.

And it is further ordered, That notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Red Lake Falls News, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 5th day of December, A. D. 1891.

By the Court,
G. M. Benson, Judge of Probate

oe15-29

We Greet You!

Once again! How time does fly! The echoes of last year's greeting have hardly dsed away and yet in a few short weeks we shall be wishing eachother a

Merry Christmas

Another time. To men engrossed in the cares and perplexities of business the year speed by as months—but they

Can not rob us of time to welcome the holiday which was once the happiest day in the year to us, and which is so closely linked with cherished memories of childhoood and youth.

Our Holiday Offerings

Plsuh Dressing Cases,Plush Manicure sets, Silvered Dressing Cases,Plush Whisk Broom Holders, Oder and Perfume Sets, Plush Shaving Sets, Plush and Leather Paperettes,Plush and Leather cuff and Collar Boxes Albums from 50c to $6.50 each. Tin and wood Toys in endless variety. Toy Books, Story

Books

About Dec. 15th we will receive atock of Story Books, suitable for Young and Old. China Cups and Saucers, Decorated Lamps, the Largest assortment of Dolls in EasternPolk County. All our goods are marked in plain figures at lowest prices.

We do not add 50 per cent. to the price of goods and promise to give with every dollar's worth of goods a 25c toy. The Sundry Holiday novelties contained in our immense stock are of course too numerous to mention. The only way to get the full benefit of all the goods is to Call And Inspect Our Goods.

Remember the place.

The Old Reliable
Drug Store.

W. A. SCHREITER,
MAIN ST. PROPRIETOR. MAIN ST.

LOOK HERE! : : :
Look Here!

Ovide Emard

THE CONFECTIONER HAS SOMETHING TO

Interest Everyone.

AT HIS STORE
MAY BE FOUND

HOLIDAY GOODS

THAT WILL BE SURE TO PLEASE

CANDIES,
NUTS, FIGS
DATES,
ORANGES.

A LARGE, FRESH,
NEW STOCK.

I wish to make especial mention Of my fine line of Xmas tree ornaments. These

Christmas
TreeOrnam'ts

Comprise the entire outfit for artistical decoration. You will consult

Your own Interests

By purchasing of me.

I DON'T SELL GOODS AT COST,

But I can guarantee my prices as low as the lowest. Don't forget I have a stock of apples that is away Out of sight. Best apples, $4. Lower grades.

Yours Very Truly,

Ovide Emard.

GOOD TIMES HAD COME AGAIN.

Pathetic Story of an Old Fashioned Fricasse in the White House.

From his humble home in the west Lincoln brought into public life his notions of plain, frugal living, and to the day of his death adhered to them strictly. The discouraged steward complained bitterly of his utter lack of appreciation of his finest work, and never quite forgave him for saying to Mr. Lovejoy, who was dining with him one day: "None of this flummery goes to the tired spot." And once he was heard to say to his wife: "I do wonder why we do not get such good meat and potatoes in Washington as we used to have in Illinois! Do you know, Mary?"

During the latter years of his life he ate so little and so irregularly that often noontime found breakfast untasted, and Secretary Stanton one day remarked: "Mr. Lincoln, whose dinner is this, I wonder, covered up so nicely? It will be cold very soon."

"Dinner? Why, that's my breakfast. What time is it, Stanton? I do feel kind of empty."

Through the influence of Hon. Owen Lovejoy, Miss Alice Johnstone of Chicago was appointed to a desk in the postoffice. During her first winter in Washington she slipped on an icy pavement, and for three months she was confined to her room. Ill and discouraged, she determined to return to the west and give up her office. Mr. Lovejoy spoke to Mr. Lincoln of her sad condition, and said in his great-hearted way, "If I hadn't five girls of my own I'd adopt Alice. My wife always has room for one more at home."

"See here, Lovejoy, we need just such a girl. I'll speak to Mary at once."

So, "to make a long story short," Alice became a member of the president's family. Her capabilities were quickly discovered by all; her work admired and commented on by guests and servants. She proved a "perfect comfort" to the lonely, sorrowful man, "weighed down with the nation's fate," and to the busy women, in the whirl of fashionable life, "a constant treasure."

Tad remarked to his father one day: "We are having better times since Allie came, because, you see, I can have all the boys I want to now. She don't mind our parties, and can get anything of the cook."

Alice was deeply attached to the family, and especially impressed with the gentle, domestic life of the president. She said:

"Should I live to be 100 years old, the kind, quiet good mornings of the sad-faced, tired man whom I saw every day will never cease to thrill my heart. I used to watch him standing with his arms folded, looking steadily from the south window, across the Potomac, toward the battle fields, so pale, not at all rested from the work of yesterday, and yet up since daybreak, looking over his maps. I longed to help him!"

He grew more gaunt and worn as the year crept on. The servants went to Mrs. Lincoln with complaints; they served lunch up-stairs to save his time; but hours afterward would find it untouched.

"Alice!" Mrs. Lincoln exclaimed one morning, "do you know how to make an old-fashioned friccassed chicgen? Not on toast, as we have it nowadays, but with small cream biscuits and thick cream gravy poured over them, all served on a large platter. I used to cook chicken that way when we were first married, and my husband would say: 'Mary, that is fit for a king!' Do you think you could do it exactly so?"

"O, let me try," Alice said. "It would be so good to see Mr. Lincoln eat!"

She had no trouble with the force below stairs. The cook, steward, waiters and the use of shining range—combined to perfect the dish.

A table was laid in Mrs. Lincoln's private sitting-room, old-fashioned pinks glorified the quaint meal, attendants and waiters were dismissed.

Little Tad was sent to the office for his father. Twice he came back with a long face. "Father says he is too busy. Secretary Stanton is there!" But the third imperative visit brought "Father." Tad rushed in, dragging his father by the hand and shouting, "I've got him! I've got him! Hurry up the dinner!"

I would like to give Alice's own words, as she sent them in a letter to Chicago.

"If you could have seen Mr. Lincoln's face! You could have cried! He stood in the doorway, silent, tired and abstracted. Tad tugged and pushed him along, while Mrs. Lincoln looked up to him and said: 'You will eat dinner with us to-day; we have something you like.'

"The surprise and pleasure dawned slowly into his eyes. He sat down opposite his wife, with Tad between them. He seemed to understand it all—his little family, the old-fashioned home dish, the loving attention. Before he ate one mouthful he rose from his chair, walked around to his wife, laid his big hand on her shoulder, and said:

"'Mary, I wish we were back in the old home, when you did the cooking and I helped with the chores. They were our best days!'

"I bustled into the hall, almost choking to death, with lumps in my throat, and when I came back with a glass of milk for Tad Mr. Lincoln was laughing and eating my chicken with all his might! His whole salary couldn't have given me the pleasure and reward that his smile and good appetite did. 'He ate three helps, Alice! and more gravy than you and me and mother could, all put together!' said Tad.

"When he went out Mr. Lincoln said: 'Wife, you and Alice will make me sick with such good dinners. I haven't tasted a meal like that since—since—well, Mary, I think it is safe to say since you and I were head cooks!'" —Margaret Spencer in Mrs. Logan's Home Magazine.

"You seemed to be holding a long talk with Timmins this afternoon. What was the burden of your conversation?" "I don't remember, now. I know that it was a burden, though."—Indianapolis Journal.

SELFISHNESS WELL REWARDED.

How a Greedy Traveller Was Forced to Yield The Seat He Had Retained.

The subject of the ethics of politeness as manifested by travellers in yielding or retaining their car seats forms a never ending topic of conversation among those who have occasion to study the various phases of the problem.

In connection with the subject a commercial traveller gives an illustration of an event that recently came to his attention. It occurred one day last autumn on an accommodation train running on the Pennsylvania Railroad between Columbus (Ohio) and Indianapolis, and was as follows:—

"The train was entirely inadequate to accommodate the travellers," said the speaker. "It had come through from Pittsburg, and the passenger car was already well filled when I entered it at Columbus. There were but few vacant places.

"The first seat I espied was by the side of one of those human hogs that one encounters more frequently upon a railroad train than anywhere else. He had carefully spread his overcoat gripsack and sundry other articles on the seat by his side so as to make it inaccessible to another passenger.

"I did not like the man's looks, but as the car was crowded I approached him to ask if the seat was taken. Before I could put the question he looked up and said gruffly, 'This seat is taken, sir.' I was rather surprised at his adding the word 'sir,' and I knew that he lied when he made the other statement. However it did not trouble me much, as I readily found an unoccupied place.

"While I journeyed along I heard the hog tell fifteen separate and distinct lies in order to retain the entire seat. He varied the formula somewhat. At one time it was a wave of the hand and a glance at the rear of the car to indicate that the occupant of the seat was in the smoking car. Another time, to the inquiry of a mild mannered and timid questioner, he replied with a stolid stare.

"I was tempted to crawl up behind him, to call him liar and then thrash him. I did nothing of the sort, however, and eventually I had my revenge.

"It came in the shape of a big red faced countryman, who boarded the train at a way station. The new comer weighed fully two hundred and fifty pounds, and from his soiled clothing I judged he worked in a slaughter house or something equally savory.

"As luck would have it, the only vacant seat was the one beside the selfish hog. As the other human porcine halted the guardian of the latter said:—'This seat is'——

"'That's all right,' said the sweet smelling heavy weight as he plumped himself with a thud beside the occupant. 'I guess I'll keep it till the other fellow comes along.'

"Our selfish traveller started to bluster, but the red faced ruffian soon took that out of him by sundry threats of violence.

"After a while the second barbarian grew good humored. He told funny (?) anecdotes and poked the first hog in the ribs, as he himself went off with long continued rounds of coarse laughter. He wanted to know where his companion came from and where he was going. He spat tobacco juice across him out of the window, or expectorated upon the floor near the first traveller's effects.

"It was easy to see that the original hog was about the most miserable man in the world.

"At last the latter could stand it no longer. He crawled out of his seat, gathered up his traps and entered the smoking car, where for forty miles he alternated between standing and occupying a most unconfortable seat on a wood box."—N. Y. Herald.

A Rival of the Yosemite.

In the vast Sierre wilderness far to the southward of the famous Yosemite Valley, there is a yet grander valley of the same kind. It is situated on the South Fork of King's River, above the most extensive groves and forests of the giant sequoia, and beneath the shadows of the mountains in the range, where the canons are deepest and the snow-laden peaks are crowded most closely together. It is called the Big King's River Canon, or King's Yosemite, and is reached by way of Visalia, the nearest point on the distance is about forty-five miles, or by the Kearsarge Pass from the east side of the range. It is about ten miles long, half a mile wide, and the stupendous rocks of purplish gray granite that form the walls are from 2,500 to 5,000 feet in height, while the depth of the valley below the general surface of the mountain mass from which it has been carved is considerably more than a mile. Thus it appears that this new Yosemite is longer and deeper, and lies embedded in grander mountains, than the well-known Yosemite of the Merced. Their general characters, however, are wonderfully alike, and they bear the same relationship to the fountains of the ancient glaciers above them.—John Muir, in the Century.

A Big Tree.

A very large tree, one of the largest in California, the country of big trees, was discovered near Arlington Snohomish county, a few days ago. It is a cedar and measures sixty-eight feet in circumference. Around the knotty roots the tree measures ninety-nine feet. About seventy-five feet from the ground it forks into four immense branches, and just below the forks is a big knot hole. Five men climbed into the hole and explored the interior of the tree. It was found to be a mere shell, and about forty-five feet down it would afford standing room for forty men. The tree is still green, and a remarkable feature is said to be that it is barked on the inside and outside alike.

A local paper at Crossville, Tenn., publishes a description of a single grapevine on the McCoy flats, near Big Brasly mountain, that extends over five acres of ground, and has at least 1,000 bushels of grapes ready to pluck. It bears only on alternate years.

DRIVING A THOUSAND MILES.

An Englishman Covers the Distance with One Horse.

It is needless for me to compare the average swiftness or strength of a horse as against that of a man, as it is a well-established fact that for strength and speed combined the horse has no rival. But it is quite another thing when we consider the latent staying power or physical endurance of a horse over that of a man. This was supposed to have been proved conclusively in favor of man by the remarkable walking achievement performed a few years ago by Weston, who, as your readers may remember, walked 3,000 miles in sixty consecutive days—barring Sundays—covering, partly upon a prepared track, fifty miles in each day. It was said at the time that it would require two well-bred horses to successfully compete with Weston.

In past and present times for speed we have remarkable examples upon record, and among these I may mention that of Thornhill, an innkeeper from Stilton, Huntingdonshire, who rode, with a relay of horses, 213 miles in 12 hours and 17 minutes. In 1750 the Earl of March drove a team of four horses nineteen miles in one hour. There was in this case a specially prepared carriage and harness, and these were so light that it is said one man could carry them. A few months ago Lord Lonsdale gave us a splendid exhibition in all kinds of driving, both as regards speed, style, and good order, having his horse under perfect control.

Having a wish to test as far as practicable the endurance of a well-bred horse, on Monday, July 6, we started upon a 1,000-mile drive—dog-cart, passengers and luggage being registered over eight hundredweight. Beforehand, I consulted an authority as to the possibility of our covering 500 miles at an average of fifty miles a day, or 1,000 miles, averaging about forty-four miles a day, and was told that the shadow of disappointment was awaiting me, and was advised to abandon the proposed drive, as no horse would be equal to it. The result, however, has given a contradiction to this, and has proved conclusively, I maintain, that a horse has, under proper control and care, more endurance than is supposed. We covered the 1,000 miles in nineteen days, averaging over fifty-two miles a day. The longest distance—namely, sixty-two miles—was covered in the last day. When the following circumstances are taken into consideration, I claim I have broken the record of one-horse driving.

We selected roads at random, and they proved to be very hilly, covered with loose stones, generally unfavorable to the extent of half the distance covered; added to this seven days' rain. The route taken was somewhat as follows: London to York, Durham, Berwick-on-Tweed, Edinburg, Stirling, back to Glasgow, Carlisle, Kirby, Lonsdale, Barnsley, Bradford, Nottingham, Bedford, London. The horse we drove is fifteen hands high and well bred, and was in good condition when we finished the journey, as the following certificate I hold proves: "July 25—I drove with Mr. Davies four miles, and consider his cob in good condition, and no worse for the long journey he has done."

I had but one object, and that was to show what a valuable servant a horse is to man, and worthy the care and kindness extended to mine. Your readers can see that an equal task would not be performed unless an equal weight be carried and the same roads covered.—Letter to London Times.

Wornout New Hampshire Farms.

The Boston Herald, in describing the abandoned farms and homes in the hills of New Hampshire, says that beyond cutting the grass for hay nothing is done with the land. One will find several farms with only the ruined cellars to be seen to indicate what were once homesteads, while the entire acreage is given up to pasture. French Canadians are taking possession of some of the old places in the town of Rindge, but they make no attempt to keep the houses neat and attractive, using them simply to sleep and work in, and having no idea, apparently, of making permanent homes in them. The children are not sent to school if they can earn anything for their parents. The correspondent who describes these things says in a vein of mournful sentiment: "Wander through the old rooms, with their walls showing remnants of old-fashioned wall-paper clinging here and there to the plastering, the large, generous fire-place, black and sooty, with neglected crane, what stories of cheer or sadness could these walls relate. And now we can fancy an old couple, left the sole relics of their family, the children gone to the west, which absorbs so many of our youth, and they alone with the old homestead. Soon they too disappear and the auctioneer does the rest."

When the Mice Played.

"Love me, love my cat" has been given a very practical illustration by a woman who recently issued cards for a feline "at home." Twenty tabbies accepted the invitation, their mistresses acting as their amanuenses and accompanying them to the house of the hostess when the eventful day arrived. The cards were charmingly printed on purpose for the occasion and each bore the portrait of a lovely cat. It is said that the tabbies quickly made friends, and that their conduct was not only amewsing but instructive. After half an hour of mutual feline felicitations a recherche repast was served, in which various kinds of fish, daintily cooked, proved the favorite plats.

A friendship between a rat and a dog is the latest curious story of animal attachments. The dog, who lives in Northamptonshire, Eng., is a sworn enemy of all rats except one, and has made a good record for ridding his master's premises of them. His favorite, however, is allowed to feed around the kennel; and when the master attempted to kill this rat, a decided demonstration on the dog's part warned him to stop.

WAS IN THE WRONG BOX.

He Turned Out to Be Some Other Girl's Brother.

The following is the experience of a boy who had sense enough to keep his mouth shut at the proper time, says the N. Y. Tribune.

"I war waitin' on Johnny Greene's steps," he said, "jess acrost the street from my house, fur Johnny. Up comes a nice-looking feller in his best clothes.

"'How's your sister to-day?' says he, an' I says she was very well for I thort at first that he did mean my sister.

"Jess then the door opened and he says to me, 'Come in, Johnny, and talk to me while I'm waitin' for my card to go up.' So I went in with him.

"'You're a nice little chap,' says he, 'an' I've got a pocketknife which I'll give you if you promise not lose it,' and so I promised not lose it,' an he gave it to me, and I felt of the blades and saw it was a beauty.

"'I like boys,' says he, smiling at me friendly.

"'An I like you,' says I. 'You seem like a nice feller, an this knife is a dandy.'

"'I'm glad you like it,' says he, 'an perhaps you would like some candy, an wouldn't you take this quarter an get some pretty soon?'

"An' then I grinned, for I knew what that pretty soon meant—jess as soon as my sister should come down. Only you see it wasn't my sister at all. That's why I grinned, and I says, 'Thank you, I'll go pretty soon.' An' he smiled again an' tried to pat me on the head.

"Pretty soon Johnny Greene's sister comes in an' she spoke to me nice, 'cause she likes me, an' I showed her my knife, an' she smiled at me till I wanted to laff right out, but I didn't say anything about the quarter, 'cause I knew she wouldn't like that.

"He says to her: 'You have a fine little brother, haven't you?' An' she looked pleased but kind o' surprised, an' says that Johnny was a little bit mischievous, but meant well. I jest grinned again.

"In about a minute Johnny came down stairs, an' when I heard him in the hall I said I guessed I'd go now, but she called Johnny in 'cause the man seemed to like him.

"'Johnny,' says she, 'come and speak to Mr. Doolittle,' an' Mr. Doolittle jess looked sick 'cause I was snappin' the big blade in my knife.

"'Er—an' this ain't your brother?' says he, looking sour at me.

"'Oh, no,' says she, 'this is Johnny's chum, who lives across the street.

"'Come on, Johnny, says I, for I thort it was time to go. 'Come on down to the Italian fruit stand an' get some fruit.'

"Johnny was mad when I told him about the knife. 'But never mind,' says I. 'Don't you see he's got to give you one now?'"

WHERE THE DIFFERENCE LIES.

A Southern Expression of Intense Admiration for the North.

"Colonel!"

"Suh?"

"I think I'll buy this property. It suits me. With a little northern energy I can make money in this sleepy old nest. Yes, sir; I'll buy it."

"I'm very glad, suh, to heah of yoh decision. The south, suh, will welcome yo'."

"I hope it will; I hope it will." The shrewd man from Yankeeland half closed his eyes and blinked over the soft southern landscape.

"Sleepy, did I say?" he went on; "why the place is actually dead. Just look at that miserable loafer over there, sitting on a porch in the high forenoon smoking a cigar. Shiftless, lazy, useless—O, what a country this is! But—it takes a live man to wake it up. And I'm alive; O, I'm very much alive."

"I will admit, suh, that the south has not the push——"

"Push! I should say not! Look at the north; look at it, colonel. How rich it is; how full of aim, energy, progress and ambition. Isn't it?"

"I dessay yo' are correct, suh. But the pictuh, suh, yo' have drawn, hes a revehse side. The north has no sentiment, suh. It is all dollars and cents; an' they are not ovah careful how they collect the dollars in the north. There is no poetry, suh; none of the humanities flourish in yo' progressive states. We cultivate poetry, suh, in the south, where the north cultivates money."

"O, come now, colonel, you'll admit that money's what makes the mare go. Poetry! Why, hang it, that's just what ails the south. It's all dreams and no deeds. All doze and no life. We live in the north. Here you dream. Of course I respect your southern courtliness and gallantry, and even your semi-feudal ideas, but I can't admire them. They're fetishes. Don't ask me to like 'em. I'm going to live here, and I'm going to live like a northerner—for the money there is in it. Honestly, now colonel, isn't there something about the north you like?"

There was a little pause.

"I think," said the colonel, in a little while, "they is. They is something about the north I like tremendously, suh."

"O, I knew you would. Tell me what?"

"What I like about the north, suh, is that it is a devilish long way from the south, suh."—Chicago Tribune.

Remarkable Pony.

Stone Mountain, Ga., has a remarkable pony. He has not only the power of knowing to the minute his feeding hour, and an ability to distinguish persons he has met before, but can run errands. His owner has a small bag, which he hangs on the pony's neck, and on being told to "bring the mail" the pony marches off with much dignity to the postoffice, where the postmaster receives the bag, and upon depositing the mail tells him to "take it home," which he does without a mistake.

Mr. Istery—"I have just discovered why the performers at minstrel shows always blacken their faces." Mr. Curio—"Well?" Mr. Istery—"They are afraid to perpetrate their jokes until disguised."—Colorado Sun.

TESTING A TERROR.

"When we opened the old "Four X" mine in Nevada it was no time at all before a lively town was founded and hundreds of people came pouring in. In those days every community had its terror. He was supposed to be able to out-drink, out-yell, out-shoot, and out-fight everything on legs in his jurisdiction. Sometimes he was a free-lance and again he was employed as policeman. We wanted a man to protect company property, and one night a giant of a chap weighing 205 pounds and six feet tall applied for the place.

"Are you a fighter?" was the first question asked of him.

"I am," he replied, "I've had seventy-nine fights in seven weeks."

"Afraid of anything mortal?"

"Nothing mortal or immortal."

"Shoot both handed?"

"I do."

"Use the bowie-knife?"

"Perfectly at home with it, sir."

"How many men have you killed this last year?"

"Well, this has been an off year with me, as I was sick abed for six weeks, and so I haven't got but 'leven."

"Suppose, now, that a terror from some other camp should come over here to clean you out? Have you ever met any other terror and downed him—a genuine, first-class terror from the headquarters on Fighting Creek?"

"I can't say that I ever have, sir—not a regular terror."

"Then you can't tell how you would act?"

"Why, I should probably fight him."

"But you can't say for sure. However, come back at 4 o'clock this afternoon."

We sent over to Cedar Flats, five miles away, to their terror. We knew him to be the genuine stuff, and when he arrived we posted him as to what was wanted. At 4 o'clock, when our alleged terror returned to the shaft, the Cedar Flats terror suddenly waltzed out on him with a hair-raising whoop and called out:

"Whar's the bloody, bloomin' hyena who has been passing hisself off around here as a fighter? Whoop! Waugh! Ugh! Somebody pint him out to me and then tie my hands and legs while I bite his ears off!"

"Cock-a-doodle-do! Whoop! Pint him out! Let him stand before me! Whoop! Tie me all up in knots, head me up in that bar'l, and then I'll lick him or go over the cliff. Great snaps! but won't somebody show me the fellow who——!"

"I pointed to our terror, and the Cedar Flats man uttered a scream and rushed for him. The chap who had only killed 'leven men just fell right down in a heap, and it was five minutes before we could bring him to. He was whiter than flour and limpsy as a rag, and it was a-l of half an hour before he could walk away.

"How do you account for it?" I asked as he was ready to go.

"I must have gone into the wrong business," he gloomily replied.

"How do you mean?"

"I ought to have been a preacher." —M Quad.

His Wife's Pride.

The wife of an employe of the Pennsylvania railroad gave a very amusing exhibition of family pride in a dry-goods store a few days ago. Her husband is a very tall, thin man; the chest measure of his clothing is very small, and when he buys underclothing he gets the smallest size. His wife is a very large woman. She had gone into a store to purchase underclothing for her husband, and while standing at the counter a little bit of a woman came in and, seeing the goods being displayed, said:

"That is what I want; some undershirts for my husband. No. 38, please."

"What number will you have?" said the salesman, addressing the first woman.

"No. 38, please," was the reply.

The two women bought the same size garments, one buying for a big-chested and the other for a narrow-chested man. When the latter took her purchase home and displayed it to her husband he was astonished to find the shirts too big. He said:

"What the —— did you buy such big shirts for?"

"Because."

"Well, because what? I can't wear them."

"I don't care. I was not going to stand alongside of a little bit of a woman and buy shirts for a little bit of a man when she was buying shirts for a great big one. If you haven't any pride I have; that's why I bought the big shirts."—Wilmington News.

The Georgia Justice.

The joke on the Georgia rural Justice of the Peace has gained that worthy personage a national reputation; but it frequently happens that some of these jokes are no jokes at all, but plain realities.

Some time since a Justice in Haralson County, this State, granted a quarreling couple an absolute divorce, that is, he granted the woman a divorce, and it was not until she had hunted up another husband and was about to resume the matrimonial yoke that she discovered that the Justice, though granting the divorce in good faith, had exceeded his authority.

But the latest and best story in this line comes fresh from a Georgia county.

A runaway couple, pursued by an angry father, rushed into the bedroom of a sleeping Justice and demanded an immediate marriage.

Arrayed in a flowing gown of white, the startled Justice leaped from his couch, and, seeing a woman present, as quickly leaped behind the bed.

"What do you want?" he thundered, peering wildly over the headboard.

"Want to get married!" shouted the man.

"Take her and go, and God help you!" cried the Justice.

And the nuptial knot was tied.—Atlanta Constitution.

"Have you anything suitable for me?" asked the bald-headed customer of the clothing salesman. "Yes, sir; we have a choice lot of mohairs."—Smith, Gray & Co.'s Monthly.

WIT AND HUMOR.

The clergyman with a "long head" is apt to indulge in short sermons.—Boston Courier.

Burning questions are frequently discussed in insurance offices.—Pittsbury Commercial.

In a joint debate it is expected that one of the disputants will be roasted. —Lowell Courier.

Horse sense is a pretty good thing to have at times. It teaches a fellow to say neigh.—Rochester Post.

One trouble with the self-made man is that he thinks everybody should be made as he is.—New Orleans Picayune.

Defaulters who are seeking a hole to crawl out of should head for the St. Clair tunnel, which leads to Canada.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Hellofit is the name of a new explosive. It might be used by indignant men while talking into the telephone.—Rochester Express.

It is unaccountable how an operator on the stock market who buys and sells for future delivery can still be a disbeliever in a hereafter.—Boston Transcript.

Wool—"What does it signify when you see a morgue-keeper wearing a big diamond?" Van Pelt—"That the police were not in it at the death."—N. Y. Herald.

"I thought you said that Potterby was such a broad-minded man. I can't see it that way." "Perhaps you got an edgewise view of him."—Indianapolis Journal.

Enpec—"The doctor says it wouldn't take but a breath to carry me off." Mrs. Enpec—"The breath you brought home last night was strong enough." —N. Y. Herald.

A great man can disappoint his enemies most by dying, and so compelling them to hold their tongues out of obedience to the laws of public decency.—Atchison Globe.

"I think there's something that's missed about college life now," said an old time collegian. "Perhaps," suggested the professor, "what you think missed is the haze."—Baltimore American.

"Courtship is a poem," said Maud's mother in gentle tones and with a retrospective smile on her face. "So it is," replied the old man gruffly, "written in gas meter."—Washington Star.

"Why do you not eat your apple, Tommy?" "I'm waitin' till Johnny Briggs comes along. Apples tastes lots better when there's some other kid to watch you eat 'em."—Indianapolis Journal.

"I feel as fresh as a daisy," he remarked exuberantly. And the slangy girl simply remarked: "That's a first-rate simile. It would take 'a daisy' to be anything like as fresh as you are." —Washington Star.

"Let's play war," said little Tommy. "How do you play war?" asked little Eddie. "Oh, it's easy enough. You take the breadknife, and I'll take the toasting-fork." "What'll we do then?" "Nothing but stand and look at each other and both be afraid."—Detroit Free Press.

"Can you tell me," said the college youth to the village blacksmith, "why the outside of the wheel goes faster than the hub?" "No, sonny," was the reply as he put the finishing touches on the wagon he was fixing, "unless may be it's because the outside has that tired feeling."—Washington Star.

Heard in the night: "Mamma, please gimme a drink of water; I'm so thirsty." "No, you are not thirsty. Turn over and go to sleep." [A pause.] "Mamma, won't you please gimme a drink? I'm so thirsty!" If you don't turn over and go to sleep I'll get up and spank you!" [Another pause.] "Mamma, won't you please gimme a drink when you get up to spank me?" —Life.

This occurred in a city Sunday school: The teacher had been reading the story of the centurion who had great faith, and whose servant was healed at the Lord's word. The teacher had dwelt on the lesson of the story, and had seen that that was properly enforced, and then she said to a bright boy in the class: "And now can you tell me what a centurion is?" "Yes'm" said the boy very promptly, "it's a horse with a man's head on him."—Christian Register.

It was in the Sabbath-school class and little "Liz'beth" had been listening with much interest to the scriptural illustration of the shepherd and his sheep. "Now," said the teacher, "tell me who takes care of the sheep." "The shepherd," answered the class in chorus. "That is right; and who else?" There was silence for a moment. Then a little hand was raised, with "I know, teacher.' "You may tell." And Liz'beth answered with sincere emphasis, "Bo-peep."—Washington Star.

Little Pete was a good boy as well as a boy of a good deal of originality in his "notions," but he has the serious fault of being extremely forgetful. One day after having gone on an errand and forgotten what he was sent for, he exclaimed bitterly to his sister: "Oh, dear! I wish I was a snake!" "You wish you were a snake?" said his sister, horrified. "Yes, and a great long one—as much as six feet long." "Why, what for?" "So I could tie knots in myself to make me remember things."—Youth's Companion.

One of the most difficult things to do gracefully is to change the current of an unpleasant conversation. But the small boy can do it if circumstances make it necessary. "Thomas, will you please tell me why you pulled up the onions from my Donvers onion bed? How many times have I told you to keep away from the garden?" Thomas grew red in the face and his grandfather went on to depict the evil fate that was sure to befall boys who went around destroying what their elders had planted. Meantime, Thomas had pulled himself together, and, as the harangue was concluded, he said, with a smile, referring to an event of the previous week: "Pity our old rooster died, wasn't it, grandpa?"—Housekeeper's Weekly.

LOVE FOR A DAY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "DORA THORNE," "A DEAD HEART," "TWO KISSES," "THE FATAL LILIES," ETC.

CHAPTER IX.

Wednesday morning—a day never to be forgotten; the twenty-first of May—a date ever to be remembered! I rose with the sun. The morning was so beautiful that one could hardly believe in the clouds and the storm of the day before. The air was sweet and fresh after the rain; the grass was of a brighter green, the leaves had a deeper hue, and the flowers held up their heads with renewed life.

When I opened my window, the odor of the lilacs came to me. I could see far away the golden gleam of the laburnum and the tall chestnut trees. The fragrance from the lilacs sent my mind and heart back to Mark. I remembered how he had always loved the early morning, the fresh, sweet air, the glint of the sun on the leaves. But he trod no more the green fields and woodland ways that he had loved so well; the music of wind and leaf reached him no longer. A longing impatience seized me for the time when I, in Heaven's mercy, should stand by his side again.

I forgot the terrors of the previous day; I forgot all about the visitors in the house. My heart was on fire with the anguish of my bitter desolation. Never since Mark had left me on that bright July morning had I longed so eagerly for his presence. I went out, for the house seemed all too small to hold me and my great sorrow—out where I could see the blue heavens. Ah me, how fair was the morning, and how sweet were the lilacs! It could not hurt me to dream for a few minutes, to loosen the bands that sorrow had bound round me, to weep as I had wept when Mark went from me.

I went to the lilac trees, fresher and sweeter than ever since the rain, and sat down. The warm May sunshine fell around me, the birds were calling to each other, the dew lay upon the grass. I tried to forget the present, and live for a short time in the past. I pictured the May morning at Gracedieu, on my seventeenth birthday, the pretty old home buried in the trees, the distant gleam of the river, the shade of the deep green woods, and the lovely group of lilac-trees, the topmost bough of which I could not reach. I saw the dark, handsome face of my lover, so frank, so brave, so true; his dark eyes smiled into mine; his voice, than which to me earth had held no sweeter music, was in my ears.

"Oh, Mark," I cried aloud, "why could I not have died with you?"

Merciful Heaven, what was that? I rose to my feet with a cry. What was it? A figure coming slowly toward me, tall and stately, but with a drooping head, walking with slow, uncertain step. Oh, Heaven, who was it—what was it? I stood paralyzed. My heart beat so violently that I could almost hear it; my hands shook; all the warmth and color left my face. White, breathless, trembling at the same moment with terror and joy, bewildered and amazed, I stood as though my feet were rooted to the ground. What was it?

Coming slowly towards me, yet not seeing me, buried in thought, the sunshine falling on his bowed head, was Mark. Surely, if Mark had ever lived, this was he? If the sun shone in heaven, if I was sane, that was Mark—Mark, for whom I had wept as dead—my handsome, true, dear lover, come back to me! I tried to utter his name, but the sound died on my lips. I tried to move towards him, I could not stir. He was coming nearer. Ah, yes, it was Mark! Oh, my heart! I could have cried out in gratitude to Heaven, and have died. I saw the strong dear hands that had held my own; I saw the dark face, older and sadder than when we parted; I saw the loving eyes, full now of wistful sadness.

He was not dead then, but living and well! He had doubtless been to Gracedieu in search of me, and the Rector, with whom I had left my address, had sent him hither. He had been to the house to ask for me, and the servants had told him I was out in the park. He would explain his long, cruel absence. He had come back to me; he was true and loyal; he had come to make me his wife; and I—oh, Heaven, I should be happy at last.

He was nearer to me now. I grasped the low branch of a tree to keep me from falling. I called to Heaven to give me strength. My heart beat madly, my brain burned, my senses seemed almost to have left me. I saw only him, and as he came to the trees where I was standing I cried:

"Mark! Mark!"

I was mad—Heaven forgive me—quite mad. My mother had warned me not to make an idol of any creature; and here I was on my knees before this idol that I had made for myself. I kissed his hands, sobbing the while as though my heart would break, tears raining from my eyes. I could only cry:

"Mark, Heaven has sent you back to me. Oh, my love, how I love you!"

He raised me in his arms. Once again the strong clasp held me; once again the arms of my true love were around me. Would to Heaven the angel of death had smitten me as I lay there!

I heard him cry, "Nellie! Is it you, Nellie?" and the sound of the dearly-loved voice drove me mad again. I clung to him and kissed him with an anguish of passion known only to those who love as I loved.

"You have come back to me from the dead," I cried. "Oh, my love, welcome! I have never doubted you, Mark, all through the weeks and months and years. I have loved you just the same. I said always that if you were living you would come; if dead, I would take my love and faith untarnished to you. Speak to me, Mark. I have hungered for the sound of your voice and for the sight of your face. Speak to me."

I heard him whisper words that seemed to me like a prayer.

"My true, loyal Nellie!" he said.

"I knew you would come to me if living, Mark. Of late, as you did not come, I felt sure that you were dead. I have never doubted you for one moment, Mark."

In a passion of joy and gratitude I put my arms round his neck, telling him, with kisses and tears, how glad and happy I was, how I thanked Heaven, how my happiness was all the greater because my anguish had been so keen. He was strangely silent. But I heeded not. When my rapturous words were over, he would talk to me in the old, sweet, grave fashion.

"You may kiss my lips, Mark," I said, "for I have kept my promise. The kiss you left on them is there still; no one has touched them. I never swerved, even in my thoughts, for one moment from you. If you had never returned, and I had lived fifty years longer, I should have been just as true. All other men are but shadows. Oh, Mark, teach me—you are wiser and better than I—teach me how to thank Heaven that you have come back to me."

Strangely silent was he; but, as I remembered, great emotion often causes silence. I could not see him, for he had drawn me to him. I could only stand still, folded in his close embrace, and murmur to him all the loving words that came from my heart—how I had yearned for him—how long the days, the weeks, the months and years had been—how I had thought of him unceasingly—how, feeling sure that he was in Heaven, I had made Heaven the home of my heart—how I had been in many places and seen many men, but there was none like him, none to be compared with him. All the loving thoughts that had ever passed through my mind were poured out like water beneath his feet. The wind faintly stirred the green boughs above our heads, the birds were singing blithely, and I could hear my own voice rippling on, but not his—not his.

A gust of wind blew a lilac-spray right into my face. I seized it and kissed it passionately.

"How strange, Mark, that you should come back to me in the time of the lilacs! They seem almost like living friends. But, Mark, speak to me. I say all; you say nothing; speak to me."

Still I could not see his face.

"Great sorrow made me dumb, Mark; great joy gives me words," I said. "Tell me that you are pleased to see me, to find me."

"Nellie, my true, loving Nellie!" he said.

And I was content. Oh, wondrous love! I was content and happy. I too stood for some minutes in silence, the dark, handsome, beloved face bending over mine.

"I believe those happy birds know all about it, Mark," I said. "Hark, how they are singing. If I had known what to-day would bring, how I should have longed for it to come! Oh, Mark, what a debt you have to pay me! What hours I have spent in praying for you! What tears I have shed! You must repay me all those prayers and tears. Mark, raise your head and let me look at you. Do you know that I have hardly seen your face yet?"

But for all answer, he drew me nearer to him and whispered:

"My dear, loving Nellie!"

I was quite content, safe in the shelter of his arms, my happy face resting on his breast.

"Do you know, Mark," I said, "I was so sure you would come back to me in July, when the four years were ended, that I spent the greater part of every day, while the month lasted, under the trees? Since the world began no woman has ever loved more truly than I love you. I am proud of my faith, Mark—proud of my unswerving truth—proud that I knew and understood you so well—proud that no shadow of doubt has ever dimmed the sun of my great love."

Still was he strangely silent, and the fiery passion of my words was wearing away. I wanted to look into the beloved face. I wanted the dear lips to lavish love on me, as mine had on him.

"Mark, look at me!" I cried, in a rapture of loving impatience. "It seemed to me, as you came along, that you were sad and melancholy. Look at me. See the love that beams in my face and in my eyes for you."

But his head drooped lower, and he drew me nearer to him.

A thought came to me that possibly he had been ill, and I knew how illness changes people. Yes, he had been ill, and seeing me had been too much for him. Perhaps if he could have expressed his emotion in a torrent of words as I had done, he would have been better.

"Mark," I said, "look at me; let me see your face. I am beginning to fear that you are ill."

He raised his head, and once more the dark eyes looked into my own. Ah me, the face was changed. The youth, the hope, the brightness was gone; it was pale, careworn, wistful. But the eyes had their old power over me.

"Have you been ill, Mark?" I asked, anxiously.

"No," he replied, "not in body; I have been in mind."

"I will cheer you and make you better. Why, when you went away, your face was bright and brave. What has changed it?"

Was I mistaken, or could it have been a moan that had fallen from his lips.

"Mark," I cried, "you have been in sore trouble, I am afraid; but it is all over now. We shall never be parted again. Why—why do you not speak to me as I speak to you?"—and again my trembling, burning hands clung to him, again the tears rained from my eyes, and the passionate love of my heart found expression in whispered words.

Ah me, he was strangely silent. And it seemed to me, now that the first shock of surprise was over, that the figure to which I clung was growing rigid.

"Oh, my love," I cried, "speak to me—to me, Nellie Chester, your wife who is to be, the one woman in the world who loves you with a great love! Why do you not speak to me, Mark?"

"I have not yet recovered from my surprise, Nellie," he said.

"Surprise!" I repeated. "Why, Mark, you knew I was here, did you not?"

"No, Nellie; I had not the remotest idea of it," he replied.

"You did not know that I was here? You did not come purposely to find me?" I cried.

"No," he answered sadly, turning his face from me.

"Then," I asked, in wonder, "why did you come? What has brought you here?"

He looked at me, and I saw how full of sorrow and distress his face was.

"Nellie," he said, gently, "will you tell me what brings you here?"

"Do you not know?" I asked.

"I do not. I cannot even imagine," he said.

"I am living here as companion to Lady Yorke," I said. "I waited in the old home at Gracedieu until the four years were over. I lived alone, longing, hoping against hope for news of you every day, afraid to go away lest you should come during my absence."

He laid his hand caressingly on my head, and the horrible chill that had begun to creep through my veins ceased.

"My sweet, loyal Nellie!" he said; but in some vague way the words seemed forced from him.

"Then, you see, Mark," I went on, happy from the caress of his dear hand, "my money was gone, and I was obliged to seek a home. I have been as happy here as I could be anywhere without you."

"You are Lady Yorke's companion?" he said, as though he could not recover from his surprise.

"Have you been to Gracedieu?" I asked.

"No," he answered in a low tone.

Ah, well, he was here. Why he had come mattered little. He would tell me all when he recovered from his surprise. There would be no secrets, no mysteries between us. I unclasped his hands and held them in mine.

"You are tired, Mark, and not well, I am sure," I said; "let us sit down and talk quietly."

"Oh, Nellie, Nellie, you are killing me with every word!" he cried.

"Killing you, Mark? Why, I would die a hundred times over for you! I have done so. Every day of your long absence has been like a day of death to me."

"Hush, my darling!" he cried, "for Heaven's sake, hush!"

"But why, Mark? Why must I not speak to you? Why are you so strange? Why are you distant and silent?"

But for all answer he held up his hand and repeated, "Hush, my darling."

Why should that deadly chill come over me? Why should my limbs tremble? There could be nothing to fear. Mark was living, and he was with me. I beat down the horrible rising doubt. I would not listen to it. What could there be wrong between Mark and me? I sat down upon a rustic bench and said:

"Sit here with me, Mark, and we can talk at our ease."

But he did not sit down, and the terrible fear grew. I could feel the warm color leave my face, and the blood in my veins grow chill. I could have cried aloud in my agony. But I must know what it all meant. The change in my face startled him.

"Nellie," he cried, "for Heaven's sake do not look like that; I cannot bear it! Do not let the joy and love die from your face yet, my darling—not just yet."

"Why must they die at all? Now that you have come back, why can we not be happy as we were? There is no reason, Mark, is there?"

Paler, graver, sadder than ever, he took my hand in his.

"I have not the courage to speak!" he cried. "Heaven forgive me, I cannot speak!"

"Is it that you have no money, Mark?" I asked, with a sudden sense of relief. "Oh, my darling, I do not care in the least about that. Money is nothing when we have love. Ah, I see now, Mark! You failed in that Indian undertaking, and you do not like to tell me so. Why, my love, I would sooner have one lock of your hair than all the wealth of the world. If any one had left me the largest fortune you could imagine, what would it avail me without you? Ah, Mark, you should know me better."

"I wish to Heaven it was so! I wish I stood before you a penniless beggar. It is not that. I am a rich man now, Nellie, and my riches are as ashes to me."

"Why, Mark?" I asked.

Oh, why did he not love me with the frank, caressing love of love? My heart hungered and thirsted for it.

"I am a coward," he said. "Oh, Nellie, loyal, sweet, true Nellie, can you not guess?"

"I can guess nothing," I replied, piteously. "Tell me what is wrong, Mark."

I began to see that something was terribly amiss, but my faith in him was unshaken.

"Tell me, Mark. No matter what it may be, you can trust me. You know there is no end to my love. If you are in trouble or distress, I shall only love you the more. You have come back to me, darling, and your sorrows, as are your pleasures, are mine. Perhaps I can help you—the mouse helped the lion once. I have a little money; my money, my love, my life are all yours."

The dark, handsome face grew paler, the firm lips trembled; I saw great drops on the broad forehead, I saw mortal agony in the dark eyes.

"Mark," I cried, piteously, "there is something wrong."

"Yes," he replied, slowly, "there is, as you say, something wrong."

"You will tell me what it is?" I asked.

"I must; but when I do so you will hate me. You will hate me, and send me from your presence, never to see you again."

All the love, the generosity, the passion of my heart was roused. I hate him! Rather could the sun bring darkness!

"I could never hate you, Mark, my dear love, never even dislike you. You do not know me; you have forgotten in all these years how I love you. I gave you my love for ever and for ever; Mine was never 'love for a day,' Mark; it was 'for ever.' I love you so well and so truly that nothing can part us. If these hands I kiss now had committed the most grievous crimes, I would kiss them still. You could never kill my love, Mark. I would go with you into exile; I would stand by your side on the scaffold and suffer for you."

"Hush, Nellie!" he said, laying his hand on my lips. "Every word you say is as a sword in my heart."

"But it is true, Mark—it is all true. I could not love you more if I tried."

"I believe it," he said. "My beautiful Nellie! My true Nellie! Oh, how can I ask pardon of Heaven?" He knelt by my side and drew my head upon his breast, and smoothed the ripples of my hair with the old familiar gesture I had loved so well. "Poor Nellie! True, loving Nellie! How can Heaven pardon me?"

I had ceased to weep, ceased to wonder. Mark had come back to me, but there was something wrong. I felt that he was hushing me to rest in his arms for a few minutes before he told me, and I was content. What Mark did was always best.

"Nellie," he said at last—and his voice trembled with emotion—"seeing how well you love me, I could almost wish you were dying now. If the light of the sun could but strike us both dead! You tremble, Nellie. Love, be still; rest for one moment; I will tell you all then."

And I clung the more closely to him. Should ruin, sorrow, death come, what mattered it while those arms sheltered me? A mother soothing her child in the delirium of fever could not have been more tender than Mark was in that hour to me.

"You will hate me, Nellie, when you hear all; you will send me from you, and I shall never see you again."

"Does it look like it, love?" I whispered. "There is little fear of that."

Still he rocked me in his arms, calling—

"Nellie, Nellie, each moment makes it worse, makes it harder! Ah, Nellie, why have you been so true to me?"

"Why?" I replied, with a glad little laugh. "I could not help it; I was true to you naturally. I turned to you, Mark, as the sunflower turns to the sun."

"Oh, my darling, my beautiful love," he said, "you are so much better than I am. You are noble and loyal; I am—oh, Heaven, that I should have to say such words of myself!—I am a coward and a renegade!"

"You mustn't say such things of yourself," I cried. "You are Mark Upton; and that, in my eyes, means all that is most noble."

"Hush, Nellie!" There was pain in his face, anguish in his eyes. "Nellie, I must tell you. Oh, my dear, do not look at me with those loving eyes. Would that I had died before this! My arms must not hold you more, Nellie. My dear, lost love, I am married!—Heaven help me, I was married more than a year ago!"

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

TOO SYMPATHETIC.

How the Manager of a Press Syndicate Was Disappointed.

The manager of a press syndicate sat in his easy chair, and as his eye wandered with satisfaction over the luxurious appointments of his office he said to his private secretary: "How many publishers have accepted that story I bought the other day from Squawker, the rising young Wilkie Collins I discovered in the police courts?"

"Ten, seignior," replied the respectful secretary.

"How much does each pay for it?"

"Fifty dollars."

"What did I give the fellow for it?"

"One hundred dollars."

"Too much, too much," growled the manager. "These scribblers are too well treated altogether. I must do better than this. Generosity and business ought, in the nature of things, to be separated as widely as possible. The next one that comes in here, just watch me turn him down."

His reflections were interrupted by the entrance of a young woman with a roll of manuscript in her hand and a face and figure that quickly melted what the manager used for a heart, says the N. Y. Tribune. How could he bear to hurt her feelings!

"I have written a story——," she began.

"Yes, yes," he interrupted. "But I assure you, miss, there is no demand for stories just now."

"Perhaps not for ordinary stories," she replied, with pretty assurance, "but this one is different. The plot is entirely original, and——"

"I have no doubt of it," said the manager, "but the remuneration for such work, even where original, is so small, and so many are engaged in it, that it really is not worth your while, I am sure, to engage in it."

"The heroine on her death-bed writes to a man who never saw her, telling him of her love for him. Then she recovers and tries to cut her throat with mortification and——"

"Mortification is a hard thing to cut with, I know," said the manager, "and few people can manage it, though when once it is inserted in the throat it is generally fatal, yet for all that——"

"I don't understand," she gasped.

"I say the story, novel though it may be, would not sell. I could not offer you anything worth while for it."

"Nothing at all?" she sighed, and her violet eyes filled with tears.

"I am ashamed to name the small amount of its actual value to me," said the manager, quailing before those tears.

"Oh, don't mind that," she moaned, "I can bear it I think."

"Well," said the manager nervously, "if you insist I should say about $1.50," and he threw himself back in his chair and mentally drew himself together to resist the flood of grief and reproach he expected. He was disappointed.

"Do you mean it?" she chirped gayly, jumping off her chair and advancing toward him. "A dollar and a half! Take it! Take it! Oh, my!" and she slapped the manuscript down on his desk, held out her hand for the money, took it with a lavish smile, thanked him profusely and vanished.

"Jewed again," grumbled the manager as he dropped the story into his waste-paper basket.

An Inebriated Cow.

In spite of Pasadena's prohibition policy a poor cow got drunk there recently. The story is told by La Progress, the French paper of Los Angeles, as follows: Some days ago one of our countrymen, who lives at Pasadena, was astonished to see one of his best cows lying apparently dying in front of the barn. The animal lay there inert, with open eyes, oblivious of everything. The man called a verteriuary surgeon, who could not diagnose the case, and a butcher was sent for to bleed the animal. He was some time in arriving, and when he did come the cow was found eating at a haystack, but with legs a little uncertain. An investigation followed, and it was found that the cow had eaten copiously of the refuse of a neighboring winery. This stuff, composed of grape skins and stems, had fermented and induced a state of intoxication.

His Credentials.

It doesn't make any difference which United States Senator it was so long as the story told of him cannot be fixed upon anybody he can get his hands on. Suffice it to say it was a United States Senator and he had come to Washington to be inducted into his high office. He was out in a committee-room with two or three Senators during the preliminaries.

"By the way," inquired one, "have you got your credentials?"

"You bet I have," he replied on the spot, yanking a big wallet out of his pocket and slapping it down on the table.

It was a clean give away, but they never told anybody except in executive session, and that is how it leaked out. —Detroit Free Press.

Beware of the Gunner.

Quester—They tell me your friend, Leery, has taken the notion he'd like to be a gunner, and has purchased an outfit with the intention of trying his hand at the sport this fall. Is that so?

Jester—I've heard so.

Quester—Well, if ever he goes out with a party he'll be apt to be made game of.

Jester—Excuse me, but if he is the poor marksman they say he is, it will be the unfortunate party that goes out with him that will be made game of.—Boston Courier.

The Loyal Servant.

A prominent member of the German nobility is very intimate with a well-known actress, notwithstanding he is married to a young and charming wife. Not long since Herr von Strubelitz, which is his name, gave his servant a note and a bouquet to carry to the actress with his compliments.

"I rely, Johann, on your secrecy," said the nobleman.

"You may well do so," replied the faithful servant, "for I never divulge any disreputable transactions I may manage for my employers. Ask your wife if I am not to be relied on in affairs of this character." — Brandon Bucksaw.

The Earthworm.

Darwin used to say that the most powerful worker we know is the earthworm. Without the earthworm we could not live. Earth-worms make the soil fertile. According to Darwin's calculations each particle of the earth to a depth of two feet is brought to the surface at least once every hundred years. But this estimate is too low. It has been recently calculated that this renovation of the soil takes place every twenty-seven years. There are from 150 to 200 worms in each square yard of earth ten inches in depth.

HOW'S THIS?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.

WEST & TRAUX, Wholesale Druggists Toledo, Ohio.

WALDING, KINNAN & MARAIN, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, Ohio.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price 75c. per bottle. Sold by all Druggists.

"August Flower"

The Hon. J. W. Fennimore is the Sheriff of Kent Co., Del., and lives at Dover, the County Seat and Capital of the State. The sheriff is a gentleman fifty-nine years of age, and this is what he says: "I have "used your August Flower for several years in my family and for my "own use, and found it does me "more good than any other remedy. "I have been troubled with what I "call Sick Headache. A pain comes "in the back part of my head first, "and then soon a general headache "until I become sick and vomit. "At times, too, I have a fullness "after eating, a pressure after eating "at the pit of the stomach, and "sourness, when food seemed to rise "up in my throat and mouth. When "I feel this coming on if I take a "little August Flower it relieves "me, and is the best remedy I have "ever taken for it. For this reason "I take it and recommend it to "others as a great remedy for Dyspepsia, &c." ③

G. G. GREEN, Sole Manufacturer,
Woodbury, New Jersey, U. S. A.

TUMORS

Internal or External, successfully Treated by New Method. No knife; no pain or shock. For pamphlet write The Sanitarium, Union Springs, N.Y.

Paper For Sale.

The leading Republican newspaper at a good county seat. Good job office. Address Y care M. C. Newspaper Co., Mason City, Ia.-1a*

Mining Stock A Safe Investment.

When a developed mining property is capitalized on a business basis and operated on business principles instead of a stock jobbing basis, it must certainly be entitled to the same business recognition as any other line of investments. It is high time that our unequaled mining interests of this great southwest should demand and occupy a higher standing than it has during the past ten years. The enterprising business men of Pittsburg, Kansas, have taken the first step in this line by organizing a million dollar gold mine on a value of actual cost, offering stock to the public on the same basis. It should and doubtless will meet with great success. If the reader has a few dollars to invest, he should write for information and stock. Their address is Pittsburg-Mexican Mining Company, Pittsburg, Kansas.—Fort Scot Monitor.

Farm For Sale.

A No. 1 Improved Stock Farm of 365 Acres for Sale Cheap.

THE PORTLAND STOCK FARM.

Situated adjoining the village of Portland, on the C. M. & St. P. R. R. 4 miles east of Mason City, Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa. Farm fenced into 18 different fields and yards, all hog tight and horse high. Farm buildings and all improvements are first class. Two large troughs soft spring water five rods from barn; farm also watered by Lime Creek and several springs. Twenty acres of timber surround buildings, also one thousand (1,000) rods of beautiful willow hedge on farm, 20 to 75 feet high, mostly bordering on the highways. Four large barns (hay capacity 200 tons) with five hundred (500) feet of basement walls. A large water-power roller mill and cheese and butter factory join farm. A large modern, first-class farm house, built in 1890.

Mason City, the county seat of Cerro Gordo county, and the Lexington of Iowa, is a beautiful little city of about five thousand (5,000) inhabitants. She has just completed one of the best mile tracks in the state, which, with the fair grounds, have been built at an expense of $20,000.

Price of farm, forty-five dollars ($45.00) per acre. For particulars and picture of farm and buildings, call on or address the owner at Portland, Cerro Gordo County, Iowa.

A. S. FELT, prop.

PILES RUDY'S PILE SUPPOSITORY is a sovereign remedy for Piles (bleeding, itching, blind, inward, etc.) whether of recent or long standing. It gives instant relief, and effects a radical and permanent cure. No surgical operation required. Try it and relieve your sufferings. Send for circular and free sample. Only 50 cents a box. For sale by druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of price

MARTIN RUDY, Lancaster, Pa.

THE OLD DOCTOR'S Cotton Root Pills LADIES' FAVORITE.

ALWAYS RELIABLE and perfectly SAFE. The same as used by thousands of woman all over the United States, in the OLD DOCTORS private mail practice, for 38 years, and not a single bad result. Money returned if not as represented. Send 4 cents (stamps) for sealed particulars. Dr. WARD & CO., 117 N. 8th St., St. Louis, Mo.

WANTED.

$15 A WEEK. ANY LADY, employed or unemployed, can make this for a few hours work each day. Salary or com. $10 samples free.

Ad. E. BENJAMIN & CO., 115 N. 8th St., ST. LOUIS, MO.

ANY LADY can get a valuable secret that cost me $5.00, and a rubber shield for 30 cents.

Mrs. V. M. APP. CO.
115 N. 8th STREET, ST. LOUIS, MO.

The WEAK made STRONG

FREE TRIAL { In Nervous Debility, Lost Vitality, Weakness and Decay, sent free for 12 cents postage.

Address Dr. Ward Office, 117 N. 8th Street, St. Louis, Mo.

FAT FOLKS REDUCED

Mrs. Alice Maple, Oregon, Mo., writes: "My weight was 320 pounds, now it is 195, a reduction of 125 lbs." For circulars address, with 6c., Dr. O. W. F. SNYDER, McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, Ill.

WE WANT AGENTS FOR THE FASTEST SELLING article. Big money. No risk. WM. BACHALE, 253 Bissell Street, Chicago, Ill.

$3.75 A DAY and steady work right at home for any man or lady. Write Stone & Wellington, Madison, Wis.

MEN Wanted; salary and expenses. Permanent place. Apply at once Browne Bros. Co., Nurserymen, Chicago

Mason City Newspaper Co-91-52

-:- BUY STOCK -:-

IN A

Good Gold Mine!

It will make you from 100 to 400 per cent. profit within two years. Don't wait; write for information now.

Pittsburg-Mexican Mining Company,
PITTSBURG, KANSAS.

MASON CITY, IOWA,
Cancer Infirmary

The Only Reliable Institution in the Northwest, Homelike and Pleasant.

DR. M. V. MAYFIELD, the Specialist, has been more than successful for thirteen years. No Knife. No Caustics.

H. E. MOORE, the President, GUARANTEES A CURE OR NO PAY.

PISO'S REMEDY FOR CATARRH.—Best. Easiest to use. Cheapest. Relief is immediate. A cure is certain. For Cold in the Head it has no equal.

CATARRH

It is an Ointment, of which a small particle is applied to the nostrils. Price 50c. Sold by druggists or sent by mail. Address: E. T. HAZELTINE, Warren, Pa.

A Complete Reference Library

AT ABOUT 2 CTS. A DAY.

REVISED ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA

20 Large Octavo Volumes, 7,000 Pages, 8,000,000 Words, and 97 Maps Printed in Colors, Bound in Jute Manilla.

AND THE WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS FOR ONE YEAR

ALL FOR $7.50!

This is the GREATEST OFFER ever made by any Newspaper. The Revised Encyclopædia Britannica is a Dictionary of Art, Science and Literature to which is added descriptions of American Cities with a History of their Origin and Growth, together with Accurate Information of their Situation, Population, Resources, etc., etc.

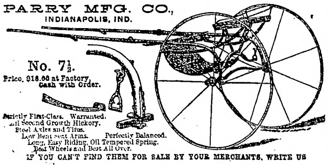
The Best, Cheapest, Completest and Latest Revised Encyclopædia and the Greatest Newspaper,

THE WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS FOR ONE YEAR FOR $7.50!

AND WE PAY THE FREIGHT.

Address WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS, St. Paul, Minn.

PARRY MFG. CO.,
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.



No. 7½.
Price, $18.00 at Factory, Cash with Order.

Strictly First-Class. Warranted.
All Second Growth Hickory.
Steel Axles and Tires.
Low Bent Seat Arms. Perfectly Balanced.
Long, Easy Riding, Oil Tempered Spring.
Best Wheels and Best All Over.

IF YOU CAN'T FIND THEM FOR SALE BY YOUR MERCHANTS, WRITE US

WE are making a specialty this season of what we call our PARAGON HARNESS. Made of the FINEST STOCK and the very BEST WORKMANSHIP. Such a harness cannot be bought for less than $25. at retail. But we are willing, in order to introduce it, to SELL ONE SET ONLY to one person as a sample for $16.50.

$25.00 HARNESS FOR $16.50

IN GENUINE RUBBER $18.50.

DESCRIPTION OF HARNESS.

A fine Buggy Harness stitched twelve stitches to the inch, except traces which are stitched ten. Is made to represent a $50 harness. It has a 3 or 3½ inch bend leather pad saddle, with covered seat and jockeys; is made from fine stock. Bridle is of usual dimensions, has fine blinds, nice leather front and beautiful rosettes with glass centers. New nickel bit. Check-rein, either overdraw with nose-piece, or side check. Nice russet or black reins. The breast-collar, neck-strap, breeching and turn folds are made either of patent enamel or plain harness leather as preferred and the layers on the same are cut wide and straight, and being stitched so very fine and nicely creased, give to the harness a costly custom-made appearence. The hip and back straps are doubled and stitched, nicely creased and finished throughout. Roxloops of beautiful design are on custom-made work. Trimmings either Davis Rubber, Nickel Wire or Brass Wire, or a Fancy style. We refer you to the publishers of this paper as to our responsibility. Remit by Express or Money Order. Money refunded if goods are not satisfactory.

BOSTON HARNESS CO., Central Junction, Mass.

Red Lake Falls Iron Works,

P. & J. MEEHAN, Proprietors.

J. Z PERRON, Manager.

SAW AND GRIST MILL

MACHINERY MADE AND REPAIRED.

Repairing Thresher Engines

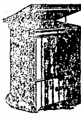
AND BOILERS AND

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS

Circular Saws Hammered. Satisfaction Guaranteed, Correspondenc solicited.

BRING IN YOUR WORK

Scrap Brass and Copper Bought.



PERFECTION IN BUTTER MAKING.

The O. K. OUTFIT EXCELS THEM ALL.

THE O.K. CREAMERY

Has the largest cooling surface; takes less cooling materials less labor, and gives Best Results. All cream raised between milkings. Skimming Glass whole depth of can, showing condition of milk without touching Creamery. Send for O. K. Catalogue.

JOHN S. CARTER, Sole Manf'r, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

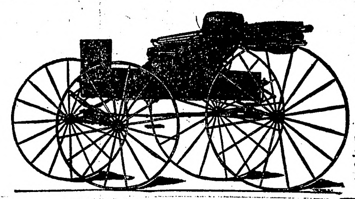
"Seeing is Believing."

And a good lamp must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer hasn't the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue, and we will send you a lamp safely by express—your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.

ROCHESTER LAMP CO., 42 Park Place, New York City.

"The Rochester."



WARRANTED WAGONS & BUGGIES

MANUFACTURED BY

EASY WAGON GEAR CO.

DETROIT, MICH.

If you wish the easiest riding, most durable and attractive Wagon or Buggy made, ask your Dealer to show you these goods. A written warranty furnished with every one. Take no other. You may as well have the BEST. It costs no more than an inferior article.

CATALOGUE SENT IF REQUESTED.

We Would Like to Call the Attention of

Capitalists

Manufacturers and Others Desiring a Place for

INVESTMENT

To the

Superior Advantages of

RED LAKE FALLS

Its Many WaterPowers and other natural advantages. It is only a question of a few years until this will be one of the leading cities of Minnesota. Investment in real estate or water privileges are sure to secure to the investors handsome returns.

WE RE

In the Cnter of Vast

Farming District.

Yearly consuming large amounts of imported products of manufactures. This vast tract of land is watered by the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers. Within the limits of the city are

12 DISTINCT WATER POWERS.

The only natural water powers on these streams. There re fine openings for paper and pulp mills, woolen and other factories. Parties outside desiring any information concerning property, address

LOVELL DIAMOND CYCLES.

STRICTLY HIGH GRADE.

No. 1, Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 2, Cushion Tires, $95.00
No. 3, Ladies' Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 3 C, Ladies' Cushion Tires, $95.00
No. 4, Convertible Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 4, C, " Cushion Tires, $95.00

OUR Cushion Tires ARE Warranted ALL PARTS Interchangeable.

$85.00

No better machine made at any price.

Bicycle Catalogue Free.

$85.00

JOHN P. LOVELL ARMS CO.,
MANUFACTURERS, BOSTON, MASS.

Send six cents in stamps for our 100 page Illustrated Catalogue of Guns, Rifles, Revolvers, Sporting Goods of all kinds, etc.

ANDERSON'S SHORTHAND TYPEWRITER
Prints A Word at One Stroke.

THIS is the machine that is used in the Office, Court-room, and for reporting lectures and sermons.

While its speed is greater than any other known method, it is so simple that any intelligent person can gain a speed of 100 or more words per minute, in five or six weeks, without the aid of an instructor. Circulars and testimonials sent to all who mention this paper.

E. T. PIERCE, FAYETTE, OHIO,
Sole Agent for U. S. and Canada.

THE NEW WEBSTER

JUST PUBLISHED—ENTIRELY NEW.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

A GRAND INVESTMENT for the Family, the School, or the Library.

Revision has been in progress for over 10 Years. More than 100 editorial laborers employed. $300,000 expended before first copy was printed. Critical examination invited. Get the Best.

Sold by all Booksellers. Illustrated pamphlet free.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

RALPH & BOURDON,

Proprietors of the

CITY DRAY LINE.

WOOD & COAL

Anything in our line done Promptly and at very Reasonable Rates.

GIVE US A CALL

INDIANA RANGE CO.

MANUFACTURERS OF WROUGHT STEEL RANGES

Guaranteed to be the most economical, most durable and most perfect Range on the market. Suitable for hard or soft coal, or wood.

Send for catalogue to

INDIANA RANGE CO.
EVANSVILLE, IND.

PASTOR KOENIG'S NERVE TONIC

Sleeplessness Cured. IV

I am glad to testify that I used Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic with the best success for sleeplessness, and believe that it is really a great relief for suffering humanity.

E. FRANK, Pastor,
St. Severin, Keylerton P. O., Pa.

Does What It Purports to Do.

PIKETON, Ohio, March 2, 1891.

I went with my brother to see the Rev. Koenig and he gave the Nerve Tonic to him—the first I ever heard of it—and it cured him. Since then I keep Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic on hand in my store and have sold it with good satisfaction, and believe if directions are followed it will do what is recommended.

JOHN W. HALEY.

FREE—A Valuable Book on Nervous Diseases sent free to any address, and poor patients can also obtain this medicine free of charge.

This remedy has been prepared by the Reverend Pastor Koenig, of Fort Wayne, Ind., since 1876, and is now prepared under his direction by the

KOENIG MED. CO., Chicago, Ill.

Sold by Druggists at $1 per Bottle. 6 for $5. Large Size, $1.75. 6 Bottles for $9.

The Police Gazette

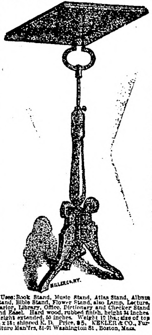
Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensations, and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes. Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 3 weeks for $1.00. Send Five Cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX,
Franklin Square, New York City

Good Looks.

Good looks are more than skin deep, depending upon a heathy condition of all the vital organs. If the Liver be inactive you have a Bilious Look, if your stomach be disordered you have a Dyspeptic Look and if your Kidneys be affected you have a Pinched Look. Secure good health and you will have good Looks. Electric Bitters is the great alterative and Tonic and acts directly on these vital organs. Cures Pimples, Blotches, Boils and gives a good complexion. Sold at W. A. Schreiter's Drugstore, 50c per bottles,

Adjustable Extension Stand,



Uses: Book Stand, Music Stand, Atlas Stand, Album Stand, Bible Stand, Flower Stand, also Lamp, Lecture, Parlor, Library, Office, Dictionary and Checker Stand and Easel. Hard wood, rubbed finish, height 34 inches. Height extended, 50 inches. Weight 12 lbs.; size of top 14 x 18; shipped K. D. Price, $5. KEELER & CO., Furniture Man'frs, 81-91 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

ADAM SCHMITZ

DEALER IN

Horse Furnishing Goods,

5/A HORSE BLANKETS
5/A HORSE BLANKETS

EVERYBODY WANTS ONE.

Two or three dollars for a 5/A Horse Blanket will save double its cost. Your horse will eat less to keep warm and be worth fifty dollars more.

LIGHT AND HEAVY HARNESS, Whips, Combs, Brushes, Trunks, Valises.

The celebrated STANDARD HORSE AND CATTLE FOOD. Every stock owner should test its merits. For sale by ADAM SCHMITZ.

Brodway Red Lake Falls

Librarian
Minnesota State
Hist. Society

RED LAKE FALLS NEWS.

JAS. MEEHAN JR. / P. MEEHAN } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS. OFFICIAL PAPER OF CITY

Vol. VIII No. 52 RED LAKE FALLS, POLK COUNTY, MINESOTA, DECEMBER 24, 1891. TERMS, $1.50 PER YEAR

CHRISTMAS - IS - COMING!

AND AS USUAL SANTA CLAUS IS MAKING HIS HEADQUARTERS AT

The Drug and Jewelry Store,

Where can be found the finest assortment of

Toys and Holiday Goods, ALBUMS TOILET CASES, WORK BOXES, DOLLS, CUPS AND SAUCERS, ROCKING HORSES, ETC, ETC. Something Nice and Cheap

Remember, we have the goods. Call and see us at the old stand.

W. J. Flack, Proprietor; Miss Mattie Gervais, Assistant.

☞P. S.—Also Watches, Jewelry and Musical Goods in Large Variety.

Joseph Smith & Co.

HAVE, AS USUAL, A COMPLETE Stock of General Merchandise, Including a Fine Assortment of Goods Suitable For Holiday Gifts.

A large stock of Ladies Winter Dress Goods, Cloaks, etc. and general furnishing goods.

A Large Stock of Gents Furnishings. Call and Examine Stock.

Frank E. Hunt,

DEALER IN

GENERAL : HARDWARE.

P & J MEEHAN,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. J. HOWE & CO)

Manufacturers and Dealers in

LUMBER,

LATH,

SHINGLES

Sash, Doors, Moldings, Building Paper,

Yards and Office on Main St.

Terrebonne.

Mrs. R. St. Marie left on Sunday evening for a two month's visit to Canada.

Mrs. O. Moreau left Sunday for Canada where she will spend some time visiting relatives. Ovide wears a somewhat sombre look since her departure.

The Badger school will close the 24th for a two weeks vacation during the holdays.

Enrolled 35.

Daily attendance.

ROLL OF HONOR.

Agnes Montreuil.
Charley Montreuil.
Ulalie Laplante.
Lumena St. Yves.
Melia Laplante.
Alma Robillard.
Rebecca Sincartier.
Edmond Montreuil.
Mary Robillard.
Josephine Ducharme.

FLORA ST. YVES, Teacher.

Course of Sermons.

Beginning with Sabbath evening, January 3d, 1892, I hope to begin a course of sermons setting forth the evidences of Christianity. The purpose of these sermons is to bring before the public the different arguments that support the teachings of Christ and the Apostles which are the foundation of all Christian belief. The public are invited to attend these meetings. The subjects for the different sermons will be as follows:

Genuineness and Authenticity of the Gospel, Jan. 3d.

Evidences Derived from the Gospels, Jan. 17th.

The Resurrection, Jan 31st.

Testimony of the Apostles," Feb. 14th.

Paul's Conversion, Feb. 28th.

Evidences as Furnished by Christianity, March 13th.

And possibly a seventh will be delivered on March 27th on Evidences as Derived from Intuition. This one has not been determined upon so may not be given. If any change should be found necessary in this course we will endeavor to give the notice through this paper.

J. S. MCCORNACK,
Pastor Presbyterian Church.

A Warning—Don't Use Big Words.

In promulgatione soteric cogitations or articulating superficial sentimentalities and philosoyhical or psychological observations, beware of platitudinous ponderosity. Let your statemants possess a clarified conciseness, comacted comprehensibleness, caolescent consistency and a concentaated cogency. Eschew all conglomerations of flatulent garrulity, jejune babblement and asinins affectations. In tryin8 impress upon others the superiority of the Wisconsin Central Lines, and why you and so many others use this thoroughfare from St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and Ashland to Milwaukee, Chicago and points east and south, it is not necessary to use jawbreakers. Let your extemoraneous dercantings and unpremeditated eqpatiations have intelligibility and veracious vivacity, without rhodomonade ar thrasonscal bombast. Sedulously avoid all polyoqual verbosity and vandiloquent vapadity, double entenders, prurient jocosity and pestiferous profanity, onscrent or apparent. In other words talk plaily, naturally, sensibly, and thrutnful say the Wisconsin Central Lines is THE route, and that ends it.

Mrs. Morin, nee Miss Lillie Blair, died at San Fransisco the 11th, inst., leaving two children.

Monday Morning's Conflagration.

Monday morning the fire department (!) was called out about 4 o'clock, by the sharp ringing of St. Joseph's church bell. Curtis Well's confectionery stand was burning. When first discovered, the flames had already gotten considerable headway in the rear part of the building, and were leaping and reaching dangerously close to Dr. I. Lemieux's dwelling. A large crowd of men soon congregated, and worked with a will for the preservation of the surrounding buildings, as all possibility of saving the burning store had passed. Joseph Smith & Co's store, 25 feet south, W. A. Riechel's building only about 8 feet north and Dr. I. Lemieux's residence, and consequently the whole block was in extreme peril. There was a large snow bank adjacent, and this was applied to the buildings by throwing snow balls and shoveling it up. The wind was not high, and, much to the surprise of everybody the adjoining houses escaped. Riechel's photograph gallery is scorched and nothing but a constant fussilade of snow saved it. In Lemieux's residence several panes of glass are cracked and the paint tarnished but otherwise no damage resulted. Two large cans of gasoline in a box were standing in the rear of the confectionery store and upon C. B. Well's arrival at the scene he, with persence of mind, carried them out of the fire's reach. A large hole was already burned in the box, and there is no doubt that a few moments delay would have resulted in a disastrous explosion. Joseph Paradis hitched up his horse and hauled two barrels of water just as the gallery was succumbing and he is entitled to a cromo. The insurance on C. B. Wells' building and stock was $2,000, so Curt won't be desturbed although his business is gone.

Good Luck for 1892.

The last few days of 1891 reminds us that it is a pleasant coustom among friemds to wish each other, at the advent of a New Year, happiness and prosperity for the coming months. Just why our good wishes should be any more fervent at the beginning of the year than at any other period, it would be hard to say; certainly our friehds need good fortune at one time as well as another. But whatever the reason or unreason of it, "The Burlington" believes it a custom to be honored and therefore cordialy wishes its friends and patrons and the public generally, a "Happy New Year." As our particlar friends are the traveling public, we would elaborate a little by hoping that, by whatever line you journey, your trains will run without accident and make good time; your way lie thraugh lovely scenery; your trip be one of comfort in Pullman Sleepers and reclining chair cars; your meals be enjoyed on dining cars whose cuisine is peerless, and your baggage be safely delivered. If you travel by other line, we hape for the above good luck; if you use "The Burlington" we know it will be so. For tickets, rates, and maps call on your nearest ticket agent, or address W. J. C. Kenyon Gen. Pass. Agent C., B. & N. R R., St. Paul, Minn.

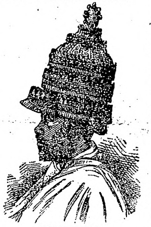
Bucklin's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for cuts bruises, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25 cents per bottle. For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

ETHIOPIA'S KING OF KINGS.

The Lion Conqueror of Abyssinia Declares His Intentions.

King Menelik of Abyssinia has astonished the rulers of Europe by serving on them a general notice of "Keep Off This Plat!" He did not in so many words add, "Beware of the dog," or "The bull is dangerous," but that is the purport of his circular, and his self confidence is simply sublime. He signs his circular thus:



KING MENELIK II.

"Lion Conqueror of the Tribe of Judah, Menelik, Chosen by God. King of Kings of Ethiopia."

He announces that the time has come for him to re-establish the ancient limits, from the sea to Nyanza and Khartoum, including all the Galla country. "I do not," he adds, "propose to be an indifferent spectator while foreign powers are dividing Africa among themselves," and concludes with a hope that Jesus Christ will dispose the hearts of Europeans so that they will be reasonable and stay away.

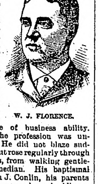
Menelik II is a son of King Hælou, who reigned in the south of the country, so by the union of the two powers and conquest of much other territory he is the most powerful ruler the nation ever had. His army consists of about 100,000 men, of whom 40,000 are armed in the best European fashion, with repeating rifles, a mitrailleuse and rifled cannon. Abyssinia also manufactures its own powder, so the agreement of European powers to keep warlike materials out of interior Africa has no effect there.

Menelik is the son of a beggar woman whom his father took a fancy for, and she still lives, in great honor, the mother of the most powerful monarch in Africa. The king is an ardent advocate of introducing European civilization, and to encourage his people mastered the trade of clockmaking and also learned enough about gunnery to put together his mitrailleuse. His country is among the most interesting in the world. For ages it was a sort of Christian island in an ocean of paganism, and the claims of its kings to direct descent from Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, have often been matters of inquiry, song and romance.

AN ORNAMENT TO THE STAGE.

The Late William J. Florence Reached Fame and Place by Steady Industry.

In the death of W. J. Florence the American stage has suffered a loss that is for the present at least irreparable. Both in experience and character Mr. Florence united characteristics not often found in one person. He had all the dash, humor and boyish capacity for enjoyment which are usually attributed to actors, and with them had unusual diligence, steadiness of purpose and a fair share of business ability. His growth in the profession was unusually regular. He did not blaze suddenly into flame, but rose regularly through all the gradations, from walking gentleman to star comedian. His baptismal name was William J. Conlin, his parents being Irish, and he was born in Albany, July 26, 1831, the oldest of eight children. Police Inspector Conlin, of New York, is one of his brothers. He began life as a general utility boy in a newspaper office at Albany, then worked in a type foundry in New York city and there joined an association of amateur actors, in which he soon took the first place.

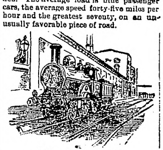


W. J. FLORENCE.

In December, 1849, he first appeared in the legitimate on the boards of the Old Bowery theater, in the classic play of "Evadne," and his only speech consisted of the two words, "Hold off." Through life he delighted in all outdoor sports, especially fishing. He had no children and his wife, almost equally well known, survives him.

Traveled a Million Miles.

English engineers still point with pride to the famous Charles Dickens, the engine built in 1852, which recently completed its millionth mile on the London and Northwestern railway. It doubles the route daily (Sundays excepted) between Manchester and London, making the 183½ miles in 4½ hours and stopping at Stockport, Stoke, Rugby, Blisworth and Willesden. The average load is nine passenger cars, the average speed forty-five miles per hour and the greatest seventy, on an unusually favorable piece of road.



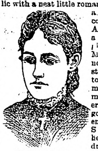
THE CHARLES DICKENS.

The Charles Dickens is described in railroad phraseology as a six feet six four wheel, coupled passenger engine, in length fifty feet and weighing thirty-three tons, with an additional twenty-five tons for the tender, which carries 1,800 gallons of water. Long semicircular troughs are placed at proper intervals between the rails, from which the engineer can, by lowering the "scoop," take up water as he runs. This engine has never laid off once in the nine years since it was placed on the road, and the train it draws is the preferred express, the one patronized by the rural aristocracy in preference to all others, as it leaves their stations at convenient hours in the morning and returns the same evening.

A FORTUNE, BUT NO LOVER.

The Experiences of a Wealthy German Girl in America.

San Francisco presents the reading public with a neat little romance in real life of a servant girl becoming an heiress. A year or so ago a flaxen haired girl applied to Mrs. G. F. Lunnon, at 1013 Mason street, in answer to an advertisement for a nurse maid, and her references were so good that she was employed at once. She won the hearts of the children and gave the best of satisfaction. A few weeks since she gave notice that she must leave for Germany and then the romance came out. She was the daughter of wealthy parents, but fell in love with a poor man. Her parents objected to their marriage. He left for America to make a home and was heard from no more. Heartsick, believing that he was faithful, though silent, Fronie Zeifus (that was the name she gave) sailed to America and searched for him as long as her money lasted.



FRONIE ZEIFUS.

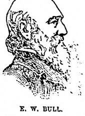
Her next resource was the place of a nurse girl in Iowa, and thence she went to San Francisco. Her appearance, her education and refinement often raised curiosity, but she did her duty and said little. At length a letter arrived from the family lawyer announcing that her father was dead and that his will gave Fronie $125,000. The lost lover was not yet found, but Fronie departed for Germany quite satisfied with her experience as a servant girl.

THE CONCORD GRAPE.

The Man Who Developed It Still Lives at a Good Old Age.

The Concord grape is so common and popular that it will surprise most people to learn that it is of quite recent production and was developed by chance from a wild vine. Yet such is the fact, and the original vine is still in vigorous life. Mr. Ephraim W. Bull, who lives about a mile from Concord, Mass., on the road to Lexington, developed the luscious Concord from the seeds of a grape that was found growing wild in 1840 near that village.

He was born in Boston in 1806, received a good education and was working as a gold beater when disease of the lungs drove him to an open air life. He became an enthusiast in grape culture, but could not make any of the sweeter varieties thrive in the cool climate of that section. Even the Long Island grapevines perished there. Only the little acid varieties were hardy enough. But when he tasted the fruit of this wild vine he found it, as he says, "foxy but sweet," and was convinced that it would do. In [illegible] he planted a lot of the grapes without breaking the skin, the seedlings of which he cultivated for six years, and in [illegible] picked from them a few bunches of the original Concord grape.



E. W. BULL.

Continued experiment and culture brought them to perfection, and now the fame of them has gone out into all the world. In France it is now recommended as the new variety which is to replace old and diseased vines. From the Concord Mr. Bull has developed other varieties, of which the best known are the Una and the Cottage.

Fruit candies 35c a box at Schreiter's.

Red Lake Falls News

TERMS, $1.50 PER YEAR.

P. & JAS. MEEHAN, PROPRIETORS.

MINNESOTA NOTES.

The dedication of St. Mary's church at Waverly, will occur New Year's Day.

The ice in Lake Pepin is now eight inches thick and teams are crossing the lake.

The water works at Winnebago City with two miles of mains are a great success.

The letter carriers at Duluth, have formed an association. They want higher salaries.

The Gardner roller mill at Hastings has again started up and now runs at full capacity.

In the state list of text books 'Maxwell's grammar has been substituted for Quackenbos's grammar.

Mrs. William Caswell, wife of a prominent business man at Redwood Falls, died of consumption.

The ninth annual Waseca Chatuaqua assembly will be held at Maplewood Park, July 13 to 28, 1892.

Mrs. Maria Plunkett died at Winona of pneumonia, induced from an injury in falling down the cellar stairs.

Diphtheria has been entirely exterminated from the schools of Duluth. There have been but four fatal cases.

The Cannon river at Northfield has been so low that the electric light plant has been obliged to shut down.

Abraham Mark, a clothing dealer at Duluth, has made an assignment to James A. Collins. He ran two stores.

John Meski, of Alberta, near Sauk Rapids, was instantly killed by the falling of a tree which he was cutting down.

At Hastings Harvey Gillett was elected delegate to the alliance state convention, to be held at Minneapolis Jan. 5.

One of the social events at Austin was the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Sargent.

An unusual feature attendant on the last few days of warm weather at White Earth has been the advent of numerous mosquitoes.

Diphtheria is prevailing to an alarming extent at Wheatland. Six deaths were reported in one week, and five new cases are announced.

The dry goods firm of Woodbury & Co., one of Anoka's oldest business concerns, has made an assignment to B. T. Hathaway, of that city.

The grand jury at Albert Lea has returned an indictment against Milton F. Vanselus for larceny and he has been held for trial in the sum of $5.

Stillwater Sons of Veterans have elected the following officers: C. W. Merry, captain; G. A. Grant, first lieutenant; J. Welsh, second lieutenant.

The late Mayor Envoh Hansen was buried at Moorhead under the auspices of the Odd Fellows. It was one of the largest funerals ever known in that region.

A new steam heating plant complete has just arrived from the manufacturers for the state institution for the blind in Janesville. The total outfit weighs 34,000 pounds.

Carl Blink, who was arrested for an alleged assault upon Chief of Police Gibbons, of South St. Paul, was set free at Hastings, the grand jury finding no indictment against him.

At Crookston 13 indictments were returned by the grand jury. W. H. Stewart was indicted on three counts for passing a check on a Minneapolis bank in which he had no funds.

A train passed through Winona having a special car attached in which was an opera company on the way from San Francisco to Boston without a stop. The company had 70 pieces of baggage.

Peter G. Wisland, of Caledonia who was reported to have been killed by the explosion of a threshing engine in South Dakota last October and whose relatives at that place mourned him as dead has returned.

Robert Dolph, while driving with a lumber wagon across a railroad track near Waseca, was struck by a train. He was thrown violently into the air and was unconscious for some time, but not seriously injured.

Mr. Nebel, the senior partner of Nebel & Wirch, of St. Cloud, has skipped for parts unknown, taking with him about $2,500 of the firm's funds. The firm had recently become embarrassed in the hotel business there.

Albert Annis, at Mankato, was found guilty of an outrage upon Mrs. John Gilmore. The feeling has been running high against Annis, and but for having been put under protection by arrest he would have been lynched.

Emily L'ssard, a young woman 21 years of age and an inmate of a bagnio at Duluth committed suicide by taking strychnine. She was the mistress of the late John Plant, and grief induced by his death is given as the cause of the act.

H. G. Webster, secretary of the state board of pharmacy, has been at Winona this week investigating complaints that some of the druggists there have been violating the pharmacy laws. It is said that he finds some of the stores pretty loosely conducted and intimates that there will be some new clerks or prosecutions under the law.

Officer Huskins, of Duluth, found many cases of destitution in his rounds. Much of it was among children. Several children were sent to their homes from the schools because they were insufficiently clad. In nine cases out of ten the destitution was caused by drunkenness, though there are exceptions, says Officer Huskins.

Chatfield has a bastardy case which involves a fine point in law. After the birth of the child a warrant for the arrest of the alleged father was issued and placed in the hands of a constable, but this constable turned it over to another constable. While the delay was going on the child died, and the question arises, can any arrest now be legally made. Bastardy is only quasi-criminal, and persecutions are mainly intended to compel the father to support the child.

THE VERY LATEST.

News From all Quarters to Suit the Taste of Everybody.

Events of the Week Carefully Condensed for Busy Readers.

John A. Logan, Jr., is critically ill at Youngstown, Ohio.

Garza, the Mexican revolutionist, is now believed to be in Texas.

During the year the State debt of Pennsylvania was reduced $2,538,352.

La grippe is epidemic at St. Louis physicians reporting hundreds of cases.

The Department of agriculture reports the condition of growing wheat at 85.3.

The funeral of Dom Pedro, ex-Emperor of Brazil, was held in Paris Wednesday.

Mayor Knoles, of Jacksonville, Illinois, was arrested Friday for malfeasance in office.

Martin Loppy was electrocuted at Sing Sing, N. Y., Monday for murdering his wife.

Milwaukee, Wis., will attempt to secure the National Democratic Convention.

The New York Mail and Express advocates an appropriation for the World's Fair.

La grippe in a virulent form is prevalent in Topeka, Kan. Three thousand cases are reported.

George W. Stewart, of Georgia, who invented the sea telephone, died suddenly at New York.

United States Gunboat No. 5 was launched at Bathe, Me., Tuesday, and christened The Machias.

Enoch Morgan's Sons & Co., of New York, Wednesday gave $10,000 toward the World's Fair.

It is said that Senator M. S. Quay is a candidate for re-election to the United States Senate.

It is estimated that 13,000 persons have been ill of influenza in Hamburg during the past week.

Two hundred steerage passengers are detained at New York on suspicion of being contract laborers.

The remains of Williams J. Florence were buried Thursday in Greenwood Cemetery, New York.

Charles B. Evarts, son of the Hon. William M. Evarts, was found dead in bed at Windsor, Vt., Thursday.

Fourteen horses were burned to death Friday in Davison's livery barn at Ishpeming, Mich. Loss, $7,000.

Governor Merriam has issued a circular letter asking the people of Minnesota to help the poor in Russia.

The Atchison (Kan.) Champion, property of the late Col. John M. Martin, is offered for sale at $25,000.

Chileans are discussing the advisability of recalling their minister to the United States if Egan is not removed.

Politicians think it probable that Gov. Francis will soon call an extra session of the Missouri Legislature.

Thirteen thousand pounds of butter were sold on the Elgin Board of Trade Monday at 29 cents per pound.

In the Alexandria (Va.) District Wednesday E. E. Meredith (Dem), was elected to Congress to succeed Gen. Lee.

The Supreme court of Texas has declared the law prohibiting aliens owning land in the state unconstitutional.

At Waukesha, Wis., early Wednesday morning, the American House burned, the guests escaping in their night clothes.

The Rt. Rev. John N. Galleher, D. D., Episcopal Bishop of the diocese of Louisiana, died Monday night, aged 52 years.

It is estimated that there is not a week's supply of soft coal in Iowa, Dakota, Minnesota, Illinois, Kansas, and Nebraska.

Mrs. W. H. Long, living near High Rock, Ind., gave birth to a perfectly formed, healthy girl weighing one pound Monday.

Beerbohm figures that France has already bought enough wheat to supply 60 per cent of its requirements for the year.

It is reported that Secretary Blaine has declared to a friend that he is not a candidate for the Presidential nomination in 1892.

The right of railways to issue free passes is to tested by the government, by a suit to be speedily brought against a New England road.

La grippe is epidemic in Denver, Colo. Seven hundred and fifty cases were reported Friday. The disease is of a mild form.

It is rumored that William R. Orr, of Omaha, Neb., auditor of the Western Railway Weighing Association, will soon be removed.

Cheboygan, Mich., produced 104,000,000 feet of lumber the past season, as compared with 130,000,000 feet the preceding season.

Fire Monday destroyed the Catholic Church at St. Paul, Iowa, causing a loss of $16,000, on which there was $5,000 insurance.

One hundred and forty-seven building and loan associations in Illinois have total assets of $15,053,035, and loans aggregating $14,392,978.

At West Milton, Ohio, Tuesday, two noted pacing horses were burned to death—Orien C., record 2:18, and Oliver K., record 2:25.

It is stated that the archbishop of Canterbury will visit America next year and will make a tour through the United States and Canada.

Kit Carson, a son of the famous scout of the same name, murdered his mother-in-law and father-in-law near La Tunta, Col., and escaped.

President Peixotto of Brazil has issued a manifesto declaring members of Dictator Fonseca's government traitors to the constitution.

The fire in the Lake Superior Iron company's hematite shaft at Ishpeming, Mich., has been extinguished. The mine will be rebuilt.

Archbishop Kenrick, of St. Louis, is said to be suffering from la grippe, superinduced by the excitement of the recent golden jubilee celebration.

The convention of the National Anti-Sub-Treasury Alliance, called to meet at Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 16, is postponed, to be named hereafter.

Several persons were hurt in a fight at St. Joseph, Mo., between rival factions of Poles, who disputed for control of a parochial school.

The meeting of State representatives of World's Fair matters adopted resolutions asking Congress to appropriate $5,000,000 to the World's Fair.

Tuesday the Indiana Supreme Court dedecided that a woman had a right to sue any one for damages who alienated her husband's affections.

The City Council of Dubuque, Iowa, contemplates operating its own electric light plant. One thousand dollars can be saved each month.

A college publication issued by students of the University of Michigan was seized by the faculty for publishing an article condemning co-education.

At Des Moines, Iowa, the Iowa Temperance Alliance issued a circular urging Prohibitionists to work more zealously in the cause of prohibition.

The Dominion Mineral Company, of Sudbury, Ontario, has sold its Blizzard and Worthington nickel mines to an English syndicate for $2,000,000.

The strike of telegraph operators on the Pacific system of the Southern Pacific system threaten to involve the entire Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe system.

The City Council of Richmond, Va., contemplates giving Mrs. Jefferson Davis a house worth $25,000 providing she will spend the rest of her days in that city.

George Starkey and John Brown, at Alton, Ill., were convicted of the murder of ex-State Senator Gillham and sentenced to thirty years each in the penitentiary.

The Pan-American railway from Victoria, Texas, to the City of Mexico, was begun Thursday. It will be the shortest line to the Mexican capital by nearly 300 miles.

Inspector Byrnes, of New York, thinks that "Professor Denton," a local crank, was the man who threw the bomb at Russell Sage and had his head blown off.

The act passed at the last session of the Quebec Legislature imposing a royalty on the output of all mines in the province has been disallowed by the Dominion Government.

While the exact destination of the cruiser San Francisco, can not be officially ascertained, it is generally understood at the Navy Department that she is going to Honolulu.

Briefs of counsel in the Boyd-Thayer case, involving the question of title to the office of Governor of Nebraska, were filed in the United States Supreme Court Monday.

Congressman Tom Watson's constituents in Georgia are said to be much wrought up over his acceptance of the alliance nomination for Speaker of the House of Representatives.

All hope that any of the seventy-four men buried in the St. Etienne (France) mine can be rescued has been abandoned. So far fifteen bodies have been recovered.

J. M. Daniels, cashier of the Exchange Bank of West Bend, Iowa, and manager of a lumber company, is supposed to have left for Canada. His shortage is estimated at $11,000.

English Board of Trade returns for November show an increase in imports of £3,710,000, and a decrease in exports of £2,230,000, as compared with the corresponding period one year ago.

The average condition of wheat in Michigan is reported at 93 per cent, as compared with 102 per cent one year ago. During the month of November 1,638,968 bushels of wheat were marketed.

The Belle Center Bank, in Logan County, Ohio, was robbed of $1,300. The safe had been blown open with dynamite. Only cash was taken; the securities were not disturbed.

Tuesday the Court of Appeals at London handed down a decision in the Maybrick insurance case, awarding the $10,000 insurance to the brothers of Mr. Maybrick, who was murdered by his wife.

Judge Acheson filed an opion in the United States Circuit Court at Philadelphia Tuesday granting a new trial in the hat trimming case, in which the government was recently vistorious.

During the lumber season lately closed, mills in the Duluth (Minn.) district cut 253,300,000 feet against 215,000,000 feet last year. Prices have been higher for the last two months than for a long time before.

The remnants of a red, white and blue badge, worn by the bomb-thrower who attempted to kill Russell Sage, and similar to a badge worn by the suspected Southworth, have been found in Mr. Sage's office.

Tuesday the House of Representatives of South Carolina passed the Childs bill to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the State, and it is expected to receive 22 out of 35 votes in the Senate.

Conrad Disstler of troop F. 8th cavalry, says Sitting Bull was murdered in cold blood by the Indian police sent to arrest him. Disstler, who was an eye-witness, says the chief made no attempt to resist arrest.

Comptroller Lacey Wednesday directed that the shareholders of the Spring Garden National Bank pay a 100 per cent assessment on stock held by them at the time of the bank's failure. The proceeds will go to the creditors.

Col. Joseph S. Conrad, Twenty-first United States Infantry, died at Fort Randall while on a tour of inspection of his regiment. He was stationed at Fort Sidney, Neb., and caught cold which resulted in pneumonia.

Suit for dissolution and receiver was begun Wednesday at Cleveland against the Anglo-American Iron Company and the Canadian Copper Company, which concerns furnish the supply of nickel armor-plates in the American war ships.

In the Graves trial at Denver, Col., Thursday, Dr. Sewall testified that the "whisky" claimed to have been sent Mrs. Barnaby by Graves was alcohol and arsenic, and contained enough poison to kill from sixty to seventy persons.

The Cincinnati physicians agree that the influenza or "grip" of two years ago has returned to the city and nearly all report a considerable number of cases. Other cities in Ohio, notably Dayton and Columbus, have many cases.

Isaac B. Sawtelle, sentenced to death for the murder of his brother, Tuesday detailed his crime before the New Hampshire Supreme Court, for the purpose of making out that the murder took place in Maine where there is no capital punishment.

M. B. Curtis, the actor, has had a hearing on his application to the Supreme court of California for release on bail pending his trial for the murder of Officer Grant. The application was refused, and Curtis must remain in jail.

A most terrible catastrophe has occurred in a colliery located at Nifka, in Russian Poland. Further intelligence is anxiously awaited and hopes are expressed that the loss of life, which the first dispatch places at 180, is overestimated.

Timothy E. Byrnes, president of the Minnesota league of republican clubs and organizer of the National league of republican clubs, has been indicted for forgery. He is said to have raised $16,000 by the free use of other people's signatures.

During a debate in the French chamber of deputies Friday a disorderly scene culminated in M. de Cassagnac calling M. Floquet, president of the chamber, a liar. Upon his refusal to retract M. Floquet challenged him to a duel. The challenge was accepted.

A grand jury at San Antonia, Texas, was placed under arrest. A fine of $50 is hanging over each member imposed by Judge King, of the Forty-fifth District Court, who held that they were in contempt in serving an attachment on him while he was on the bench.

It is claimed by the French Government that during the trouble arising from President Fonseca assuming the dictatorship of Brazil twelve Frenchmen were killed in Rio Janeiro by agents of Fonseca. The French Consul at Rio Janeiro has been instructed to demand reparation.

Marshalltown (Iowa) capitalists who are interested in the Dakota and Minnesota Mining company, whose headquarters are in the Chamber of Commerce building, Chicago, are worried over a report that the concern is insolvent. Its treasurer, Charles Mylus, is in Europe.

B. S. Barrett, a prominent Cleveland (Ohio) piano dealer, who disappeared more than a year ago, leaving behind him about $7,000 worth of forged promissory notes which he had used as collateral, and who was recently captured in West Virginia, was sentenced to six years in the penitentiary.

Dispatches from China announce that according to the latest estimates from 300 to 500 Christians, several native priests, a Mongolian prince and some unconverted natives were massacred. Many churches were pillaged and burned, especially in the towns of Tsientchang and Pingsuten.

The visible supply of wheat Saturday, as compiled by the New York Produce Exchange, was 41,653,124 bushels, a decrease of 1,612,514 bushels, and of corn 2,226,763 bushels, a decrease of 392,592 bushels. Stocks of wheat in California Dec. 1 aggregated 965,000 centals, as compared with 12,160,000 centals one year ago.

J. H. Steiner, secretary of the American Trotting Association, caused the arrest in Oshkosh, Wis., Tuesday, of J. O. Garrity, a well-known trotting horse driver, and Capt. Officer, of Tracy, Minn., on a charge of "ringing" the horse Josslyn at the Oshkosh fair. This is the first offense under the new state law making "ringing" a state prison offense.

A terrible wreck, disastrous in its effects both upon life and property, occurred near West Plains, Mo., Monday, on the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Memphis railway. Four men were killed, and of thirty-four occupying the caboose twenty were seriously injured; it is feared some of them fatally. Fifteen freight cars were piled in a heap.

The Illinois Republican Editorial Association was organized Wednesday at Springfield, and the following officers elected: President, Milton W. Mathews, of Urbana; First Vice President, B. F. Shaw, of Dixon; Second Vice President, George Fisher, of Cairo; Third Vice President, Dr. W. Calhoun, of Decatur; Secretary, Robert Wood, of Joliet; Treasurer, Cad Allard, of Beardstown.

A dispatch from Saltillo, Mexico, says the twelve hundred Chinese who were thrown out of employment by the collapse of the Tehuantepec Railroad project are making their way in a body toward the United States, pillaging and committing depredations in the country through which they pass. All are in a destitute condition and are unable to find employment.

The South Carolina House of Representatives has passed, by a vote of 40 to 84, a prohibition bill. The bill absolutely prohibits the sale of beer, liquors, wines, etc., in any portion of the State or the transportation of either by railroads, express companies, etc., under heavy penalties. It was passed after a bitter fight lasting two days. The law is said to be framed on that now in force in Iowa.

Sheriff Jones and Deputy C. H. Thompson have arrived at Miles City with one of two Indians they arrested at Cheyenne agency for killing cattle. The Cheyennes are again dancing against the agent's orders. Agent Tully sent a dispatch to the commanding officer at Fort Keogh, asking him to send troops, as an uprising is inevitable. The commander telegraphed department headquarters at St. Paul and Monday night orders were issued from there to send troops from Fort Keogh to the Cheyenne agency.

Bradstreet's figures on the available supply of wheat show that the total is but 17,000,000 bushels greater than it was a year ago at this time. That the accumulation should have been so small, in view of the unprecedented movement in the west and northwest, is a matter upon which the bulls are congratulating themselves. They consider that the fact goes to confirm their claim that in spite of our enormous crops the exports are going to take care of the surplus and leave us none too much for our own requirements in a crop year when opening conditions are of the most unfavorable character.

Virtues of Kerosene.

A correspondent writes: "A few spoonfuls of kerosene put into water standing in the open air about the building will keep away mosquitoes, flies, and other insects, and do not injure, but rather improve, the water for washing purposes. A fact well worth knowing."

A Native Custom.

Evening weddings are essentially American.

One hundred cases of la grippe are reported at Cairo, Ill.

CAPITAL BREVITIES

Resume of Important Events at the National Capital.

What Is Being Done by the Executive and Other Departments.

Postmaster-General Wanamaker has imposed a heavy fine upon the Indiana Midland railroad company for not carrying mail on schedule time.

The commissioner of immigration has ordered the deportation of five indigent Englishmen who had attempted to land at New Orleans from the British steamer William Cliff in violation of the immigration laws.

Mr. Cooper, of Indiana, stated Wednesday in answer to an inquiry that he proposed early in January to offer a resolution in the house providing for a thorough and rigid examination of the pension office under Gen. Raum.

Some of Mr. Mills' friends say that the Texan is going to resign shortly after the holidays and announce himself as a candidate for United States senator to succeed Horace Chilton, who was appointed to finish Reagan's term.

The executive committee of the national democratic convention decided to call a meeting of the national committee, to be held at the Arlington hotel, Washington, D. C., Jan. 21, 1892, to decide upon the time and place for holding the democratic convention. A resolution was passed requesting the state committees to fill vacancies now existing.

NEW MEN IN THE HOUSE.

The new congressional directory shows that nearly one-half the members of the house, or 143, are new men, unknown in the halls of the national legislature, while seven others were members of former congresses, but not of the Reed congress. Maine is the only state having more than one representative who has returned all its old members. Ohio has sent the largest number of new men—fifteen. Indiana contributes to this house eighteen of her sons against eight from Illinois. Only four of the twenty members from Illinois were born in the state.

BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Information has just been received at the department of agriculture that New York capital is to establish beet-sugar factories at Springfield, Ill., and Omaha, Neb. Mr. Tupper, chief of the sugar-bounty division, said: "The sorghum and beet-sugar industry has now become established and paying, and capitalists, realizing this fact, intend to invest large sums in establishing factories. It is true that a number of failures are reported all over the country, but I am certain that these result more from bad management than bad business."

AN INCREASE IN THE ARMY.

Senator Manderson reintroduced a bill similar in purpose to the one introduced by him last session to increase the efficiency of the infantry of the army. The bill provides for the increase of infantry regiments to 12 companies, officered as at present, with the addition of junior officers for the two proposed additional companies. The bill also proposes to increase the enlisted force of the army to 30,000. He also introduced bills increasing from $800,000 to $2,000,000 the appropriation for a public building at Omaha and appropriating $100,000 for a building at Norfolk, Neb.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

Senator Call Friday introduced a bill providing postal savings banks and to encourage small savings. The bill authorizes the postmaster-general to designate as depositories such postoffices as he may think proper, which shall keep for sale stamps of the denomination of 10 cents and $1 to be known as postal savings stamps. Also postal saving cards, upon which such stamps are to be affixed when sold, the amount of the stamp purchased to be deposited in such banks to the credit of the purchaser as the secretary of the treasury may direct. The bill provides that a small amount of interest shall be paid depositors.

PADDOCK AND HIS PURE FOOD BILL.

Senator Paddock has started in with his pure food bill again. He got it in the first thing after the senate opened Friday, so that it is bill No. 1 of the fifty-second congress. The measure has been little changed since the last session. It provides for the organization of a section in the department of agriculture, to be known as the food section of the chemical division, whose duty it shall be to prevent the adulteration and misbranding of food, drugs, etc. The machinery of the courts is to be used in punishing violations of the law. There are no provisions for anything like an internal revenue tax, and interference with the police powers of the state is carefully guarded against. Senator Paddock thinks his measure, if it becomes a law, will do away with the special bills like the Conger lard bill of the last session, while covering the main points of all such proposed legislation. He will try to pass the bill through the senate before anything is done in the house. As Paddock is chairman of the agricultural committee he may succeed, though some of the southern senators are opposed to any legislation of this kind.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The reading of the president's annual message in the house never receives much attention, and the last one proved no exception to the general rule. Many of the members left the hall, and those who remained attended to their correspondence. On the completion of the reading of the message it was referred to the committee of the whole and ordered printed, and on motion of Mr. Holman the house adjourned until Saturday, with the understanding that a further adjournment should be then taken until Wednesday.

The reading of the message in the senate consumed exactly an hour and a half. It was listened to throughout with close interest and attention by the senators and by a small audience in the galleries, comprising five gentlemen who occupied seats in the diplomatic gallery and who left as soon as the message began to treat of exclusively domestic matters. The message was ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

CRISP AT THE HELM.

Congress was expected to begin the business of the session on Monday, but the delays caused by the long fight for the speakership postponed the opening formalities until noon Tuesday. Clerk McPherson called the house to order.

Mr. Holman, of Indiana, was the first member to address the clerk presiding. He moved that the house proceed to the election of speaker, and placed in nomination Charles F. Crisp, of Georgia. Thomas B. Reed was the nominee on the republican side, Henderson, of Illinois, presenting his name. Thomas C. Watson, an alliance member from Georgia, was put in the race, Jerry Simpson, of Kansas, nominating him as the alliance candidate. Tellers were appointed and the roll was called. Crisp received 228 democratic votes and the eighty-three republicans present voted for the speaker of the last house. Eight votes were cast for Watson.

Mr. Crisp was declared duly elected speaker and the floor and galleries rang with applause. Mills and Reed escorted the newly elected speaker to the chair, and Mr. Crisp, standing at the speaker's desk, said:

"Gentlemen of the house of representatives: For the great honor you have conferred upon me I return heartfelt thanks. I shall endeavor to discharge the duties of the office of speaker with courtesy, with firmness, and with absolute impartiality. [Applause.] Let us unite in the hope that our labors here may result in the advancement of the prosperity, the honor and the glory of our beloved country. [Applause.] I am now ready to take the oath of office."

The oath was administered to the speaker elect, the chaplain offered prayer, after which all the members were sworn in and after choosing seats the house adjourned.

UNCLE SAM ON DECK.

AMERICAN SHIPS OF WAR WILL SHORTLY BE IN CHILI.

Formal orders have been issued directing Acting Rear-Admiral Walker to proceed at the earliest practicable moment with the Chicago, Atlanta and Bennington to Brazilian waters and assume command of the South Atlantic station. These vessels are now at Hampton Roads. The only cause for delay will be in getting a number of long-time service men to replace those on the Chicago, whose terms expire within the next few months. Telegrams were sent to the principal recruiting rendezvous to send all available recruits at once to that vessel.

The main purpose in sending these additional vessels to the South Atlantic is unquestionably on account of the Chili affair. The Brazilian troubles are of secondary importance, but offered a sufficiently convenient excuse for getting an additional naval force within easy reach of Chili. The squadron will rendezvous at Montevideo, Uruguay, the present headquarters of the South Atlantic station. This being the yellow fever period in Brazil, the fleet will steer as clear as possible from that coast. Rear-Admiral Walker's only stop in Brazil will be at Bahia unless some trouble should arise requiring his presence at Rio. From the former port he will go far out to sea and will not stop again until he reaches Montevideo. Upon his arrival there he will assume command of the station. His fleet will then comprise five vessels—the Chicago, Atlanta, Bennington, Yantic and Essex. Once at Montevideo, these vessels will be within easy reach of Chili and at the same time be on hand to look after interests in Brazil should any rupture occur.

It is not going too far to say that the administration is now pretty well convinced that a satisfactory answer will not be made by Chili to the demand for indemnity and that these vessels may soon be needed to join in a demonstration for bringing Chili to her proper senses.

The present movement in sending Admiral Walker's fleet to the South Atlantic is in a measure anticipatory of congressional action in the matter. Should it be decided to use moral persuasion in bringing about the desired end there is little doubt that Admiral Walker would be sent to Chilian waters and placed in command of all the forces that could be concentrated there.

Decatur, Mich., has four peppermint-oil factories, and they are all kept busy distilling oil from the plant raised on the large tract of swamp land near there that a few years ago was considered worthless.

GENERAL MARKETS.

CHICAGO.

WHEAT—Closed: Dec., 91½c; Jan., 92½c; May, 97½c.

CORN—Closed; Dec., 54c; Jan., 45¼c; May, 43⅝c.

OATS—Closed; Dec., 38c; Jan., 31½c; May, 33¼c.

PROVISIONS—Mess Pork closed; Dec., $8.37; Jan., $11.05; May, $11.50. Lard—Closed; Dec., $6.12½; Jan., $6.12½; May, $6.50.

CATTLE—Quotations range from $5.00@5.50 for good to choice cattle; $4.20@4.75 good shipping steers; $2.75@3.35 common to fair steers.

HOGS—Sales ranged from $3.50@3.60 for light; $3.75@3.90 for heavy.

SHEEP—Quotations range from $4.00@4.75 for Western; $4.00@4.85 for natives and $4.25@5.30 for lambs.

WOOL—Quotations as follows:

Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana and Eastern Iowa.
Coarse tub	28@30c
Medium tub	30@33c
Fine unwashed	18@19c
Medium unwashed	22@25c
Coarse washed	28@30c
Nebraska, Dakota, Minnesota, Kansas and Western Iowa.
Fine unwashed	14@16c
Medium unwashed	17@20c
Coarse unwashed	17@19c

NEW YORK MONEY MARKET.

Money on call easy at 2 to 3 ₿ cent: closed offered at 2 ₿ cent.

Sterling exchange quiet and easy at 482 for 60-day bills and 484⅜ for demand.

Government Bonds—Closing quotationss 4's, coupons, 117½.

NEW YORK PRODUCE MARKET.

WHEAT—Closing prices: No. 2 red, Dec., $1.06¼; Jan., $1.06⅞.

CORN—Market closed: No. 2, Dec., 63c; May, 52⅝c.

OATS—Market closed for Mixed Western, 40@43c; White do., 41@45c.

BUFFALO.

WHEAT—No. 1. hard, $1.05½.
CORN—No. 2, none offering.

MILWAUKEE.

WHEAT—May, 93½c.
CORN—No. 3, 48c.
OATS—No. 2 White, 38c.

ST. LOUIS.

WHEAT—Cash, 94½c; Dec., 94½c.
CORN—Cash, 48¾c; May, 40¾c.
OATS—Cash, 33½c; May, 34¾c.
PROVISIONS—Pork, $9.00. Lard, $5.07½.

THE MANNERS OF PARENTS.

To Have Courteous Children They Must Behave Courteously Toward Them.

We hear a good deal said about the behavior of children in these days, and these remarks are often the reverse of complimentary, says Eleanor A. Hunter in the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, but no one as yet has seemed to seriously consider the manners of grown people in relation to children, though nowhere is the law of cause and effect more clearly manifested. If parents are habitually courteous to their children the children always have pleasant manners. If they are rude, so are the children. They reflect the manners of their elders as a mirror does the objects by which it is surrounded. Many parents, who are well-bred in their manners to their equals, never trouble themselves to be considerate in their behavior to their own children. Indeed, there are parents who actually seem to think that it is not well to be courteous to a child.

"Say 'Thank you,'" I heard a mother command a little daughter when she had tied a sash for her.

"You never say 'Thank you' to me," returned the child instantly.

"It is not my place to say 'Thank you' to you. You are my child, and it is your duty to do whatever I order," responded the mother.

The child quietly walked from the room with firm-shut lips and flashing eyes, and the mother never noticed that her command had not been obeyed.

How often do we command when we should request.

"Pass the bread."

"Shut that door."

"Go up-stairs and get me a clean handkerchief—quick."

Then again, in some families children are ignored. They come down to the breakfast-room and take their places at the table without any morning greeting whatever. When school-time comes they are put in order by their mother and dismissed with a "There, you are ready at last. Go along." No wonder such children act shy and awkward when some stranger chances to give them a cheerful greeting.

When company comes, how many children are told to "keep out of the way"—to "keep still and not say anything" in the presence of the guests. It is not strange that the little things act like scared kittens under such circumstances. It is remarkable to me that they appear as well as they do.

I once knew a lady whose son, a little lad of 10, was the admiration of every one for his beautiful manners. While he was perfectly simple, frank and boyish, his manners were as assured and correct as those of a grown man. His mother could send him in the carriage alone to the station to bring a lady guest from the train, certain that he would give her every needful attention. He would take the checks, care for the baggage, and bring her to the house with every courtesy. And always when visitors were at his home he did his little share of entertaining. He was quick to wait upon them and to show them every respect, and, though he was not forward, he was quite ready to converse with them if they seemed so inclined.

"How did you manage it? What course of training did you pursue?" people used to inquire.

"Well," I heard his mother answer, laughingly, at one time, "for one thing I never snubbed him. He has no idea that there are people in the world who do not like boys. He supposes that everybody is as friendly as he himself. Then I have always brought him up to take care of me and be polite to me; and I am as careful to be considerate and courteous to him as I am to his father. So he never has to put on his good manners; they are the habit of his life. I think that is about all there is of it."

That was all, but it was a good deal; and, if all parents would pursue the same course they would have less occasion to lament their children's rudeness and awkwardness.

The Salt Air Did It.

The Atlanta Herald tells a good story on one of the legislative party which was in Savannah last week. While doubtless an excellent lawmaker the gentleman had never heard of a folding-bed.

It chanced that his room at the De Soto was supplied with one of these conveniences, the use of which was apparent enough to the solon when arranged for sleeping, but being set up and to all appearances only a mirror, he was at a great loss to understand what it was.

It was his second night in the room after the banquet and the salt-air bath at Tybee and the gentleman retired to his room and was perfectly thunderstruck at not seeing his bed.

By an oversight the chambermaid had neglected to make it down.

Then he began to hammer on the electric button to such an extent that everybody on duty came rushing to his room, while excited messengers ran to call out the police and fire departments.

"What is the matter?" exclaimed the room-clerk, excitedly.

"Matter! Gosh! Hang it, don't you see somebody stole my bed?"

When the situation was explained to him he remarked that "salt air wan't no good nohow."

A Determined Man.

"When I bought my brass bedstead," said Fickleby to the Arounder, "the man in the store said that if the brass tarnished I'd better rub it with a little beer. So the minute the bedstead came I ordered a dozen bottles. Well, the thing didn't tarnish as quick as I thought it would, and I had to drink the beer. Then I ordered another dozen, thinking I could use that on the bed; but I was disappointed again and had to drink it. My spunk is up now, and I'm going to keep on buying beer, and drinking it if necessary, until that bedstead shows signs of tarnishing."—Buffalo Courier.

Mrs. M. H. Hotchkiss, of Lakeville, Conn., has given seventy-five acres of land and $275,000 to found a preparatory school for Yale College.

GRANT'S FEALTY TO FRIENDS.

How He Reinstated the Son of an Old Comrade in Office.

"Of the most prominent traits in Gen. Grant's character," said Col. T. R. Matheson of Washington to a Pittsburg Dispatch reporter, when the conversation turned on the late President, "was the steadfast manner in which he stuck to his friends. I can recall a case which illustrates that. In 1873 the term of a Western Senator expired, and before leaving Washington he secured a position in the Postoffice Department for his only son, a bright young fellow whose only failing was an indulgence in an occasional spree. Marshall Jewell was then Postmaster-General, and he had appointed the boy. After a month or so of work he went on a spree and under its effects resigned his position. When he had straightened up and realized his trick his heart was broken; out of money, out of place, with a wife and child to take care of, he didn't know where to turn. All at once he thought of Gen. Grant, and off he went to the White House. His acquaintance with the attaches readily procured him an audience with the President, to whom he made a clean breast of the whole affair.

"'Can you stop drinking?' asked the President.

"'Yes, sir,' replied the young man.

"'Will you promise me not to touch a drop of anything intoxicating for a year?'

"'Yes, sir,' came the answer.

"Taking a card, Grant wrote: 'The Postmaster-General will please reinstate Mr. —— to his clerkship in the Postoffice Department. U. S. G.' He handed this to the son of his old friend, and told him to be a man.

"The young man was soon in the Postmaster-General's office. The official slowly read the card. 'There is no vacancy,' he said. 'I have filled your place. However, put an application on file, and it will be considered in its turn.' The clerk returned in a dejected mood to the White House.

"'He said there was no vacancy, did he?' said the President, 'and told you to file an application, eh? Well, you can't file that wife and baby of yours, can you?' Grant took the card and wrote on the reverse side, 'You make a vacancy or I will.'

"'The President of the United States can have my resignation if he desires it,' said the Postmaster-General testily, when the message was handed to him, 'but he cannot put you in this department while I am at the head of it.'

The now thoroughly discouraged suppliant for office once more returned to the White House and told Grant what the Postmaster-General had said.

"'Take this young man over to the Navy Department,' said the President to a clerk whom he called from an adjoining room, 'and say to Secretary Robeson that I desire his appointment as a clerk.' This time the appointment was made.

"There was a Cabinet council next day, and Grant asked for and was tendered and accepted the Postmaster-General's resignation. The clerk? He kept his promise, and is today a respected, sober man."

EYEGLASSES.

How Some of the Different Colored Glasses Are Made.

The ordinary white glass is made of a purity and freedom from color which leaves little to be desired. But a greater degree of hardness might be imparted to it, especially if it is intended for eyeglasses without a frame, says Chamber's Journal.

Beside colorless glass, however, a colored raw material is made, chiefly intended for the protection of weak eyes. Formerly green glass was much used for protective spectacles, and arctic travelers have been very glad of them.

But green glass extinguishes violet, red, and even blue rays and causes objects to appear in dirty colors.

Spectacles of blue glass, colored with cobalt, are therefore to be preferred. Adams is reported to have been the first to recommend the use of blue glass, but they were at first more widely used in Germany, chiefly through the recommendation of the great oculist Graefe of Bohm and others.

The blue color of glass is chiefly to be recommended because it absorbs those rays in their passage which belong to the yellow and orange portion of the spectrum in which the greatest brightness and greatest heat are concentrated, and the eyes, especially weak ones, consequently greatly protected by the blue color, while rays which such eyes are able to bear obtain access.

The material for blue glasses, which has to be made in various shades to suit individual eyes, is somewhat less hard than that employed formerly for green spectacles and is also inferior in that respect to white glass, but it has gained in durability compared with former descriptions of glass.

Still greater is the progress recorded in the manufacture and hardness of "smoked" glass, also used for protecting the eyesight. This kind of glass, which is colored gray or mouse-colored by the addition of manganese, formerly suffered from too great softness by the addition of a large quantity of lead, but the best manufactures now made are nearly equal to white glass in point of hardness. The object of smoked glass is to reduce the glare of light without segregating colors.

Spectacles are also made of intensely yellow, but the use of this glass is almost exclusively confined to glasses employed for firing purposes. Yellow glass extinguishes completely all other colors, and this is still suitable in cases where instinctiveness of objects aimed at is of prime importance.

Self-Corking Bottle.

A Dubuque (Iowa) man has invented a self-corking bottle. When the bottle is in the side pocket it remains corked; when raised to the mouth it is uncorked by the cantilever movement of the elbow.

The value of land in Berlin has increased 85 per cent in the last ten years.

BUFFALOES IN COLORADO.

Only Fifty Left, and Five of Them Wantonly Slaughtered.

There are about fifty buffaloes still ranging wild in Colorado, says the Denver Republican. And yet one man, for whom frontier justice is waiting recently killed five.

It has been so generally and frequently stated and published that the American buffalo and bison have become completely and thoroughly extinct that the general public has come to accept it as a fact, and believe that the only specimens are those which have become domesticated, and are carefully housed and cared for in the several zoological gardens and parks.

That there are few of them remaining on the plains is true, but there are enough, with proper protection, to soon produce large herds. In this state, where once there were thousands of these animals, their number has been rapidly reduced by hunters, who have slain them simply for the momentary pleasure they have experienced in killing large game, until they now number less than fifty and are in four small herds. These are confined to the rougher and more sparsely populated districts, their habitations being a more effective protection to them than all the state game laws ever enacted by the general assembly.

So small had grown the number of these distinctly American animals that in 1889 the state legislature enacted a law providing a severe penalty for the killing of a single specimen before the year 1900, thus allowing a full ten years for them to propagate, but in spite of this enactment word was received but a short time ago that some one in the Kenosha range had shot five buffaloes. State Game Warden Land started at once to make a special and personal investigation of the case. While out he has also made an extensive visit through the state, and he has just returned with an interesting account. He is somewhat discouraged with many things connected with the enforcement, or, more properly the non-enforcement of all the game laws, and predicts that unless something very decisive is done, and that very soon, the buffalo will not be the only family wiped from the face of the earth. He reports a most terrible slaughter of all game during the last few months. He was asked in reference to the killing of buffaloes.

"There are now very few of them," he stated, "and these, in our feeble and crippled condition, we are endeavoring to protect. That five of them were killed recently is a fact, but I found that we could not convict the guilty if we brought him to trial. He admitted having killed five of them and boasted of the fact to his friends, but we could find no one, after a careful investigation, who would testify against him, and if he were arranged he would of course, say not guilty.

"I judge that we have now in the state something less than fifty buffaloes, and these are in four bunches. One of these has recently been seen in Middle park, and numbers but five. Another, and possibly the largest, is in the Kenosha range, and numbers possibly twenty. The third, of ten or fifteen head, is at Hahn's Peak, in Routt county. The fourth, and the smallest except that at Middle park, is at Dolores."

Where to Shoot Big Game.

Although the sportsman should endeavor to cause death as painlessly as possible, he can not always do so. To attain this end he should, in hunting with the rifle, always strike the brain, but this, whether with rifle or shotgun, is obviously out of the question.

A bullet striking the bones of the head, or solid parts connected therewith, as the horns of the deer family, ordinarily produces one of two results. It may, firstly stun the animal, causing what surgeons term "concussion of the brain;" or, second, cause death, either from the severity of the shock, or from direct injury to the brain substance. The writer has known a large deer to fall dead from the impact of a heavy bullet against the base of the horn, a result analogous to death produced by the sand-bag applied to the human skull. Had the ball struck near the tip of the horn, the deer would have been merely stunned, probably recovering quickly enough to escape in safety. Undoubtedly many animals are reached and slain with the knife that otherwise, with a little longer interval, might escape.

A missile passing through a portion of the brain substance almost invariably causes instant death. There are, however, many examples of recovery after such an injury scattered through medical literature. Even in these cases the patient is necessarily rendered unconscious for many hours, so the hunter who inflicts such an injury upon an animal attains his end.

In hunting dangerous game at close quarters then the brain should ordinarily be the objective point, unless the bullet be very heavy in proportion to the size of the animal. It is generally accessible and, if struck, invariably renders the game harmless. A grizzly bear with a rifle bullet through the heart may yet live long enough to kill his destroyer if at close quarters. —Scribner.

A Ceylonese Prince.

He wore black trousers and coat, a white waistcoat and a heavy round black cap. On his coat at the sleeves as well as down the front, and on his waistcoat, were numerous buttons, each one of gold, with a gleaming diamond for a center. Round his waist was a heavy gold girdle of massive links, with two loops in front which went to form a watch chain long enough and strong enough for his highness to hang himself with.

The third and fourth fingers of each hand were loaded with rings set with brilliants and precious stones.

In his waistcoat pocket the top of a cigarette case was showing and when he pulled it out at the end of the game there was a big cluster of brilliants in the center of the concave side.

His walking-stick had a gold cross-head, and on the other side his initials were set with diamonds and rubies.—Ceylon Correspondent in San Francisco Chronicle.

ROPING THE WOLF.

A Cowboy's Lively Experience on a Bucking Broncho's Back.

Perry Stiff, a cowboy employed on George W. Baxter's ranch, was in town yesterday, says the Cheyenne Leader, with three gray wolf skins and three coyote skins, all of which netted him $26.25. The county pays $3 bounty for wolf scalps and 75 cents for coyotes, and the Stockmen's Protective association pays $5 for wolves.

Baxter's ranch is about fifty miles northeast of here on Little Horse creek. Mr. Stiff says there are plenty of wolves there. The skins he brought in yesterday were from wolves which he roped while riding the ranges. As a wolf-hunter the cowboy has so far been more successful than the members of the Cheyenne Wildcat club, and his experience with the animals is much more thrilling. Recently, while riding a broncho, Mr. Stiff saw a pack of wolves chasing a bunch of horses, in the rear of which was an old mare and colt, the object of the chase being fresh colt meat. Stiff got behind a hill, and as the frightened horses flew by he put the spurs to his broncho, and, singling out the biggest wolf in the pack, made the chase.

As the cowboy's horse was fresh and the wolf already pretty tired it was not long until the noose was dropped over the head of the big gray. The animal's fore feet went through the loop, however, and the rope tightened around his body in such a way that he was able to make a stong pull. Finding himself at the end of the rope the brute, after failing to cut it with his sharp teeth, made a dash for liberty in another direction. The movement drew the rope about the broncho's hind legs and tail, and the natural result was some very hard bucking. Between the bucking horse and the wolf Stiff had his attention pretty well taken up. He held to the bucking-strap, and finally got straight with the wolf at the end of the rope and square in front of the horse. By this time the wolf refused to run, but sat up, and, showing his long, sharp teeth, was ready for a fight. This was just what the cowboy wanted. Riding up close to his wolfship to get as much slack as possible, he turned quickly and applied the spurs. When the rope tightened the wolf turned a couple of somersaults and was almost broken in two, but the rope held firm to the saddle-horn.

By a series of such maneuvering the wolf was finally worn out and dragged to the ranch. Mr. Stiff says he has seen as high as nine wolves in a pack last summer. Not long ago four of them killed a calf in Baxter's pasture. Stiff made a suggestion to another cowboy that while the animals were full of calf meat was a good time to chase them down. The suggestion was acted upon, and after a chase of nearly three miles a big fellow was caught. Mr. Stiff also roped three antelopes during the summer. He says that if the Cheyenne boys will come out they can have plenty of sport. Wolves are seen every day and there would be no trouble in getting up a chase with hounds.

JUST LIKE THE ARMY.

When It Comes to Things Not Military the Soldier Doesn't Take Sides.

It is a well-known fact that a good soldier is all soldier. He does not dissipate his preferences over all sides of all questions, but looks on politics, religion and philosophy with the most unprejudiced eye. Some times the absence of belief in the service becomes amusing, but it was never more so than when the question of Indian ceremonies came up in a group of officers of the department of Arizona. Julius White, a Jew, was standing by. He was the salesman and purchasing agent for an Indian trader, and the well-defended butt of many an army joke. One of the civilians present, who had been seized of an appointment as census taker of the Navajoes, was berating the savages for their utterly senseless forms.

"Look at them," he cried with the indignation of a man from cities. "Look at their dancing and their posturing and mummery. Call that religion! It is sheer barbarism."

"Look at your own methodists," retorted a trader who knew more about the Indian, and so was less inclined to express opinions on them. "When communion day comes you all get up in the aisle to slow music, sniffle and cry and look awful solemn. You go forward, every man and woman of you carrying a handkerchief. You kneel down in a semicircle at a rail, and a man comes around behind the rail and gives you a taste of wine and passes the same glass to a score of other lips—some of them clean, some dirty. Then he gives you a crumb of bread in the same manner. Suppose you were to walk into a ceremony like that to-morrow for the first time, knowing nothing of its significance, wouldn't you say it was all bosh?

They quarreled as people always do when religion is the bone of contention. To relieve the ill-temper some some one called out:

"Julius, what do you believe?"

"Oh," said the factor, "I don't believe nothing. I am shust like de army."

A Story About Dore.

Gustave Dore's invention as appears by Mr. Jerrold's biography, was not confined to his wonderful book illustrations. One day in Verona his friend Dalloz was taking a photographic view of the picturesque streets of that ancient city while Dore was endeavoring to keep off the crowd of idle spectators. It was a difficult task; the more the artist gesticulated and threatened the greater the throng became. Suddenly Dore was struck with an idea. "Wait a minute," he exclaimed, "and I'll disperse them." Thereupon he took off his coat and threw it upon the ground, and then putting on a pitiful expression he went round, cap in hand to beg for a few soldi. As he advanced the crowd fell back and melted away, and Dalloz obtained his negative.—London News.

Way back in the sixties Roswell P. Flower was a clerk in a corner grocery in a village in the upper part of New York state.

THE METHODS OF GEORGE.

How the Country Simpleton Amused the Village and "Sponged" Drinks.

Every country place has its queer character, usually several of them, and the amusement of the natives is largely confined to the eccentric sayings and actions of these same natural jesters. The humor is all the more droll because it is absolutely free from any attempt at drollery.

Luckily it is for rural inhabitants that nature provides this form of entertainment, as otherwise they would run a very good chance of stagnating in the serious pool of life and never getting the benefit of a smile to soften their faces.

And so George Stowe in his humble way was quite a beneficent gleam of light in the sombre life of a little Vermont hamlet. George was of uncertain age and of uncertain mental capacity. He seemed simple, but in reality he was endowed with a full share of shrewd Yankee cunning. He eked out a precarious livelihood by driving a hack to the railway station and trading on his deafness.

Nobody really knew whether George was deaf or not. When a man dunned him he was as deaf as a post, and at other times when he tried he could hear a whispered conversation carried on in the back of his coach. It was always unwise to put any confidence in George's infirmity.

George also drank stale and bewildering draughts of beer such as is always served in Vermont whenever he could inveigle any one to buying it for him. The wicked railroad restaurant was about the only place in town where it could be had, and there George waited and planned traps for the unwary.

"What'll you have, George?" asked a stranger whom he had just brought down from the village, "a glass of beer or a piece of pie?"

"Yes, sir, thank you," replied George, affecting to misunderstand the question, "I'll drink the beer and take the pie right in my hand."

Another favorite coup of George's was whenever any one said "Good day" to him to promptly reply:—

"Yes, thank you; don't care if I do," and steer straight away for the bar.

And George worked this bit of diplomacy so often and so successfully that he was in danger of becoming a scandal in the Puritanical community through his tendency toward a condition of inebriation. One day while riding down to the station with a deacon of the church George was seized with a fit of repentance.

"Deacon," said he, "I would like to brace up and do better—stop drinking and show all the folks that I am a good deal more of a man than they thought. I can do it if I try, I know, only, you see, I have said I was going to stop so many times and didn't do it that they won't none of them believe me now."

"I am very glad to hear it; but how can you convince them?"

"I've got an idea. Now when we get down to the station you ask me to have a drink, and then I'll have a chance to refuse right before them all and show them that I mean 'business this time."

"All right, George; we'll do it, and I hope you'll stick to your good intentions."

They reached the depot and went into the eating room. A large crowd was there waiting for the train. The deacon in his brisk and hearty way spoke up so that all could hear.

"Come, George, have a drink?" he said.

"Yes, thank you, don't care if I do," replied George, and he promptly walked up to the bar.

He had the drink and the deacon paid for it, but the deacon lost a great deal of faith in mankind thereby. That night he made George the subject of prayer at the Tuesday evening meeting.—N. Y. Herald.

How She Served the Summons.

She was bright and pretty, and she dropped into a lawyer's office the other day and asked for work.

"What can you do?"

"Anything a woman of ability can do, and more than most men."

"Great opinion of yourself, young woman," said an elderly lawyer present. "Perhaps you think you could serve this summons."

"I might," said she. "May I look at it? Yes, I will."

"If you do that you'll do something we've all been trying to do for a week. He's a slippery fellow and his people are all posted. However you may try it. You can afford to lose a little conceit," and the lawyer smiled grimly.

At 10 the next morning the office door was opened and the bright young woman walked in again.

"Thought you'd give it up, eh? Found him too slippery for you? Thought so."

"The paper is served," said she. It was her turn to smile now, and she did it. The lawyer swung round in his chair.

"Served the——. How'd you do it?"

"Oh, it was simple enough. I called at his place of business, looked around, priced some materials and then asked if he was in.

"'No,' said the salesman, 'but I can do as well.'

"'I think not,' I said quietly. 'He has served me before, and he understands just what I want.'

"'Oh, in that case you might call at his house. He will be in to dinner.'

"I did call at his house, dressed in my best, card case in hand. I sent in my card and he appeared promptly.

"'Mr. ——?' said I, rising.

"'Yes. You wished to see me on business?

"'I hear you are interested in property in —— street?"

"'Yes.

"'Well, I have a paper which will interest you concerning it,' offering him the summons, which he took with a smile. He looked at it and flushed crimson. So did I. Nothing was said. He controlled his temper and accompanied me to the door.

"Another field open to women," was the lawyers only comment.—N. Y. World.

A petrified elephant has been unearthed near Jasper, Fla.

HAD BEEN TO EUROPE.

An Anglo-American, Who Had Been Abroad but Couldn't Tell What He Had Seen.

A light-haired young man with an incipient mustache, red necktie, tight-fitting kid gloves, carrying a big cane amidships, and his arms akimbo walked into a Randolph street barber-shop last evening. He was evidently well known in the shop, for he was greeted by name and spoke familiarly to several of the barbers.

"So tired, you know," he said, as he dropped languidly into a chair, without removing his gloves. "Just got back from Europe, and am really worn out with sight-seeing." The tone was one of invitation to open a conversation.

"I suppose you took in everything on your trip," one of the barbers, who left it incumbent to reply, finally ventured.

"Ya-as; saw all there was to be seen. Of course it's awfully nice, you know; but one gets tired of seeing so much."

"Were you in Strasburg, Mr. ——?" inquired the artist of the next chair.

"Naw, didn't get there, was in a hurry, you know," drawled the European traveler.

"You were in Metz, weren't you?"

"Naw; really I couldn't stop."

"Oh, you missed it by not going," and the barber rattled on about the big clock, the Napoleonic monument, the battle scene and other points of interest to be seen in that section. He mentioned a dozen other places in France and Germany.

"Yaas, I was in Berlin," the shaved customer interrupted at mention of that place. The barber pronounced it with the accent on the last syllable; the customer called it "Berleen." A series of questions about that great city developed that Mr. —— knew nothing of its points of interest.

"I was in Lunnon, too," interrupted the sight-seeing customer. "Great town, Lunnon, you know."

Another series of interrogations about "Lunnon" resulted in as little information in return. By this time every other customer in the shop was smiling, pleased at the situation. Something of the state of affairs must have dawned upon the traveler, for he said with a weak attempt at satire:

"You must have traveled a good deal, too. Barbers can get a chance to see everything, you know. Don't have to hurry. Work as they go along."

"Yes, I expect to go again next year," replied the second-chair artist, unconscious of the intended thrust. "I propose to take my time, work enough to pay incidental expenses, and put in my extra time in seeing the countries."

"Think I'll not go home to-night," the traveler said, desiring to change the subject and not having wit enough to do so in any other way. "Must go out on Ashland avenue. Got regular evenings, you know. He, he, he."

And with a knowing look the fellow paid his check, tipped the barber who shaved him and the attendant who handed him his hat, grasped his big cane by its middle and left.

"What asses my fellow-countrymen can be," said a cynical customer as he stepped from his chair.

"He's not an American," said an old gentleman at the end of the line, with some asperity. "He's an Anglomaniac. Just like hundreds of others who visit the continent—they never see a thing. But then 'they've been to Europe!' Bah, they make me tired!"

It was a little incident, but there is a whole chapter in many little incidents. —Chicago Journal.

One Way to Roast a Turkey.

I was among the first to enter the new city of Chandler, in Oklahoma—not as a boomer, but as a boomer's caterer, a vocation which I decidedly prefer. Business was marvellously brisk while I was there, and so far as booking orders and taking in money were concerned I did well. But the tortures of hunger and thirst we endured were calculated to draw profanity from the most careful of men. The best meal we had was off a wild turkey secured in some inexplicable manner. There were no cooking utensils or appliances handy, but an old pioneer who had been through the mill before offered to prepare the meal if allowed to share in it. His offer was accepted, and his efforts were watched with much incredulity and very little hope. He simply rolled the bird, feathers and all, in mud until it was caked completely. Then he roasted the queer-looking concern over a wood fire, and when he thought it was done tore off the baked mud and clay. Feathers and skin came with the covering, leaving a not very inviting skinless but well-browned bird. The boomer had timed the operation to a nicety, the turkey was cooked to a turn and though it was of uncertain age, it was fairly tender and delicious in flavor. Even making allowance for the sweet sauce hunger is admitted to be, it is only common fairness to describe that meal as a success, and I have eaten many a worse-cooked and tougher bird in a first-class restaurant. —Ex.

Bedroom Carpets.

There is an excellent way of laying bedroom carpets, in houses where rugs are not the rule. Fasten small strong hooks in the baseboard, close to the floor, and on the edge of the carpet sew corresponding rings. Slip the rings over the hooks and the carpet is securely laid. Of course a few tacks must be put where the carpet crosses a doorway, but these are quickly removed. By this method, which is employed in the sleeping-rooms of many hotels, a carpet may frequently be taken up, thoroughly shaken and replaced, without much more labor than would be required to sweep it while on the floor.—Good Housekeeping.

Antiquity of the Bedbug.

An English naturalist has discovered proofs that the bedbug was quite common in the armies of the world at least 120 years before the Chistian era, and that he was ever a sea rover, as the fleets of that day had their timbers stocked with this breed of nocturnal prowlers.

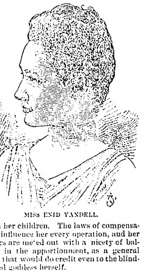
DOUBLY GIFTED WOMEN.

THEY ADD INTELLECTUALITY TO THE DOWER OF BEAUTY.

Enid Yandell's Wide Repute as a Sculptor—Miss Duke Loves Music, Mrs. Cutting the Stage, Miss Mosby Literature and Mrs. Jeffrey Is a Poet.

[Copyright, 1891, by American Press Association.]

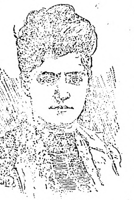
A just and prudent dame in most respects is Mother Nature. Equity and truth are her watchwords in her dealings with her children. The laws of compensation influence her every operation, and her favors are meted out with a nicety of balance in the apportionment, as a general rule, that would do credit even to the blindfolded goddess herself.



MISS ENID YANDELL.

The commonest and, alas! the most pathetic exemplification of this fact is the apparent irreconcilability in the case of a single individual of beauty of person and breadth of brain power.

If one is fair to look upon, the gods have been gracious enough forsooth—let proportionate wit be withheld and bestowed upon some less well favored creature. Intellectually endowed beyond his neighbor—then grace of feature must needs be the portion of a fellow being of an inferior capacity. So nature ordains in most instances, and so the dictum must be accepted. Great intellectual vigor and classic regularity of feature are for the most part incompatible. Thought plows furrows and lines and destroys grace and tenderness of contour. Mental force and activity in any great degree is wont to claim optical recognition in more or less physiognomic distortion. A face strictly in drawing and adhering in outline to the standard of the Greeks is seldom a face of purpose or power. Brains for the most part have a penalty to pay in an abstinence from beauty.

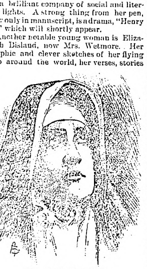


MISS CURRY DUKE.

Mme. de Stael's phenomenal brilliancy was inadequate to dissipate the shadow on her life cast by her morbid yearning for beauty and the love that is its accompaniment. George Eliot, too, the master mind of the age among women, felt her life robbed of half its meaning through lack of physical charm.

There are occasions, however, when Dame Nature contradicts herself and is as capricious as the rest of her sex. Then her masterpieces are accomplished. It was doubtless in one of her whimsical moods that she planned such a woman as Amelie Rives Chanler, who has been dowered with considerably more than her share of coveted attributes—beauty, talent, money, position and magnetism—who has been more talked about and written about and pictorially delineated than any other half dozen young American women. At the home of her girlhood, Castle Hill, she is now the center of a brilliant company of social and literary lights. A strong thing from her pen, now only in manuscript, is a drama, "Henry II," which will shortly appear.

Another notable young woman is Elizabeth Bisland, now Mrs. Wetmore. Her graphic and clever sketches of her flying trip around the world, her verses, stories and essays combine to show her versatility.



MRS. ALFRED CUTTING.

Miss Enid Yandell, of Louisville, is one of the noblest exemplars of the lavishness of nature's favors when an exception is needed to prove the rule of general equality. She is a fair girl of just twenty-two, gracious and sweet in her manners and one of the belles of the state. She was the queen of one of the recent magnificent Satellites' balls in Louisville.

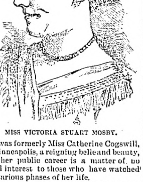
Miss Yandell has a genius for sculpture that is giving her a name and a fame that few women attain to. At the age of three her taste for the plastic art was developed to such an extent that she modeled an original sketch of Eve and the serpent. She accomplished a four years' course in modeling in two years, and is making rapid strides toward excellence. Many years of her young life have been devoted to her studies abroad under the best masters. [illegible] was her instructor for some time.

A gratifying distinction was conferred upon Miss Yandell when she was selected from many competitors to do the sculptural work upon the roof garden of the woman's building at the World's fair. The young artist is now busy upon a 6-foot caryatid for the support of an upper railing upon the edifice. The architect of this building is also a young woman, Miss Hayden, of Boston. All her pretty stationery bears in tiny silver letters the legend, "Enid Yandell, Sculptor." She has executed many historic and classical groups.

Miss Curry Duke is the beautiful daughter of General Basil W. Duke, of Confederate fame, and niece of the noted General John Morgan. She is the incarnation of music—a latter day edition of St. Cecilia, whose soul is all a-tune with divine harmonies. The violin is her instrument, and the rare old Stradivarius that she loves seems instinct with rhythmical emotions in the embrace of this slender child of genius. Miss Duke has been a favored pupil of the great Joachim, in Berlin, for several years.

She is exquisitely pretty, with an appealing childishness of expression, great lustrous brown eyes and skin like polished ivory. She has been steeped in admiration and adulation from her very babyhood, and yet is unspoiled, "unspotted from the world," and almost sublimated by the magic influence of her art.

Favored two fold by the gods in as high a degree as those who have gone before is Mrs. Alfred Cutting, the regally beautiful wife of a wealthy Cincinnatian, and a woman of marvelous social power. Impelled by the force of a histrionic ability, which she felt to be latent in her, she has followed the lead of her great ambition and devoted herself to the stage—throwing conventionality to the winds. She was formerly Miss Catherine Cogswill, of Minneapolis, a reigning belle and beauty, and her public career is a matter of no small interest to those who have watched the various phases of her life.



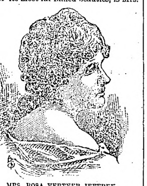
MISS VICTORIA STUART MOSBY.

Endowed with graces mental and physical, and with a romantic career thrown into the bargain, is a lovely daughter of General John S. Mosby, the "guerrilla chieftain" of the war.

Miss Victoria Stuart Mosby is beautiful, erratic, gifted, charming. She has a fearless picturesqueness in dress—an almost masculine taste for out of door sports. She is an artist of ability and an author of no small reputation. Her contributions adorn the pages of many leading publications. She is a brilliant and original conversationist. Her features are as clear cut as a cameo, and her hair is like a gold brown aureole.

Miss Mosby has been before the public of late as the heroine of a sensational affair, the hero being her lover, who was accused of being one and the same with Shoebox Miller, an ex-convict. Miss Mosby is firmly convinced of the innocence of her fiance, whom she met first at the house of a Polish nobleman in Washington. She has written some excellent stories on hypnotism.

One of the south's sweetest poets, and one of its most far famed beauties, is Mrs. Rosa Vertner Jeffrey, of Kentucky, whose social and literary career has been a thing of marked brilliancy for years. Feted and admired all her life, surrounded by luxury and refinement, always the center of a cultivated coterie, Mrs. Jeffrey has led an existence almost idyllic. She is marvelously beautiful, with clearly chiseled features, eyes like stars, complexion marblelike in tint and texture and abundant hair that falls about her wide brow in a wealth of natural curls now silvered. She has published a book of tender rhythmical poems. Mrs. Jeffrey is one of the most notable representatives of genius and beauty combined in all the southland. Such women as these, the douby dowered, are nature's luxuries—her holiday editions.



MRS. ROSA VERTNER JEFFREY.

DAISY FITZHUGH.

Science Applied to Agriculture.

A writer who believes in the department of agriculture and in the value of improved methods of farming says:

"A fine example of what science has done for agriculture is found in the matter of resting the soil by rotation of crops. It took the world a long time to find out that a change of crop, when properly made, rests the soil as well as fallowing; a long time to learn that an increase of live stock on a farm, under certain conditions, increases its fertility; a long time to learn that artificial drainage warms and lightens cold and heavy soils, advancing the harvest by weeks and bringing the subsoil to the support of the impoverished surface, by which, as some one has said, we find a new farm under the old, or as Emerson graphically put it, 'By drainage we have gone to the subsoil, and we have a Concord under Concord, a Middlesex under Middlesex and a basement story of Massachusetts more valuable than the superstructure.' These things were not learned by accident, but were demonstrated by the application of scientific principles."

Attention Canadians.

WINTER EXCURSIONS TO PRINCIPAL POINTS IN CANADA.

Will again be run from the Northest and all principles points in, at the low rate of $40.00 for the round tirp. Tickets will be on sale in Manitoba daily from Tuesday December 1st to 30th inclusive and Northern Minnesota and North Dakota on Tuesday December 1st and 8th and daily from December 15th to 22nd inclusive and on Tuesday December 29th. Limit of tickets 90 days from date of sale. Those contemplate taking advantage of these low rate excursions should bear in mind that the Northern Pacific in connection with the Wisconsin central from the public highway from points in the Nortewest to Chicago On December 1st, 8th, 15thr22nd, anp 29th through Pullman furnised tourist sleeping cars will be run via those lenes to Chicago with out change, in which the rate for one dauble berth from starting point Chicago will be but $2.00.

Tickets, maps, time table and full information can be obtainet from any agent of the Northern Pacific R. R.

Canadian Excursions.

Excursion tickets to Canada will be no sale via St. Paul and "The North-Western Lina," to Chicago at offices of the Great Northern Rs., from points in Minnesota and Dakota north of and including Crookston and Grand Forks on December 1st, 8th, 15th, 20th, 21st, 22nd and 29th, and from points in Manitoba on December 1st, 8th, 15th, 22nd and 29th, 1891.

To Motreal and points west of Montreal the rate will be $40.00 for the round trip.

Tickets will also be sold to points east of Montreal at a trifle higher rate.

The Montana ann Manitoba Express trains of the Great Northern Ry. arriyes in St. Paul in the morning in time to connect with the "North-Western Line" fast day train leaving St. Paul at 7.50 a. m., arriving in Chicago 9.35 p. m., making connections with late night trains out of Chicago to the east.

Passenger arriving at St. Paul in the morning, desiring to stay over until evening can take the vestibale limited on this line that leaves St. Paul at 7.30 p. m. and arrives Chicago 9 o'clock next morning.

Buy your tickets over "The North-Western Line" it is also the only line running a train from St. Paul every morning both week days and Sundays to Milwaukee and Chicago.

M. M. WHEELER,
Agent.

T. W. TUESDALE,
Gen'l Passenger Agt., St. Paul, Minn.

:- IMPERIAL -:

TONSORIAL HALL!

N. MORISETTE, PROP.

Everything First Class!

SHAVING,
HAIR-CUTTING,
SHAMPOOING!

☞ Shaving 15 cents.

Haircutting 25 cents. ☜

Main Street. Red Lake Fall

PATENTS!

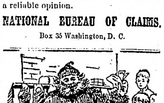
Pension, Postal, Land and Indian Depredation Claims.

U. S. and Foreign Patents obtained;
Interferences conducted;
Special examinations;
Trade-marks, copy-rights, labels and designs registered.

Rejected cases prosecuted; Infringment suits conducted in any United States Court.

If you have an invention, send us a sketch, photograph or small model, together with a brief description of the most important features and we will advise you the course to pursue. If you are in posession of patents and the same are infringed, or if you are charged with infringement, submit the matter to us for a reliable opinion.

NATIONAL BUREAU OF CLAIMS.
Box 35 Washington, D. C.



SANTA CLAUS makes his headquarters at Flack's.

For Sale.

I HAVE FOR SALE THE FOLLOWING LANDS,

Improved and Unimproved

FARMS

IN POLK COUNTY, MINN.

Long Time, Small Payments, Low Rate of Interest.

	SECTION.	TOWN.	RANGE.	SETTLER
W½ o5 Nw¼	29	147	43	Wilson
Nw¼ of sw¼	28	147	43	Wilson
Se¼ of Ne¼	30	141	52	Wilson
Se¼	6	148	42	Sylvesterson
Se¼	8	146	45	Troxell
Ne¼	2	148	45	Dillon
Sw¼	2	148	44	LaDuc
S½ of Nw¼	2	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Rivard
S½ of Sw¼	4	149	44	Bombardier
N½ of Nw¼	9	149	44	Bombardier
Se¼	7	146	44	Vaudrin
Nw¼	11	149	44	Tanasso
Ne¼	11	149	44	Emil'Fontane
Ne¼	4	149	45	Beaudette
Sw¼	12	149	45	Herbert
E½ of Ne¼ & E½ of Se¼	23	149	45	Patnode
Sw¼	24	149	46	Chayer
Sw¼	20	149	46	Haber
Ne¼	26	149	48	Folk
Ne¼ of Nw¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
N½ of Ne¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
Nw¼ of nw¼	9	150	41	Lemieux
Ne¼	26	150	41	Gabourey
Ne¼	10	150	42	Dagneau
Se¼	13	150	42	Lajambe
Se¼	25	150	42	Sylvester
Nw¼	32	150	42	Lachapelle
Se¼	12	150	43	Deserve
W½ of Se¼	13	15	43	Marlow
N½ of Ne¼	24	150	43	Marlow
Nw¼	17	150	43	Desotelle
se¼	11	150	43	Lizee
Ne¼	23	150	43	Bess.n
Se¼	23	150	43	Valle
Se¼	29	150	43	Toepin
E½ of Nw¼	31	150	43	Rabillard
Lots 1 and 2	31	150	43	Rabillard
Nw¼	32	150	43	Dandenault
Ne¼	33	150	43	Gaudette
Ne¼	10	150	44	Boutellere
Se¼	31	150	44	Charron
Nw¼	33	150	44	Zaiser
Sw¼	34	150	44	Houle
Ne¼	6	150	45	Garon
E½Sw¼	6	150	45	LaBelle
Lots 6 and 7	6	150	45	LaBelle
E½ of Sw¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
W½Se¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
Nw¼	12	150	46	Pare
Sw¼ of Tw¼	3	151	42	Doutre
S½ So¼	4	151	42	Doutre
Se¼ Sw¼	4	154	42	Doutre
Se¼ of Nw¼	4	150	42	Meilleur
Sw¼ of Ne¼	4	151	42	Meilleur
Lots 2 and 3	4	151	42	Meilleur
N½ of Se¼	18	151	42	Sotourneau
N½ of Sw¼	17	151	42	Sotourneau
Se¼	15	151	43	McIntire
Lots 1 2 and 3	17	151	43	Emard
E½ of Nw¼	17	151	43	Emard
Ne¼ of Nw¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
Nw¼ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
S½ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
W½ of W½	23	151	43	Page
Ne¼	33	151	43	Beausoleel
E½ of Nw¼	7	151	44	Blaire
Lots 1 and 2	7	151	44	Blaire
Nw¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Lots 8 9 and 12	15	151	44	Bottineau
Ne¼ Se¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Nw¼ Sw¼	23	151	44	Bottineau
S½ Ne¼	6	151	44	Muller
Lots 1 and 2	6	151	44	Muller
Se¼	4	151	45	Jones
Se¼	14	151	45	Berry
Ne¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	32	151	45	Fleurie
Ne¼	20	150	46	McLean
Ne¼	24	151	46	Gauthier
Se¼	24	161	46	Tougas
Se¼	8	151	48	Lyle
Ne¼	25	152	42	Paussant
W½ of Ne¼ & w½ of se¼	28	152	43	Beaulieu
Nw¼	30	152	43	Turville
E½ of Nw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
Lot 1	31	152	43	Rourke
Ne¼ of Sw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
N½ of Sw	10	152	44	Loe
Sw¼ of Se¼	10	152	44	Loe
Ne¼	13	152	44	Sandon
Sw¼	15	152	44	Dahlbeck
Nw¼	25	152	44	Rourke
Sw¼	25	152	44	Comstock
Ne¼	34	152	44	Rourke
Nw¼	25	152	45	Carroll
Se¼	28	152	45	Pepin
Nw¼	32	152	45	Pilon
S½ of Ew¼	2	152	46	Kirsch
Lots 3 and 4	2	152	46	Kirsch
E½ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Ne¼ of Se¼	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼	20	152	46	Carlton
Tw¼	26	152	46	Billandeau
Sw¼	4	152	48	Feeny
Fe¼	24	152	49	Brownlee
Se¼	11	153	43	Ness
Nw¼	25	153	44	Ives
Sw¼ of Ne¼	2	152	45	Bray
Lot 2	2	153	45	Bray
W½ of Se¼	2	153	45	Bray
Nw¼ of Sw¼	10	153	45	Bray
Sw¼	4	153	45	Lucian
Nw¼	6	152	45	Lusia
Sw¼	12	153	45	Clement
E½ of E½	14	153	45	Clement
W½ of E½	14	153	45	Coo
Se¼	18	153	45	Labounta Sr.
Sw¼	18	153	45	Labounta
E½ of W½	2	153	46	Lusia
Nw¼	8	153	46	Kelly
Se¼	8	153	46	Caroltine
Ne¼	14	153	44	Stacy
Nw¼	20	153	46	Cole
Se¼	26	153	46	Labounty
Se¼	28	154	45	Gooler
S½ of Ne	32	154	46	Bautain
Se¼	25	153	46	Lusian
Ne¼	34	154	46	Thamas
S½ Ne¼ & 1 1,2	2	152	46	Filbin
Nw¼	32	150	45	Brosseau
Ne¼	30	152	43	Miller
Ne¼	19	152	42	Borup
Ne¼	29	150	41	Stone
Sw¼	10	151	46	Benoit

A. D. Wishard,
RED LAKE FALLS,
ma 31f5 Polk Co., Minn.

Railroad Time Table.

LEAVE		ARRIVE
P. M.		A. M.
8	St. Paul.	10.30
8.35	Minneapolis.	9.55
1159	Brainerd	5.05
A. M.
2.37	Wadena	3.32
4.35	Detroit	1.38
		P. M.
5.33	Winnipeg Jct.	12.51
8.50	Fertile.	7.30
10.05 p.m		7.31 a.m.
p. m.		a. m.
5.58	Red Lake Falls.	5.48
10.03	Crookston.	8.25
2.50	Grand Forks,	9.40
3.30	Via Red Lake Falls.	11.50
7.32	Forest River	11.40
6.58	Grafton	11.40
P. M.		P. M.
5.13	Pombina	1.34
4.03	Morris	2.44
2.50	Winnipeg.	4.25

CHAS. S. FEE G. P. T. A. W. S. MELLEN. G. M. J. A. DUFFY, Agt.

Get an Estimate

Of the Cost of Your Building - From

JAMES BRADY,

CONTRACTOR AND BUILDER.

Foreman of the Construction of

North Side Roller Mill.
P.&J. Meehan's Saw Mill.
J.D. Marshall's residence.
And others

Office at residence on hamilton av.

CHICAGO & ATLANTIC

In conjunction with the Erie System operates Fast Vestibuled Trains between Chicago and the Atlantic Seaboard. you may travel in the most Elegant and complete Pullman Vestibuled Trains ever constructed and save $1.50 to Buffalo and Niagara Falls, $2.00 to New York $2.35 to Albany and Troy, and $3.00 to Boston and New England Cities.

No rival line offers the advantages of a system of through first and second-class day coaches and Pullman Dining cars chicago to New York.

It is the only line operating pullman cars to Boston and New England via Albany.

Entire trains are lighted by gas, heated by steam. Pullman dining cars run through in either direction.

Pullman chair and sleeping cars to Columbus, O., and Ashland, Ky., Daily.

No extra charge for fast time and unsurpassed accommodations afforded in these luxurious trains.

NORTHERN PACIFIC

BETWEEN

Winnipeg, Gilby, Dayton, Grafton, Grand Forks-Crookston, Red Lake Falls, AND ALL POINTS

EAST AND WEST.

There is nothing better than the service on

THE DINING CAR LINE

Through Pullman Sleeping Cars Daily Between Points in the

RED RIVER VALLEY

AND

ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS

PACIFIC COAST TRAINS
PASSING THROUGH
MINNESOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA
IDAHO, ORENON AND WASHINGTON,

CARRY COMPLETE EQUIPMENT OF

Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars,
First and Second Class Coaches,
Pullman Tourist and
Free Colonist Sleepers.

And Elegant Dining Cars.

THROUGH TICKETS Are sold at all coupon offices of the Northern Pacific Railroad to points North, East, South and west, in the United States and Canada.

For further information regarding rates, routes maps, etc., address

CHAS. S. FEE, G. P. & T. Agt., St. Paul, Minn.
J. A. DUFFY Local Agt

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Nov. 24, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on January 9th, 1892, viz, Paul Prue, hd 11856 for the s½ ne¼ and lots 1 and 2, sec 6, twp 149, r 42.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz.

Toussaint Beaudry, Joseph Benoit, Joseph Leroux, all of Terrebonne, Polk Co., Minn.; John Quesnell, of Mentor, Polk Co., Minn.

nov26d31 H. H. Dickmann, Register.

Scientific American Agency for

PATENTS

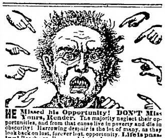
CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the

Scientific American

Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York.

The Mormon Elders' Book on Sexual Strength, mailed free to married men, address F. B. Crouch, 202 Grand St., New York



HE Missed his Opportunity! DON'T Miss Yours, Reader. The majority neglect their opportunities, and from that cause live in poverty and die in obscurity! Harrowing despair is the lot of many, as they look back on lost, forever lost, opportunity. Life is passing! Reach out. Be up and doing. Improve your opportunity, and secure prosperity, prominence, peace. It was said by a philosopher, that "the Goddess of Fortune offers a golden opportunity to each person at some period of life; embrace the chance, and she pours out her riches; fail to do so and she departs, never to return." How shall you find the GOLDEN opportunity? Investigate every chance that appears worthy, and of fair promise; that is what all successful men do. Here is an opportunity, such as is not often within the reach of laboring people. Improved, it will give, at least, a grand start in life. The GOLDEN opportunity for many is here. Money to be made rapidly and honorably by any industrious person of either sex. All ages. You can do the work and live at home, wherever you are. Even beginners are easily earning from $5 to $10 per day. You can do as well if you will work, not too hard, but industriously; and you can increase your income as you go on. You can give spare time only, or all your time to the work. Easy to learn. Capital not required. We start you. All is comparatively new and really wonderful. We instruct and show you how, free. Failure unknown among our workers. No room to explain here. Write and learn all free, by return mail. Unwise to delay. Address at once, H. Hallett & Co., Box 880, Portland, Maine.

Green Bay,
Winona
& St. Paul

Railroad. Best and most Direct Line Between

LaCROSSE,
WINONA,
Neillsville,
Eau Claire,
Grand Rapids,
Stevens Point,
New London,
Appelton,
Neenah,
Menasha,
Oshkosh,
Fon du Lac,
GREEN BAY.

And all Points in
EASTERN WISCONSIN,
Iron Districts of Northern Michigan and Lake Superior Regions.

Close Connections and Quick Time,

See That Your Ticket Reads Via
GREEN BAY, WINONA & ST. PAUL
Railroad.

S. W. Champion,
Superintendent, Green Bay, Wis.
J. B. Last,
Ass't Gen. Pass. Agt., Green Bay, Wis.

REAL ESTATE,

INTELLIGENCE AND COLLECTION OFFICE

SPECIAL BARGAINS NOW ON HAND

In Desirable Property. Call or Write for Particulars.

CYPRIEN GOSSELIN.

Office on Bottineau Avenue, Red Lake Falls.

Land office at Crookston, Minn., Nov. 27th 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register or Receiver U. S. Land office at Crookston Minn. on January 11, 1892, viz: Euclide Beaudry Hd 10791 for the NE¼ sec 23 Twp 150 Rg 44.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:

John T. Beaudry, Crookston, Louis Albert, Ambroise Delorme, Louis Guillmette all of Red Lake Falls, Minn.

dec. 3-jan 6 Hugh Thompson Register

Land office at Crookston, Minn., Dec. 19th, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim and that said proof will be made before the U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on March 1st, 1892, viz: Vila Roch, D. S. 10,923, for the sw¼ sec. 15, twp 150, r 43.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz:

Joseph Dupont, Leon Rivard, Mitchell Champagne, E. Lambert, all of Terrebonne P. O., Polk Co., Minn.

d24jan22 Hugh Thompson, Register.

First National Bank

RED LAKE FALLS, MINN.

JAS. I. WYER, Pres.
JOS. SMITH, Vice President,
THEO. GARCEAU, Cashier

Capital.... $50,000.
Surplus..... $5,000.

Careful Attention and Prompt returns given all Collections.

ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

How about the Leap Year Ball?

S. Elstad reports business lively at his blacksmith shop.

The Oddfellows Lodge will probably give a play after lent.

We understand the store in Homles block will again be opened.

Insurance agents will do a rushing business now for some time.

Miss Evelyn Paul took a trip to Lambert week, returning Saturday.

The council will probably take steps toward securing a fire equipment.

To-morrow is Christmas Day. The News wishes all its readers a Merry Christmas.

Wagons are coming into requisition again, anent the absence of snow in many places along the roads.

A large number of Canadian excursionists took advantage of the special train on the N. P. line Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Ralph and Bar-[illegible] drove over from Crookston Saturday to visit relatives.

Miss Katie Hagen, of Devil's Lake, N. D., arrived Saturday p. m. and is now a guest of her sister Mrs. R. Lavik.

Francois Biland, of Lambert, took sick Saturday and died Sunday, after intense suffering. He was thirty eight years old.

Miss Elodia Bray has been seriously ill with congestion of the lungs. We are pleased to state, however, she is improving rapidily.

Mrs. Ralph starts Sunday for Beltrami county with her grand daughter Eva, where they will make their home for some time.

J. F. Loveik, of Pisek, N. D., arrived in the city Tuesday morning. He is looking up a location and is pleased with Red Lake Falls.

A large number of Miss Evelyn Paul's friends called on her in a body the first of the week and spent the evening at games and pastimes.

Frank Hunt has the cutest thing out—minature cook stoves, for toys, which do cooking and baking (on a small scale) as good as the larger ones.

Oscar Simenson drove out to Lambert Friday, returning with his sister Clara, teacher of the Lambert school, who will spend Christmas at home.

Special Christmas services will be held at St. Mary's church. Friday morning, beginning at 5 a. m. The old choir will render select music for the occasion.

Mrs. H. J. Kaufer and daughter Mamie arrived Monday from St. Paul, and will spend the holidays with their friends here. They are greeted with a hearty welcome.

St. Joseph's church bell was rung by Joe Lemieux Monday morning. No sooner had Joe discovered the fire than he made for the bell and soon had roused the whole town.

Mr. and Mrs. Desire Lacoursier started for Canada, Sunday. Their son Richard, who has been sick, has since grown worse and it is feared his illness may take a serious turn ere his parents' return.

Jas. Meehan Jr. went to St. Paul Monday night to meet his wife and son who were on their way from Wisconsin. The family arrived here yesterday morning, and ye editor has resumed his accustomed smile.

W. A. Schreiter got the heavy fine of $100 for selling liquor without a license. The circumstances of the case were all against such a verdict, but for some reason, best understood by the county attorney, this availed him nothing.

As the Christmas-tide approaches we behold written in brightness above its crest the words "Prosperity and Happiness." They dwell in the land this year, and ride the tides that flow, bringing their presence home to the hearts of the million.

The committee of St. Joseph's fair have decided to hold the bazar in the Holmes block. Opera hall was deemed unsafe for the large crowds that are present at the fairs, and an inspection of the foundation confirmed the accuracy of their apprehensions.

Every line of business in the city is flourishing. Every business man and every farmer who were shaky financially have been placed upon their feet by the bounteous crops and consequent prosperity. Confidence in every branch of business is revived, and the tottering, shaky pace of commerce has been superseded by firm elasticity.

The fall of snow last night insures grandsleighing.

The Park Rapids correspondent of the Minneapolis Journal says: Rev. Fr. Balluff, of Duluth, has been appointed to take charge of the Catholic church here. The Catholics will complete their church and also build a parsonage when spring opens.

Will. P. Crawford arrived Tuesday morning from Hitchcock, S. D., to spend the holidays. Will is holding a nice position in Hitchcock, being principal of the schools there, and is meeting with the success his activity and ambition merit.

It is generally supposed that the fair sex do the soundest slumbering, for "the guiltless mind is the one at rest." But Monday morning it appears in all cases it was the ladies in the household who heard the first clap of the bell. The only way we can account for it is because Monday is washday

Great Scott! Just think of it—Triplets! That is what Dr. O'Keef reports occurred at the home of Jacob Nelson, when his wife presented him with two fine girls and a boy all well and hearty. And still the snow and blizzard goes on and Jake takes all serenely, and as a matter of course.- Minto Journal.

If ever anyone had "a warm reception" upon returning home, it was Doc Lemieux Tuesday morning. The Doctor arrived home from a trip to Terrebonne just as the fire at Wells' had gotten under good headway; and, coming from the south, from which direction the building was obscured, thought it was his residence.

When Charles H. Cramp, the famous shipbuilder, returned from a recent visit to Europe, he was reported as saying that the highest class of ships can now be built in America at as low prices as on the Clyde, the Mersey or the Thames. He will contribute to the January number of the North American Review an erticle maintaining this position, and supporting it with many interesting facts.

The News has a Christmas offer: The Cosmopolitan Magazine, monthly, for one year. the News for one year and General Grant's Memoirs, for $4.50. The Memoirs are the Original edition that sold for $7. The same binding. The Cosmopolitan Magazine is a first class publication—like the Century Magazine. The News is your local paper—that's enough. The regular subscription price of the Cosmopolitan is $3.00. Now think about it, ye who like literature.

John B. Demarais called at the News office Monday, for a social chat, and informed us that he was so encouraged with results this year that he purchased an additional 160 acres, known as the Fournet place, which lies south of and adjoins his farm. The price paid was $1,300. John is perfectly satisfied with the results of farming. His harvest this year was 2,200 bushels of wheat, 2,200 bushels of oats and 100 bushels of barley. J. B. gets along without hired help, having the assistance of two grown up sons.

Sunday the committees of St. Mary's churches met and made arrangements with Rev. Fr. Arpin as pastor of both parishes. The reverand gentleman will reside in St. Joseph's parsonage. Mass will be celebrated in both churches each Sunday, high and low mass every alternate Sabbath. The arrangements are perfectly satisfactory to both parishes, and might have been made with profit years ago. Rev. Arpin delivered a fine address in English, Sunday. He has acquired fluency in English with wonderful dexterity.

St. Joseph's church fair opens at the opera house Monday, and will continue the 29th and 30th, and possibly longer if there is a demand. The fair committee is as follows: Mrs. Isajah Marchildon, president; Geo. La Bissionere, treasurer; and Miss Victoria La Freniere, secretary. Supper will be served each evening at a seasonable time. Mrs. P. G. Falardeau has been prevailed upon to favor those in attendance with vocal music each evening. The contests for different prizes will be lively, as follows: for gold watch Messrs. Peter Paradis and Ferdinand Legacy; for silk dress, Misses Elodia Bray and Mattie Gervais; for castors, Mesdames Moes Verboncouer and R. Gagnon; for doll, Victoria Paul and Elodia Cyr. There will be a large list of articles on sale.

Make a50c purchase at the Drug and and Jewelry Store and get a nice present free.

Flack the Jeweler.

DR PRICE'S
Cream Baking Powder.
Used in Millions of Homes—40 Years the Standard.

Mr. Allerd has taken a position as clerk at H. M.Kaus' store.

James Duffy is a guest of his sister Mrs. L. A. Kaufer.

A brother of the Mead boys is visiting them over the holidays.

Comr. Demers is superintending repairs on theRed Lake river bridge.

Timber for the G. N. bridge over the Red Lake river arrived this week. Construction progresses.

Jas. C. O'Brien arrived in the city yesterday morning from Park Rapids. He has been on the White Earth reservation with the commissioners appointed to estimate the amount of pine contained in the forty acre tracts surveyed. He will return after the holidays. Jim likes to spend such occasions at Red Lake Falls.

This evening the Christmas Eve celebration will be held at the Presbyterian church. A special program has been arranged, and it will be endeavored to mingle the spirit of christianity with genuine happiness, a natural combination. Santa Claus will be present to disperse gifts to the children and grown folk as well and no doubt Rev, McCormack will entertain with a well chosen address.

Boys will be boys, but not everyone knows how to manage them; but if you wish some practical, common sense suggestions, read the article on the subject published in the January number of Demorest's Family Magazine, that ideal publication which bears out to the full the promise of its name. The January number contains a genuine holiday feast, and this splendid menu, with variation, is furnished twelve times a year, for the subscription price of $2. Published by W. Jennings Domorest, 15 East 14th St., New York City.

For every dollar purchase you make at the Drug and Jewelry Store you will receive a 25c present.

Best horseshoeing done at Findeisen's.

Dolls, Dolls, Dolls, at Schreiter's drug store.

Everything in holiday goods at Schreiters' drug store.

More new goods just received at the Drug and Jewelry Store.

The largest and best assorted line of holiday goods at Schreiter's.

For every 50c purchase at my store you will receie a 10c present.

Flack the Jeweler.

All kinds of COAL for sale at Hoskin's elevator.

32. W. T. Spillane.

Buy your candy, nuts, figs and popcorn of Flack the Jeweler. A fine new stock just received.

Grand display of holiday goods in Clocks and Silverware at Schreiter's.

O My! Those beautiful Dolls at the Drug and Jewelry Store are just too sweet for anything.

You will find a nice line of stoves including Radiant Home, Early Breakfast and Charter Oak at Hunts.

Give us a chance to show you our holiday goods and quote prices. We carry all the latest novelties

W. A. Schreiter.

Buy your holiday goods of Flack the Jeweler and get a nice present with every 50c purchase.

The largest stock of tin and wood toys in Eastern Polk county sold very cheap at Schreiter's drug store.

At S. Elstad's blacksmith shop near the depot, you can get guaranteed work. First-class horse shoing by an old experienced workman.

If you want a sewing machine be sure and examine Hunt's. He carries the Domestic, Favorite and American No. 7. Prices or terms to suit.

Team of working horses for sale. Weight 12 and 14 hundred. P. & J. Meehan. Red Lake Falls, Minn. Apply at the lumber yards.

Buy your presents at the Drug and Jewelry Store and gladden the hearts of your father, mother, sister, brother or sweetheart.

Conversation cards, card games, authors and lotos at Schreiters.

Mat Skala's place on Broadway stil retains its popularity, and not without reason—Mat has dexterity and tact. A full stock of wines, liquors and cigars. When in need of liquors for medicinal purposes.

Horseowners, Take Notice.

At the request of many of my customers I have secured the services of a first class horse shoer and respectfully solicit a share of your patronage. First class work guaranteed.

Wm. Findeisen.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retird from practice having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and desire to relieve human suffering I will send, free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Land Office at Crookston Minn. Dec 15th., 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register or Receiver U. S. Land office at Crookston Minn., on February 4th, 1892, viz: Toussaint Fournier H d No. 14233, for the S. ½, NE ¼ and S½ Nw¼ Sec 34. Twp 151 R 43.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:

Joseph Laurent, Frank St Martin, Joseph St. Martin, Henry Prudhomme, all of Terrebonne, Polk county, Minn.

dec17-jan15 Hugh Thompson, Register.

Land office at Crookston, Minn., Dec. 14th, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of the U. S. land office at Crookston Minn., on February 1st, 1892, viz: Louis Lefevre, Hd 10,970, for the n½ ne¼ sec 33 and n½ nw¼ sec 34, tp 152, r 42.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz.

Isaiah Morrisette, H. Blivin, Peter Morrisette, Louis Thereau, all of Emard P. O. Polk County, Minn.

jan15 Hugh Thompson, Register.

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Dec. 14th, 1891.

Notice is hereby given, that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of the U. S Land Office at Crookston Minn., on February 1st, 1892, viz: Isaiah Morrisette, hd 11,039, for the s½ se¼ sec 5, se¼ sw¼ sec 4, nw¼ nw¼ sec 9, tp 151, r 42.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:

Louis Lefevre, H. Blivin. Frank Vallencourt, John B. Derosier, all of Emard P. O., Polk Co., Minn.

jan 15 Hugh Thompson, Register.

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Dec. 10th, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of the U. S. land office at Crookston, Minn., on February 10th, 1892, viz: Charles Benoit, pre D S 11,518, for the nw¼ sec 24, twp 150, r 42.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:

Treffley Robidaux, Napoleon Guilmette, J. Ebert Joseph Chanpon, all of Lambert, Polk Co. Minn.

Harry Juvenville, who made Pre D. S. 11191 on the above land on May 28th, 1889, is hereby cited to appear at this office February 10th, 1892, and show cause why said proof should not be allowed and his said entry cancelled.

jan15 Hugh Thompson, Register.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION
OF
THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK AT RED LAKE FALLS, IN THE STATE OF MINNESOTA AT THE CLOSE OF BUSINESS, Dec. 2d, 1891.

RESOURCES.
Loans and discounts	67,042.01
Overdrafts, secured and unsecured	141.05
U. S. Bonds to secure circulation	12,500.00
Due from approved reserve agents	13,128.46
Due from other National Banks	1,102.89
Banking-house, furniture & fixtures	2,457.08
Other real estate and mortgages owned	629.12
Current expenses and taxes paid	682.36
Checks and other cash items	34.93
Bills of other banks	687.00
Fractional paper currency, nickles and cents	11.58
Specie	2,426.00
Legal-tender notes	4,500.00
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer (5 per cent of circulation)	562.50
Total	105,914.98
LIABILITIES.
Capital stock paid in	50,000.00
Surplus fund	5,000.00
Undivided profits	2,059.77
National Bank notes outstanding	11,250.00
Individual deposits subject to check	25,878.34
Demand certificates of deposit	6,061.87
Time certificates of deposit	5,290.00
Notes and bills rediscounted	375.00
Total	$105,914.98

State of Minnesota county of Polk, SS.

I, Theo. Garceau, Cashier of the above-named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Theo. Garceau, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 15th day of Dec., 1891.

H. H. Zaiser, Notary Public, Polk Co. Minn.

Correct—Attest:

Joseph Smith,
Jas I. Wyer,
Frank E. Hunt } Directors

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.
(First publication Dec. 3.)

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of fifty and 25-100 dollars, interest, which became due on the twenty-first day of November 1891, which default has continued to the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Luc Dumas, mortgagor, to D. S. B. Johnston Land Mortgage Company, a corporation duly incorporated and organized under the laws of the state of Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the twenty-first day of November, 1887, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, on the 22nd day of November, A.D. 1887, at 4:15 o'clock p. m., in book 38 of mortgages, on page 122.

Which said mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said D. S. B. Johnston Land Mortgage Company, mortgagee, to William J. Peck, by written assignment, dated the twenty-fourth day of April, A.D. 1888, and recorded in the office of said register of deeds, on the ninth day of May, A. D. 1888, at 1 o'clock p. m., in book 36 of said mortgage records, on page 96;

And whereas, the said William J. Peck, the assignee and holder of said mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said mortgage, and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of six hundred fifty and 25-100 dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent per annum from the twenty-first day of November, A. D., 1891, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz:

The south west quarter (sw¼) of section twenty two (22), in township one hundred forty nine (149) of range forty-five (45) containing one hundred and sixty acres, more or less, according to to the government survey thereof, in Polk counand state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county, or his deputy, at the front door of the court house, in the city of Crookston in said county and state, on the 16th day of January, 1892, at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of six hundred fifty and 25-100 dollars, and interest, and eighty-six and 45-100 dollars taxes paid by said assignee on said premises, and fifty dollars, attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 2, 1891.

William J. Peck, Assignee of Mortgagee.
D. D. Webster Attorney for Assignee of Mortgagee, 322 Hennepin ave, Minneapolis, Minn.

State of Minnesota, county of Polk—ss.

In Probate Court, Special Term, Dec. 5th, 1891.

In the matter of the estate of Peter Bischoff, deceased:

On reading and filing the petition of Joseph Bischoff, administrator of the estate of Peter Bischoff, deceased, representing, among other things, that he has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining, settling and allowing the final account of his administration, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to the parties entitled thereto by law.

It is ordered that said account be examined, and petition heard by this court on Monday, the 11th day of January, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the office of the judge of probate, in the city of Crookston in said county.

And it is further ordered, That notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Red Lake Falls News, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 5th day of December, A. D. 1891.

By the Court,
oc15-29 C. M. Benson, Judge of Probate

We Greet You!

Once again! How time does fly! The echoes of last year's greeting have hardly passed away and yet in a few short weeks we shall be wishing eachother a

Merry Christmas

Another time. To men engrossed in the cares and perplexities of business the year speed by as months—but they

Can not rob us of time to welcome the holiday which was once the happiest day in the year to us, and which is so closely linked with cherished memories of childhoood and youth.

Our Holiday Offerings

Plsuh Dressing Cases, Plush Manicure sets, Silvered Dressing Cases, Plush Whisk Broom Holders, Oder and Perfume Sets, Plush Shaving Sets, Plush and Leather Paperettes, Plush and Leather cuff and Collar Boxes Albums from 50c to $6.50 each. Tin and wood Toys in endless variety. Toy Books, Story

Books

About Dec. 15th we will receive atock of Story Books, suitable for Young and Old.

China Cups and Saucers, Decorated Lamps, the Largest assortment of Dolls in Eastern Polk County. All our goods are marked in plain figures at lowest prices.

We do not add 50 per cent. to the price of goods and promise to give with every dollar's worth of goods a 25c toy.

The Sundry Holiday novelties contained in our immense stock are of course too numerous to mention. The only way to get the full benefit of all the goods is to Call And Inspect Our Goods.

Remember the place.

The Old Reliable
Drug Store.

W. A. SCHREITER,
MAIN ST. PROPRIETOR. N ST.

LOOK HERE! : : :
Look Here!

Ovide Emard

THE CONFECTIONER HAS SOMETHING TO

Interest Everyone.

AT HIS STORE MAY BE FOUND

HOLIDAY GOODS

THAT WILL BE SURE TO PLEASE

CANDIES,
NUTS, FIGS
DATES,
ORANGES.

A LARGE, FRESH, NEW STOCK.

I wish to make especial mention Of my fine line of Xmas tree ornaments. These

Christmas TreeOrnam'ts

Comprise the entire outfit for artistical decoration. You will consult

Your own Interests

By purchasing of me.

I DON'T SELL GOODS AT COST,

But I can guarantee my prices as low as the lowest.
Don't forget I have a stock of apples that is away
Out of sight. Best apples, $4. Lower grades.

Yours Very Truly,

Ovide Emard.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

MANY RECOMMENDATIONS OFFERED TO CONGRESS.

A Careful Review of the Chilian Complications—Other Foreign Relations—Tariff Legislation—His Views on the Silver Question—Concerning Suffrage, Etc.

The Annual Document.

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

The reports of the heads of the several executive departments, required by law to be submitted to me, which are herewith transmitted, and the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General, made directly to Congress, furnish a comprehensive view of the administrative work of the last fiscal year relating to internal affairs. It would be of great advantage if these reports could have an attentive perusal by every member of Congress, and by all who take an interest in public affairs. Such a perusal could not fail to excite a high appreciation of the vast labor and conscientious effort which are given to the conduct of our civil administration.

The reports will I believe, show that every question has been approached, considered and decided from the standpoint of public duty and upon considerations affecting the public interests alone. Again I invite to every branch of the service the attention and scrutiny of Congress.

The work of the State Department during the last year has been characterized by an unusual number of important negotiations and by diplomatic results of a notable and highly beneficial character. Among these are the reciprocal trade arrangements which have been concluded, in the exercise of the powers conferred by section 3 of the Tariff law, with the Republic of Brazil, with Spain for its West India possessions, and with San Domingo. Like negotiations with other countries have been much advanced, and it is hoped that before the close of the year further definite trade arrangements of great value will be concluded.

In view of the reports which had been received as to the diminution of the seal herds in the Behring Sea, I deemed it wise to propose to her Majesty's Government in February last that an agreement for a closed season should be made, pending the negotiations which then seemed to be approaching a favorable conclusion. After much correspondence, and delays for which this Government was not responsible, an agreement was reached and signed on the 15th of June, by which Great Britain undertook, from that date and until May 1, 1892, to prohibit the killing by her subjects of seals in the Behring Sea, and the Government of the United States during the same period to enforce its existing prohibition against pelagic sealing, and to limit the catch by the Fur Seal Company upon the island to 7,500 skins. If this agreement could have been reached earlier, in response to the strenuous endeavors of this Government, it would have been more effective; but, coming as late as it did, it unquestionably resulted in greatly diminishing the destruction of the seals by the Canadian sealers.

In my last annual message I stated that the basis of arbitration proposed by her Majesty's Government for the adjustment of the long-pending controversy as to the seal fisheries was not acceptable. I am glad now to be able to announce that terms satisfactory to this Government have been agreed upon and that an agreement as to arbitrators is all that is necessary to the completion of the convention.

Provision should be made for a joint demarcation of the frontier line between Canada and the United States wherever required by the increasing border settlements, and especially for the exact location of the water boundary in the straits and rivers.

I should have been glad to announce some favorable disposition of the boundary dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela, touching the western frontier of British Guiana, but the friendly efforts of the United States in that direction have thus far been unavailing. This Government will continue to express its concern at any appearance of foreign encroachment on territories long under the administrative control of American states.

The law of the last Congress providing a system of inspection for our meats intended for export and clothing the President with power to exclude foreign products from our market in case the country sending them should perpetuate unjust discriminations against any product of the United States, placed this Government in a position to effectively urge the removal of such discriminations against our meats. It is gratifying to be able to state that Germany, Denmark, Italy, Austria and France, in the order named, have opened their ports to inspected American pork products. The removal of these restrictions in every instance was asked for and given solely upon the ground that we had now provided a meat inspection that should be accepted as adequate to the complete removal of the dangers, real or fancied, which had been previously urged. The State Department, our Ministers abroad and the Secretary of Agriculture have co-operated with unflagging and intelligent zeal for the accomplishment of this great result. The outlines of an agreement have been reached with Germany looking to equitable trade concessions in consideration of the continued free importation of her sugars, but the time has not yet arrived when this correspondence can be submitted to Congress.

The recent political disturbances in the republic of Brazil have excited regret and solicitude. The information we possessed was too meager to enable us to form a satisfactory judgment of the causes leading to the temporary assumption of supreme power by President Fonseca; but this Government did not fail to express to him its anxious solicitude for the peace of Brazil and for the maintenance of the free political institutions which had recently been established there, nor to offer our advice that great moderation should be observed in the clash of parties and the contest for leadership. These counsels were received in the most friendly spirit, and the latest information is that constitutional government has been re-established without bloodshed.

The lynching at New Orleans in March last of eleven men of Italian nativity by a mob of citizens was a most deplorable and discreditable incident. It did not, however, have its origin in any general animosity to the Italian people, nor in any disrespect to the Government of Italy, with which our relations were of the most friendly character. The fury of the mob was directed against these men as the supposed participants or accessories in the murder of a city officer. I do not allude to this as mitigating in any degree this offense against law and humanity, but only as affecting the international questions which grew out of it. It was represented by the Italian Minister that several of those whose lives had been taken by the mob were Italian subjects, and a demand was made for the punishment of the participants and for an indemnity to the families of those who were killed. It is to regretted that the manner in which these claims were presented was not such as to promote a calm discussion of the questions involved; but this may well be attributed to the excitement and indignation which the crime naturally evoked. The views of this government as to its obligations to foreigners domiciled here were fully stated in the correspondence, as well as its purpose to make an investigation of the affair with a view to determine whether there were present any circumstances that could, under such rules of duty as we had indicated, create an obligation upon the United States. The temporary absence of a Minister Plenipotentiary of Italy at this capital has retarded the further correspondence, but it is not doubted that a friendly conclusion is attainable.

Some suggestions growing out of this unhappy incident are worthy the attention of Congress. It would, I believe, be entirely competent for Congress to make offenses against the treaty rights of foreigners domiciled in the United States cognizable in the Federal courts. This has not, however, been done, and the Federal officers and courts have no power in such cases to intervene either for the protection of a foreign citizen or for the punishment of his slayers. It seems to me to follow in this state of law that officers of the State charged with police and judicial powers in such cases must, in the consideration of international questions, growing out of such incidents, be regarded in such sense as Federal agents as to make this Government answerable for their acts in cases where it would be answerable if the United States had used its constitutional power to define and punish crimes against treaty rights.

The Chilian Complications.

The civil war in Chili, which began in January last, was continued, but fortunately with infrequent and not important armed collisions, until August 28, when the Congressional forces landed near Valparaiso, and after a bloody engagement captured that city. President Balmaceda at once recognized that his cause was lost, and provisional government was speedily established by the victorious party. Our Minister was promptly directed to recognize and put himself in communication with this government as it should have established its de facto character, which was done. During the pendency of this civil contest frequent indirect appeals were made to this Government to extend belligerent rights to the insurgents and to give audience to their representatives. This was declined, and that policy was pursued throughout which this Government, when wrenched by civil war so strenuously insisted upon on the part of European nations.

The Itata, an armed vessel commanded by a naval officer of the insurgent fleet, manned by its sailors and with soldiers on board, was seized under process of the United States Court at San Diego, Cal., for a violation of our neutrality laws. While in the custody of an officer of the court, the vessel was forcibly wrested from his control and put to sea. It would have been inconsistent with the dignity and self-respect of this Government not to have insisted that the Itata should be returned to San Diego to abide the judgment of the court. This was so clear to the Junta of the Congressional party, established at Iquique, that, before the arrival of the Itata at that port, the Secretary of Foreign Relations of the Provisional Government addressed to Rear Admiral Brown, commanding the United States naval forces, a communication, from which the following is an extract:

"The Provisional Government has learned by the cablegrams of the Associated Press that the transport Itata, detained at San Diego by order of the United States for taking on board munitions of war, and in possession of the marshal, left the port carrying on board this official, who was landed at a point near the coast, and thus continued her voyage. If this news be correct, this Government would deplore the conduct of the Itata, and as an evidence that it is not disposed to support or agree to the infraction of the laws of the United States, the undersigned takes advantage of the personal relations you have been good enough to maintain with him since your arrival in this port to declare to you that as soon as she is within reach of our orders this Government will put the Itata, with the arms and munitions she took on board in San Diego, at the disposition of the United States."

A trial in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California has recently resulted in a decision holding, among other things, that, inasmuch as the Congressional party had not been recognized as a belligerent, the acts done in its interest could not be a violation of our neutrality laws. From this judgment the United States has appealed, not that the condemnation of the vessel is a matter of importance, but that we may know what the present state of our law is; for, if this construction of the statute is correct, there is obvious necessity for revision and amendment.

During the progress of the war in Chili this Government tendered its good offices to bring about a peaceful adjustment, and it was at one time hoped that a good result might be reached; but in this we were disappointed.

The instructions to our naval officers and to our Minister at Santiago, from the first to the last of this struggle, enjoined upon them the most impartial treatment and absolute non-interference. I am satisfied that these instructions were observed and that our representatives were always watchful to use their influence impartially in the interest of humanity, and on more than one occasion did so effectively. We could not forget, however, that this Government was in diplomatic relations with the then established Government of Chili, as it is now in such relations with the successor of that Government. I am quite sure that President Montt, who has, under circumstances of promise for the peace of Chili, been installed as President of that Republic, will not desire that, in the unfortunate event of any revolt against his authority, the policy of this Government should be other than that which we have recently observed.

No official complaint of the conduct of our Minister or our naval officers during the struggle has been presented to this Government, and it is a matter of regret that so many of our people have given ear to unofficial charges and complaints that manifestly had their origin in rival interests and in a wish to pervert the relations of the United States with Chili.

The collapse of the government of Balmaceda brought about a condition which is unfortunately too familiar in the history of the Central and South American States. With the overthrow of the Balmaceda Government, he and many of his councillors and officers became at once fugitives for their lives and appealed to the commanding officers of the foreign naval vessels in the harbor of Valparaiso and to the resident foreign ministers at Santiago for asylum. This asylum was freely given, according to my information, by the naval vessels of several foreign powers and by several of the legations at Santiago.

The American Minister, as well as his colleagues, acting upon the impulses of humanity, extended asylum to political refugees whose lives were in peril. I have not been willing to direct the surrender of such of these persons as are still in the American Legation without suitable conditions.

It is believed that the Government of Chili is not in a position, in view of the precedents with which it has been connected, to broadly deny the right of asylum, and the correspondence has not thus far presented any such denial. The treatment of our Minister for a time was such as to call for a decided protest, and it was very gratifying to observe that unfriendly measures, which were undoubtedly the result of the prevailing excitement, were at once rescinded or suitably relaxed.

On the 16th of October an event occurred in Valparaiso so serious and tragic in its circumstances and results as to very justly excite the indignation of our people and to call for prompt and decided action on the part of this Government. A considerable number of the sailors of the United States steamship Baltimore, then in the harbor of Valparaiso, being upon shore leave and unarmed, were assaulted by armed men nearly simultaneously in different localities in the city.

One petty officer was killed outright and seven or eight seamen were seriously wounded, one of whom has since died.

So far as I have yet been able to learn no other explanation of this bloody work has been suggested than that it had its origin in hostility to these men as sailors of the United States, wearing the uniform of their government, and not in any individual act or personal animosity. The attention of the Chilian government was at once called to this affair, and a statement of the facts obtained by the investigation we had conducted was submitted, accompanied by a request to be advised of any other or qualifying facts in the possession of the Chilian government that might tend to relieve this affair of the appearance of an insult to this Government. The Chilian government was also advised that if such qualifying facts did not exist this Government could confidently expect full and prompt reparation.

It is to be regretted that the reply of the Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the provisional government was couched in an offensive tone. To this no response has been made. Our Government is now awaiting the result of an investigation which has been conducted by the Criminal Court at Valparaiso. It is reported unofficially that the investigation is about completed, and it is expected that the result will soon be communicated to this Government, together with some adequate and satisfactory response to the note by which the attention of Chili was called to this incident.

If these just expectations should be disappointed or further needless delay intervene, I will, by a special message, bring this matter again to the attention of Congress for such action as may be necessary. The entire correspondence with the Government of Chili will at an early day be submitted to Congress.

Other Foreign Relations.

I renew the recommendation of my special message dated January 16, 1890, for the adoption of the necessary legislation to enable this Government to apply in the case of Sweden and Norway the same rule in respect to the levying of tonnage dues as was claimed and secured to the shipping of the United States in 1828 under Article 8 of the treaty of 1827.

The adjournment of the Senate without action on the pending acts for the suppression of the slave traffic in Africa, and for the reform of the revenue tariff of the Independent State of the Congo left this Government unable to exchange those acts on the date fixed, July 2, 1891. A modus vivendi has been concluded by which the power of the Congo state to levy duties on imports is left unimpaired, and, by agreement of all the signatories to the general slave trade act, the time for the exchange of ratifications on the part of the United States has been extended to Feb. 2, 1892.

The late outbreak against foreigners in various parts of the Chinese Empire has been the cause of deep concern in view of the numerous establishments of our citizens in the interior of that country. This Government can do no less than insist upon a continuance of the protective and punitory measures which the Chinese Government has heretofore applied. No effort will be omitted to protect our citizens peaceably sojourning in China, but recent unofficial information indicates that what was at first regarded as an outbreak of mob violence against foreigners has assumed the larger form of an insurrection against public order. The Chinese Government has declined to receive Mr. Blair as the Minister of the United States on the ground that, as participant, while a Senator, in the enactment of the existing legislation against the introduction of Chinese laborers, he has become unfriendly and objectionable to China. I have felt constrained to point out to the Chinese government the untenableness of this position, which seems to rest as much on the unacceptability of our legislation as on that of the person chosen, and which if admitted, would practically debar the selection of any representative so long as the existing laws remain in force.

You will be called upon to consider the expediency of making special provision by law for temporary admission of some Chinese artisans and laborers in connection with the exhibit of Chinese industries at the approaching Columbian Exposition. I regard it as desirable that the Chinese exhibit be facilitated in every proper way.

The death of King Kalakaua in the United States afforded occasion to testify our friendship for Hawaii by conveying the King's body to his own land in a naval vessel with all honors. The Government of his successor, Queen Liliuokalani, is seeking to promote closer commercial relations with the United States.

This Government has found a reason to express in a friendly spirit, but with much earnestness, to the government of the Czar, its serious concern because of the harsh measures now being enforced against the Hebrews in Russia. The immigration of these people to the United States—many other countries being closed to them—is largely increasing, and is likely to assume proportions which may make it difficult to find homes and employment for them here, and to seriously affect the labor market.

The annual report of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua shows that much costly and necessary preparatory work has been done during the year in the construction of shops, railroad tracks and harbor piers and breakwaters, and that the work in the canal's construction has made some progress.

I deem it to be a matter of the highest concern to the United States that this canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and giving us water communication between our ports on these two great seas should be speedily constructed, and at the smallest practicable limit of cost.

International Copyright.

International copyright has been secured, in accordance with the conditions of the act of March 3, 1891, with Belgium, France, Great Britain and the British possessions, and Switzerland, the laws of these countries permitting to our citizens the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to their own citizens or subjects. With Germany a special convention has been negotiated upon this subject, which will bring that country within the reciprocal benefits of our legislation.

Tariff Legislation.

The general interest in the operations of the Treasury Department has been much augmented during the last year by reason of the conflicting predictions, which accompanied and followed the tariff and other legislation of the last Congress affecting the revenues, as to the results of this legislation upon the treasury and upon the country.

It is not my purpose to enter at any length into a discussion of the effects of the legislation to which I have referred; but a brief examination of the statistics of the Treasury and a general glance at the state of business throughout the country will, I think, satisfy any impartial inquirer that its results have disappointed the evil prophecies of its opponents and in a large measure realized the hopeful predictions of its friends. During the twelve months from October 1, 1890, to September 30, 1891, the total value of our foreign commerce (imports and exports) was $1,747,8[illegible]6,406, which was the largest of any year in the history of the United States. The largest in any previous year was in 1890, when our commerce amounted to $1,647,139,093, and the last year exceeds this enormous aggregate by over one hundred millions. The average annual value of the imports of merchandise for the ten years from 1881 to 1890 was $692,186,522, and during the year ending Sept. 30, 1891, this annual average was exceeded by $132,528,469.

The value of free imports during the twelve months ending Sept. 30, 1891, was $118,092,387 more than the value of free imports during the corresponding twelve months of the preceding year, and there was during the same period a decrease of $106,846,508 in the value of imports of dutiable merchandise. The percentage of merchandise admitted free of duty during the year to which I have referred, the first under the new tariff, was 48.18, while during the preceding twelve months, under the old tariff, the percentage was 34.27, an increase of 13.91 per cent. If we take the six months ending Sept. 30 last, which covers the time during which sugars have been admitted free of duty, the per cent. of value of merchandise imported free of duty is found to be 55.27, which is a larger percentage of free imports than during any prior fiscal year in the history of the Government.

If we return to exports of merchandise the statistics are full of gratification. The value of such exports of merchandise for the twelve months ending September 30, 1891, was $923,091,135, while for the corresponding previous twelve months it was $860,177,115, an increase of $62,914,021, which is nearly three times the average increase of exports of merchandise during any year in the history of the Government. The increase in the value of exports of agricultural products during the year referred to over the corresponding twelve months of the prior year was $45,846,197, while the increase in the value of exports of manufactured products was $16,838,240.

There is certainly nothing in the condition of trade, foreign or domestic, there is certainly nothing in the condition of our people of any class, to suggest that the existing tariff and revenue legislation bears oppressively upon the people, or retards the commercial development of the nation.

I think there are conclusive evidences that the new tariff has created several great industries which will, within a few years, give employment to several hundred thousand American workingmen and women. In view of the somewhat overcrowded condition of the labor market of the United States, every patriotic citizen should rejoice at such a result.

Receipts and Expenditures.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that the total receipts of the Government, from all sources, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, were $458,544,233.03, while the expenditures for the same period were $421,304,470.46, leaving a surplus of $37,239,762.57. The receipts of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, actual and estimated, are $433,000,000 and the expenditures $409,000,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, the estimated receipts are $455,336,350 and the expenditures $441,300,093.

Silver as Currency.

Under the law of July 14, 1890, the Secretary of the Treasury has purchased since Aug. 13 during the fiscal year, 48,393,113 ounces of silver bullion at an average cost of $1.045 per ounce. The highest price paid during the year was $1.2025, and the lowest $0.9636. In exchange for this silver bullion there have been issued $50,577,498 of the treasury notes authorized by the act. The ablest advocates of free coinage in the last Congress were most confident in their prediction that the purchase by the Government required by the law would at once bring the price of silver to $1.2929 per ounce, which would make the bullion value of a dollar 100 cents and hold it there. The prophecies of the anti-silver men of disasters to result from the coinage of $2,000,000 per month were not wider from the mark. The friends of free silver are not agreed, I think, as to the causes that brought their hopeful predictions to naught. Some facts are known. The exports of silver from London to India during the first nine months of this calendar year fell off over 20 per cent., or $17,202,730 compared with the same months of the preceding year. The exports of domestic silver bullion from this country, which had averaged for the last ten years over $17,000,000, fell in the last fiscal year to $13,797,391; while, for the first time in recent years, the imports of silver into this country exceeded the exports by the sum of $2,745,365. In the previous year the net exports of silver from the United States amounted to $8,545,455. The production of the United States increased from 50,000,000 ounces in 1889 to 54,500,000 in 1890. The Government is now buying and putting aside annually 54,000,000 ounces, which, allowing for 7,140,000 ounces of new bullion used in the arts, is 6,640,000 more than our domestic product available for coinage. I hope the depression in the price of silver is temporary and that a further trial of this legislation will more favorably affect it.

I am still of the opinion that the free coinage of silver under existing conditions would disastrously affect our business interests at home and abroad. We could not hope to maintain an equality in the purchasing power of the gold and silver dollar in our own markets, and in foreign trade the stamp gives no added value to the bullion contained in coins. The producers of the country, the farmers and laborers, have the highest interest that every dollar, paper or coin, issued by the government shall be as good as any other. If there is one less valuable than another its sure and constant errand will be to pay them for their toil and for their crops. The money-lender will protect himself by stipulating for payment in gold, but the laborer has never been able to do that. To place business upon a silver basis would mean a sudden and severe contraction of the currency by the withdrawal of gold and gold notes, and such an unsettling of all values as would produce a financial panic. I cannot believe that a people so strong and prosperous as ours will promote such a policy.

I believe it is the earnest desire of a great majority of the people, as it is mine, that a full coin use shall be made of silver just as soon as the co-operation of other nations can be secured and a ratio fixed that will give circulation equally to gold and silver. Bi-metalism is the desired end, and the true friends of silver will be careful not to overrun the goal and bring in silver monometalism, with its necessary attendants, the loss of our gold to Europe and the relief of the pressure there for a larger currency.

The Flow of Gold.

The exports of gold to Europe, which began in February last and continued until the close of July, aggregated over 70,000,000. The net loss of gold during the fiscal year was nearly $68,000,000. That no serious monetary disturbance resulted was most gratifying, and gave to Europe fresh evidence of the strength and stability of our financial institutions. With the movement of crops the outflow of gold has speedily stopped, and a return set in. Up to Dec. 1 we had recovered of our gold loss at the port of New York $27,854,[illegible]

The Army.

The report of the Secretary of War exhibits the results of an intelligent, progressive, and business-like administration of a department which has been too much regarded as one of mere routine. The work of securing sites for shore batteries for harbor defense and the manufacture of mortars and guns of high power to equip them have made good progress during the year.

The project of enlisting Indians received my approval. Seven companies have been completely organized, and seven more are in process of organization. The results of six months' training have more than realized the highest anticipations.

Private Land Claims.

The Judges of the Court of Private Land Claims provided for by the act of March 3, 1891, have been appointed and the court organized. It is now possible to give early relief to communities long repressed in their development by unsettled land titles, and to establish the possession and right of settlers whose lands have been rendered valueless by adverse and unfounded claims.

The Chinese Question.

The enforcement of the Treasury Department of the law prohibiting the coming of Chinese to the United States has been effective as to such as seek to land from vessels entering our ports. The result has been to divert the travel to vessels entering the ports of British Columbia, whence a passage into the United States at obscure points along the Dominion boundary is easy. The Dominion Government collects a head tax of $50 from every Chinaman entering Canada, and thus derives a considerable revenue from those who only use its ports to reach a position of advantage to evade our exclusion laws.

There seems to be satisfactory evidence that the business of passing Chinamen through Canada to the United States is organized and quite active. The Department of Justice has construed the laws to require the return of any Chinaman found to be unlawfully in this country to China as the country from which he came, notwithstanding the fact that he came by way of Canada. This construction robs the law of all effectiveness, and I recommend such legislation as will remedy defects in the law.

The Postal Service.

In the report of the Postmaster General some very gratifying results are exhibited and many betterments of the service suggested. Ocean mail postoffices have been established upon the steamers of the North German Lloyd and Hamburg Lines, saving, by the distribution on shipboard, from two to fourteen hours' time.

Eight thousand miles of new postal service have been established upon railroads, the car distribution to substations in the great cities have been increased about 12 per cent., while the percentage of errors in distribution has, during the past year, been reduced over one-half.

An appropriation was given by the last Congress for the purpose of making some experiments in free delivery in the smaller cities and towns. The results of those experiments have been so satisfactory that the Postmaster General recommends, and I concur in the recommendation, that the free delivery system be at once extended to towns of 5,000 population. It is not just that the farmer who receives his mail at a neighboring town should not only be compelled to send to the postoffice for it, but also to pay considerable rent for a box in which to place it or to wait his turn at a general delivery window, while the city resident has his mail brought to his door. I also recommend the extension of the money order system.

The Navy.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy shows a gratifying increase of new naval vessels in commission. When it is recollected that the work of building a modern navy was only initiated in 1883, that our naval constructors and ship-builders were practically without experience in the construction of large iron or steel ships, the progress that has been made is highly satisfactory. I commend to your favorable consideration the recommendations of the Secretary, who has, I am sure, given to them most conscientious study. There should be no hesitation in promptly completing a navy of the best modern type, large enough to enable this country to display its flag in all seas for the protection of its citizens and of its extending commerce.

Utah and Polygamy.

The legislation of Congress for the repression of polygamy has, after years of resistance on the part of the Mormons, at last brought them to the conclusion that resistance is unprofitable and unavailing. The power of Congress over this subject should not be surrendered until we have satisfactory evidence that the people of the State to be created would exercise the exclusive power of the State over this subject in the same way. The question is not whether these people now obey the laws of Congress against polygamy, but rather would they make, enforce and maintain such laws themselves if absolutely free to regulate the subject? We cannot afford to experiment with this subject, for when a State is once constituted the act is final, and any mistake irretrievable.

Alaska.

I recommend that provision be made for the organization of a simple form of town government in Alaska with power to regulate such matters as are usually in the States under municipal control.

Department of Agriculture.

If the establishment of the Department of Agriculture was regarded by any one as a mere concession to the unenlightened demand of a worthy class of people, that impression has been most effectually removed by the great results already attained. Its home influence has been very great in disseminating agricultural and horticultural information; in stimulating and directing a further diversification of crops; in detecting and eradicating diseases of domestic animals; and, more than all, in the close and informal contact which it has established and maintains with the farmers and stock-raisers of the whole country. Every request for information has had prompt attention and every suggestion merited consideration. The scientific corps of the department is of a high order, and is pushing its investigations with method and enthusiasm.

The inspection by this department of cattle and pork products intended for shipment abroad has been the basis of the success which has attended our efforts to secure the removal of the restrictions maintained by the European governments. It is particularly fortunate that the increased demand for food products, resulting from the removal of the restrictions upon our meats and from the reciprocal trade arrangements to which I have referred, should have come at a time when the agricultural surplus is so large. Without the help thus derived, lower prices would have prevailed. The Secretary of Agriculture estimates that the restrictions upon the importation of our pork products into Europe lost us a market for $20,000,000 worth of these products annually.

The grain crop of this year was the largest in our history, 50 per cent. greater than that of last year, and yet the new markets that have been opened and the larger demand resulting from short crops in Europe, have sustained prices to such an extent that the enormous surplus of meats and breadstuffs will be marketed at good prices bringing relief and prosperity to an industry that was much depressed. The value of the grain crop of the United States is estimated by the Secretary to be this year five hundred million dollars more than last; of meats, one hundred and fifty millions more; and of all products of the farm, seven hundred millions more. It is not inappropriate, I think, here to suggest that our satisfaction in the contemplation of this marvelous addition to the national wealth is unclouded by any suspicion of the currency by which it is measured and in which the farmer is paid for the product of his fields.

Civil Service.

The report of the Civil Service Commission should receive the careful attention of the opponents, as well as the friends, of this reform. The commission invites a personal inspection of its records and methods. The efforts of the several executive departments have been directed to establish at once an efficiency record as the basis of a comparative rating of the clerks within the classified service, with a view to placing promotions therein upon the basis of merit. I am confident that such a record, fairly kept and open to the inspection of those interested, will powerfully stimulate the work of the departments and will be accepted by all as placing the troublesome matter of promotions upon a just basis. I recommend that the appropriations for the Civil Service Commission be made adequate to the increased work of the next fiscal year.

Protection for Railroad Employes.

I have twice before urgently called the attention of Congress to the necessity of legislation for the protection of the lives of railroad employes, but nothing has yet been done. During the year ending June 30, 1890, 369 brakemen were killed and 7,841 maimed while engaged in coupling cars. The total number of railroad employes killed during the year was 2,451, and the number injured 22,390. This is a cruel and largely a needless sacrifice. A law requiring of every railroad engaged in interstate commerce the equipment each year of a given per cent. of its freight cars with automatic couplers and air brakes to be used would very soon and very greatly reduce the present fearful death rate among railroad employes.

Constitutional Amendment Suggested.

The method of appointment by the States of Electors of President and Vice President has recently attracted renewed interest by reason of a departure by the State of Michigan from the method which had become uniform in all the States. Prior to 1832 various methods had been used by the different States, and even by the same State. After a full test of other methods, without important division or dissent in any State and without any purpose of party advantage, as we must believe the practice of all the states was brought into harmony. That this concurrence should now by broken is, I think, an unfortunate and even threatening episode, and one that may well suggest whether the States that still give their approval to the old and prevailing methods ought not to secure by a constitutional amendment, a practice which has had the approval of all. The recent Michigan legislation provides for choosing what are popularly known as the Congressional Electors for President by Congressional districts, and the two Senatorial Electors by districts created for that purpose. This legislation was, of course, accompanied by a new Congressional apportionment, and the two statutes bring the electoral vote of the State under the influence of the gerrymander.

These gerrymanders for Congressional purposes are in most cases buttressed by a gerrymander of the legislative districts, thus making it impossible for a majority of the legal voters of the State to correct the apportionment and to equalize the Congressional representation of all the districts. A minority rule is established that only a political convulsion can overthrow. I have recently been advised that in one county of a certain State three districts for the election of members of the Legislature are constituted as follows: One has 65,000 population, one 15,000, and one 10,000, while in another county, detached non-contiguous sections have been united to make a legislative district. These methods have already found effective application to the choice of Senators and Representatives in Congress, and now an evil start has been made in the direction of applying them to the choice by the States of Electors of President and Vice President. If this is accomplished we shall then have three great departments of the Government in the grasp of the "gerrymander," the legislative and the executive directly and the judiciary indirectly through the power of appointment.

An election implies a body of electors electors having prescribed qualifications—each of whom has an equal status and influence in determining the result. So when the Constitution provides that each State shall appoint (elect) in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, etc., an unrestricted power was not given to the Legislatures in the selection of the methods to be used. "A republican form of government" is guaranteed by the Constitution to each State, and the power given by the same instrument to the legislatures of the States to prescribe methods for the choice, by the State, of electors, must be exercised under that limitation. The essential features of such a government are the right of the people to choose their own officers and the nearest practicable equality of value in the suffrages given in determining that choice.

Nothing just now is more important than to provide every guarantee for the absolutely fair and free choice by an equal suffrage, with the respective States, of all the officers of the National Government, whether that suffrage is applied directly, as in the choice of members of the House of Representatives, or indirectly, as in the choice of Senators and electors of President. Respect for public officers and obedience to the law will not cease to be the characteristics of our people until our elections cease to declare the will of majorities fairly ascertained, without fraud, suppression, or gerrymander.

All the States have, acting freely and separately, determined that the choice of elections by a general ticket is the wisest and safest method, and it would seem there could be no objection to a constitutional amendment making that method permanent. If a legislature chosen in one year upon purely local questions should, pending a Presidential contest, rescind the law for a choice upon a general ticket and provide for the choice of electors by the Legislature and this trick should determine the result, it is not too much to say that the public peace might be seriously and widely endangered.

I have alluded to the "gerrymander" as affecting the method of selecting electors of President by Congressional districts, but the primary intent and effect of this form of political robbery have relation to the selection of members of the House of Representatives. The power of Congress is ample to deal with this threatening and intolerable abuse, and to put into force such measures as will most effectually preserve the right of the people to free and equal representation.

Subsidized Railroads.

The report of the Commissioner of Railroads shows that the total debt of the subsidized railroads to the United States was, on Dec. 31, 1890, $112,512,613. A large part of this debt is now fast approaching maturity, with no adequate provision for its payment. Some policy for dealing with this debt, with a view to its ultimate collection, should be at once adopted.

Frauds Against the Suffrage.

An attempt was made in the last Congress to bring to bear the constitutional powers of the General Government for the correction of frauds against the suffrage. It is important to know whether the opposition to such measures is really rested in particular features supposed to be objectionable or includes any proposition to give to the election laws of the United States adequacy to the correction of grave and acknowledged evils. I must yet entertain the hope that it is possible to secure a calm, patriotic consideration of such constitutional or statutory changes as may be necessary to secure the choice of the officers of the Government to the people by fair appointments and free elections. I believe it would be possible to constitute a commission non-partisan in its membership, and composed of patriotic, wise and impartial men, to whom a consideration of the question of the evils connected with our election system and methods might be committed with a good prospect of securing unanimity in some plan for removing or mitigating those evils. The Constitution would permit the selection of the commission to be vested in the Supreme Court, if that method would give the best guaranty of impartiality.

While the policies of the General Government upon the tariff, upon the restoration of our merchant marine, upon river and harbor improvements and other such matters of grave and general concern are liable to be turned this way or that by the results of Congressional elections and administrative policies, sometimes involving issues that tend to peace or war, to be turned this way or that by the results of a Presidential election, there is a rightful interest in all the States and in every Congressional district that will not be deceived or silenced by the audacious pretense that the question of the right of any body of legal voters in any state, or in any Congressional district, to give their suffrages freely upon these general questions is a matter only of local concern or control. The demand that the limitation of suffrage shall be found in the law, and only there, is a just demand, and no just man should resent or resist it. My appeal is, and must continue to be, for a consultation that shall "proceed with candor, calmness and patience upon the lines of justice and humanity, not of prejudice and cruelty."

To the consideration of these very grave questions I invite not only the attention of Congress, but that of all patriotic citizens. A trust, momentous in its influence upon our people and upon the world, is for a brief time committed to us, and we must not be faithless to its first condition—the defense of the free and equal influence of the people in the choice of public officers and in the control of public affairs.

(Signed) BENJAMIN HARRISON.
EXECUTIVE MANSION, Dec. 9, 1891.

Heavy Mud Showers.

A curious phenomenon occurred in Simla recently on two successive nights. This was nothing less than a duststorm in the midst of a heavy downpour of rain, or, rather, to speak more correctly, a shower of mud. A column of dust seems to have been carried up into the higher atmosphere from the plains and to have been caught and forced down by the heavy rain. In the morning, as a result, all the plants and flowers in Simla were found to have received a thick coating of mud. There could be no doubt that the mud had been rained down, for it was freely sprinkled on plants away from the hillside and at a great height from the ground. Moreover, a deposit of mud was found in the rain gauges in various parts of the station. It is a common thing to see the atmosphere in the hills during the hot season thick with dust from the plains, carried aloft by a strong wind. But the conjunction of rain and dust is an incident of rare occurrence, of which, it is stated, there is no previous record.—Times of India.

Disgusting Presumption.

Father—"Now, look here, Dinnis, d'ye moind? I've told yez foive or six toimes to go to Sunday-shchool, an' if I hav' to tell yez agin I'll giv' yez a bating that yez'll rimimber to the ind of yez days."

Son—"Lay hands on me at your peril. The presumption of you foreigners is simply disgusting."—Life.

WOMEN'S DEPARTMENT.

Notes of the Fashions.

A pretty ulster is of chenille cloth in black and white, with the hood and cape lined in black velvet.

Towels, especially the plain linen hemstitched ones, have taken to themselves added inches this autumn.

Pearl gray gloves with rough edges and wide black or white stitching are considered more elegant for street wear than the pure white.

Of all the shapes, the very long and perfectly round, loosely flowing cape is perhaps the most graceful. The wind will circulate rather freely beneath it, but who will care for that? It is pretty.

The watch paper weight is something of a novelty. It is more suited to a man's desk than the boudoir davenport, as it is very massive and solid. The timepiece is sunk in brass, usually a plain heavy piece with polished finish.

Fine lingerie is plainer in that it is not lace trimmed, but its cost is kept up with exquisite needlework. Fine wide frills worked at the edge by hand in French knots in red, blue, mauve, and heliotrope is a new garniture. The frills are put on very deep and full.

Yellow cloth skirts appear on French costumes made with dark brown or green princesse overdresses, slashed to the waist and edged with brown fur. The yellow skirts are nearly covered with brown or green silk Soutache, braiding with a roll of fur at the extreme edge.

How to Cut Off Artistic Corners.

No room ought to have more than two corners if you expect to have it pretty. Get rid of one by a four leaved screen, in front of which your lounge will be very much in place. I have seen a lovely corner treated in this way. The screen is covered with shirred silkaline in soft cream and wood color, the lounge is a bamboo affair with cool, thin pillows, covered with grass cloth. At the head of the lounge stands an old rosewood chest with brass handles, in which the family silver used to be kept fifty years ago. It has a few favorite books on it now and a reading lamp. The flat where you must go to admire this corner was designed by a man with a soul above closets. So the innocent looking screen conceals a lot of trunks and a length of stove-pipe. Fill up another corner with a lot of drapery, and set there a small table, covered with pictures of everyone of your family, from grandpa to the baby. Don't let a single outsider show his face there, not even if he is engaged to one of the girls. It is a pretty idea and rapidly growing in favor. Beisdes its dainty sentiment it is a great sourse of conversation and will draw pleasant remarks from the most impossible visitor. There is pretty sure to be a door in the third corner, so don't pay any attention to it, but put your easiest chair in number four, and, if by a window, it will be instead of an eyesore, the place of others the most desirable.

Indeed the man who can resist a girl in this season in her opera cloak of mauve plush, lined with silk to match, will be either souliess or so occupied with the hideous contrast made by his own stupid, prosaic black coat and white shirt front that he wants to go away on a vacation until some kind brave soul inaugurates for men a style of dress that will be more artistic and suited to the sumptuousness of the girl he elects to escort. Of course, this means velvet coats, satin waistcoat, delicious lace frills that seem to breathe fourth the courtly grace that has become a dead letter in the days of modern attire. He will also have to don knee breeches and wear jeweled shoe buckles. I leave the suggistion to work. What man has the courage or artistic sense to take up the gauntlet?

Balzac, the keenert anatomist of woman, says that in a woman's selection of color is to be found the keynote of her character. If you have courage you may change your favorite hue if it contains too much self betrayal, after you read that he thinks the woman perfers orange or green is quarrelsome. Those who sport yellow hats or who go clad in black without cause are not to be trusted. White should indicate coquetry. Gentle and thoughtful women prefer pink. Pearl gray is the color of women who consider themselves unfortunate. Lilac is the shade particularly affected by over ripe beauties; therefore, according to Balzac, lilac hats are mostly worn by mothers on their daughters' marriage day and by women more than forty years old when they go visiting.

It may startle you a little when you come to be fitted for the gown to be told that you must get rid of your hips this season. Of course you can't have them planed off or the bones crushed with some slight inconveniences resulting, but you can consent to have your waist that you have been squeezing in padded out a little, which will produce the straight outline now absolutely necessary to a front rank in the procession. If you are a very slim girl, so much the better—you can achieve the straight up and down look that better proportioned girls must pad out to attain and even then come in only second or third best in the walk round.

LOVE FOR A DAY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "DORA THORNE," "A DEAD HEART," "TWO KISSES," "THE FATAL LILIES," ETC.

CHAPTER X.

Mark's words cleft the sweet, spring air like a sharp arrow with a poisoned barb; they had pierced the heart that loved him, and I fell upon the grass like one dead. My heart was pierced, my whole soul crushed. There I lay in the first smart of my anguish.

For a few minutes all was darkness and oblivion; and then Mark tried to raise me.

"I have killed you, Nellie," he said, "I have killed you!"

"No," I answered, raising my white, miserable face to his; "it is worse than that. Do not touch me! Leave me!"

"I knew—I knew!" he said. "Oh, Nellie, I could have died to save you this!"

A sudden overwhelming sense of scorn for him, of loathing for myself, a hot, fierce passion of defiance and rebellion seized me. I rose to my feet; new life and new strength came to me, my whole frame vibrated with passion.

"You are what?" I cried. "Say it to me again—let me be sure that I have heard aright. You are what?"

"I am married, Nellie."

"Married! And you have been wicked enough, coward enough to let me say all that I have said! You have been mean enough to let me pour out my heart, to let me lavish my love on you! How could you? Why did you not tell me the truth the first moment you saw me? How dare you take me in your arms and kiss me when you knew all the time that you belonged to some one else?"

"Forgive me, Nellie. I can never forgive myself. I had no time to think," he said, humbly.

"I shall never respect myself again!" I cried. "And I thought that Heaven had sent you in answer to my longing and my prayers. Give me back my words of welcome; give me back my kisses. They were for a true lover, not for you. Give me back my love. Believe me, before Heaven, had I known, had I guessed or thought that you were married, not one such word should have crossed my lips!"

"I know," he said, humbly.

"You are married. Oh, I cannot believe it! You are trying me. You want to see if my love be true; you are testing my faith. You cannot be married; you could not marry any one but me!"

"Alas, Nellie, it is true!" he cried.

"True!" I flung up my arms in despair. Mark had deceived me; Mark was untrue to me; Mark, my lover, my hero, was false.

Could any shame, any degradation equal mine? I had flung my arms round his neck, I had kissed him, I had called him by every loving name that one could give to another, and he was married! His love, his caresses, belonged to some other woman, not to me. The beauty of his dark face, the memory of his love, seemed to creep into my heart again and set it on fire. Mad, passionate jealousy seized me.

"Whom have you married?" I cried. "I shall kill her if I see her! She shall not live who has stolen my love from me!"

"She did not know, Nellie," he said, speaking always in the same low tone. "She knew nothing of you. It was all my fault, dear."

Quickly as it had come, the flame of jealousy died away. The light had gone from the skies, the beauty from the glad green earth; I was alone with my desolation and my sorrow. The greatness of my loss came home to me. Mark was living and well; he was here in my sight; but we were parted for ever. No grave dug by human hands could be so deep as the one that lay between us. He was there, but no longer mine. I must love him and caress him no more. I had mourned for him as absent. I had wept for him as dead; but I had never thought of him as caring for any one else in the wide world—he had been so entirely my own.

"Nellie," he said, in a low voice, "do you know that I feel like a murderer? I have blighted the sweetest life; I have killed the truest love; I have betrayed the most loyal faith ever placed in man. Oh, love, your eyes look like those of a wounded dove; and I may not comfort you any more!"

"No, never again in this world, Mark. No comfort, no consolation, can come from you to me; and I—oh, I loved you so dearly! Since that May morning when we met beside the lilac-trees, my heart has been full of you. It has held nothing else. When I thought you dead, I consecrated my life in loving memory of you. I could have taken my love into the spirit-world pure, unchanged and untouched; while you—you are married. It is enough to make the angels weep! And now I have kissed you and poured out my love to you who are no longer free!"

The next thing I heard was the terrible sound of my own hysterical laughter breaking amid the trees. Such wild horrible laughter it was. I could not help it; I tried in vain to stop it.

"A married man!" I cried, over and over again. "A married man!" And I believed him to be my true lover Mark.

He came to me. He would not heed my passionate cries that he should not touch me. He raised me from the ground; he removed the leaves and grass from my hair; he took my hands and held them in his.

"Nellie," he said, "try to listen to me, dear. You will kill yourself if you give way like this."

Was it of any use to say that I hoped I should, of any use to struggle to free my hands from his clasp? Oh, my bruised, beating, wounded heart, it was not!

"Try, my darling, try, Nellie, for the sake of old times, to listen to me," he pleaded.

"You must not call me 'darling,'" I cried, bitter jealousy flaming in my heart again; "you have another darling now. You have some one else to love and caress and call your own.

And in some vague way I knew by the groan that came from his lips that I was still his darling, and that he did not love this other, let her be who she might. The knowledge seemed to afford me some little consolation. But it was only for one minute. Then common-sense said, "What was the love of a married man to me?

"Nellie—I will not call you 'darling' again, since it grieves you—will you try to listen to me? For the sake of old times and the old dear love, let me tell you all that has happened. You will judge me mercifully; you were always kind, and I—oh, Nellie, I am not happy! I am the most miserable man in the whole wide world. If I were happy, if I came to you in the insolence of a prosperous love, if my face were bright and my heart light, then, ah, then you would have reason to spurn me, to hate and despise me! But you have a true woman's heart, my lost love; and women are always pitiful, always merciful. Listen, Nellie, before you judge me. Mind, I am not excusing myself—even in my own eyes I am a pitiful fellow. But you will hear and judge."

The wild tumult of passion was dying down; the rapture and ecstasy of happiness, followed by the passion of despair, had exhausted me. I sat down again on the seat; my strength failed me. I leaned my head against the trunk of a tree; the wind brought the odor of the lilacs to me fresh and sweet. I grew calm with the serenity of despair. I would listen to all he had to tell me, and then rise up and go from him.

My thoughts grew confused, everything was dim and indistinct in my sight; and, when I came to the real consciousness of what was passing, Mark was bending over me, holding my hands tightly clasped in his, and speaking in a clear, low voice:

CHAPTER XI.

"When I went away, Nellie," said Mark, "I did love you with all my heart. Do you remember how my father teased us, and called my love 'lad's love?'"

"And said it would die as soon," I remarked.

"It was lad's love, Nellie, but it was honest, eager and true. You filled my heart, and I had no thought save for you. I would have given up going to India, but my father was not willing. Would to Heaven that I had! I left England, Nellie, in the hope of returning at the end of four years and making you my wife. My father's death was a blow to me. I should have come back then, but I could not throw up my appointment. I shall tell you the candid truth, Nellie; I will not hide one word, one thought from you. During the first year of my absence, I loved you as truly and dearly as ever. You were never out of my thoughts by day or by night. I lived for you. The second year—ah, Nellie, if I wound you, I wound myself more deeply!—the second year I found myself thinking more of my work. I had been promoted, and the difficulties of my profession engrossed me. I thought less of you, but I loved you just the same. I own that some little coldness crept into my letters, that at times I missed a mail; but my heart was true to you. One thing that had an evil influence over me was the constant 'chaffing' of my comrades. It was strange that the cry of 'lad's love' should be used in India as it had been in England. They laughed at the number of letters that came in your dear handwriting, Nellie. They laughed at the number of letters I sent away. They said that it was 'lad's love,' that in a few years' time I should laugh at it, that all boys suffered from it; and, though at times I blushed over it, yet my heart was always true to you, Nellie."

He stopped and looked into my miserable face. I could not keep my lips from quivering, and my eyes were heavy with unshed tears.

"Nellie," he said, "have you heard any news—anything about me?"

"Not one word since you wrote last," I replied.

"Then," he said, with some little hesitation, "you do not know what name I bear now?"

"Your own, I suppose," was my listless reply.

"Yes, my own, but it is a new one. Is it possible, Nellie, that you do not know who I am and why I am here?"

No suspicion of the truth came to me; indeed nothing was farther from my thoughts.

"How can I know?" was my impatient answer. "I have never heard any one mention your name."

He was silent for a few minutes, and then continued slowly:

"I know not which part of my story is the hardest to tell. It was in the beginning of the third year of my absence from England that a strange event happened. It was so unexpected, so bewildering, that for some time I seemed to lose my senses; and you know, Nellie, I was in many respects what my father called me—merely a lad. I was so dazzled and bewildered that I forgot all I ought to have remembered. My first thought was of you, and I ought to have written to you; but I had let two or three mails go without writing, and I intended to surprise you. I had to go to England at once, and I knew that I should reach you as soon as my letters could. I did a strangely careless thing; I left no address, forgetting that you would probably go on writing. I thought I should see you. Nellie, do you follow me? Do not look at me with such sorrowful eyes. You see that up to this time, the third year of my absence, I had done nothing specially worthy of blame. I had been shy and self-conscious about my love, when I ought to have been bolder and more courageous. I had allowed my time and thoughts to become engrossed in my profession, at the expense of my love; still I was true at heart, Nellie. I had no other love; and I set sail from India, still thinking more of your surprise and delight than of anything else. But, Nellie, I have not told you what the strange event was. Can you not help me, Nellie? Can you not guess what called me back to England and to you?"

"How should I? You may tell me safely; nothing can hurt me now, Mark. I have realized the fact that you are married; nothing more remains."

"I hate myself for having to tell it," he said, his face flushing; "but, Nellie, I was only a lad, and the news completely bewildered me. Do you remember that once when we were together I asked you about your friends and relatives? You replied that you were almost alone in the world; and I told you that, while I had some very wealthy relatives and some very poor, I knew but little of either. There had never been any correspondence, nor even the slightest acknowledgment of any kind. My father was a most peculiar man; he did not like his poor relations. His dislike was not caused by their poverty, but because they had offended him many years before, and he had never forgiven them. As to the rich members of the family, he was too proud to seek to know them; nor would he allow me to speak of them; they took no notice of us, nor we of them. Lord Severne—Baron Severne is the proper title—of Severne Court and my father were second cousins."

In one moment I saw it all.

"You are Lord Severne, Mark!" I cried.

"Yes, it is so, Nellie; I am Lord Severne," he said, gravely.

"And Lurline—your wife is named Lurline," I said.

"Yes, my wife is named Lurline," he answered. "Now you understand. I did not know that you were here. Nellie. I never dreamed of seeing you when I came out this morning. I am here as Lady Yorke's friend and guest; Lurline is with me."

He stopped, thinking perhaps that I should speak; but what had I to say? Words were useless.

"Now you know what happened, Nellie," he continued. "In the third year of my absence this news came from England—Lord Severne of Severne Court was dead; the brother who should have succeeded him was drowned in returning from Italy, and the two sons of his brother, the heir, died from fever at school—two generations swept away. My father, had he lived, would have been Lord Severne; he was the next heir, and both title and estates are entailed. As my father was dead, I was the next heir. My father had never given me to understand that there was the most remote possibility of our succession. I do not believe he ever thought of it himself; he was only second cousin, and at that time Lord Severne was a strong, healthy man, his brother the same, and the boys at school gave every promise of a long life.

"Now all was changed; they were dead; and, as I was the nearest of kin, I became master of Severne Court, and Baron Severne. Nellie, as truly as there is a Heaven above us, my first thought when I heard this news was of you. 'What will my Nellie say?' I cried aloud; and I felt proud to think that I could make my fair and beautiful love Lady Severne.

"If I had written one line to you then, all would have been different—my life and yours; but I was restless and excited. I had so much to think of, so much to do. I was pleased, proud, agitated, but not untrue to you then, Nellie—I swear it, not untrue.

"The letters sent by Messrs. Norton & Son were most peremptory in their summons. I must return at once.—Fortunately there was a young Englishman who could without difficulty take my place, and I was free. My friends and comrades were honestly pleased with my good fortune, and we parted on excellent terms. Nellie, when I started in the Queen of the Seas, bound from Bombay to London, my thoughts were all of you. Oh, my true love, my lost love, how shall I tell you what happened then?

"I deserve to be shot as a traitor, as a coward," he continued, with passionate bitterness. "When I look back, I cannot think what folly, what madness possessed me. I am sure that my good fortune had in some measure turned my brain.

"On the second day that I was on board I began to take an interest in my fellow-passengers. My romantic story was known amongst them—how from a simple engineer, glad to earn an income of a few hundreds, I had suddenly and quite unexpectedly come into possession of a title and estates worth sixty thousand per annum. On the second day of the voyage I walked about the deck amusing myself with the novel sights and sounds, when, Nellie, I saw one of the most beautiful women I had ever beheld in my life—beautiful as a dream or a vision, but, ah, Nellie, not half so fair and winsome as you!

"I had seen but little of women. I had never been thrown much into their society. I hardly remembered my own mother; sisters and cousins I had none; you and your mother were the only two with whom I had been on friendly or intimate terms. I loved you. I understood your simple, noble nature; I knew your true earnest character; but I was perfectly ignorant of the arts of women. I thought they were all like you; their caprices, fascinations, charms, arts, and intrigues were all unknown to me. Never was prey more easily caught. I hate myself when I think of my own folly.

"The beautiful woman was walking up and down the deck; her veil was thrown back, and the sea-breeze had brought a lovely bloom to her face. Her graceful carriage, so free, so stately, attracted me first.

"I saw her lay her hand on the rail. She was looking over at the passing waves; the hand was white as a snowdrop; a wedding-ring shone on it, with broad bands of diamonds and sapphires. 'She is married,' I thought. Then, little as I understood the mysteries of ladies' attire, I perceived that the coquettish line of white defining the form of her beautiful head was a widow's cap.

"'Who is that lady?' I asked of Captain Luttrell.

"His eyes brightened, as did the eyes of every other man on board, when they rested on her.

"'She is a Mrs. Nugent,' he replied—'a young widow returning to England. Her husband, Captain Vere Nugent, died a few months since. I will introduce you to her,' and the next moment I was bowing before the beautiful young widow, who seemed still but a child.

"Lurline is my wife now, and I will not say one word against her. I will not even say that I could do so. She was certainly the most beautiful, the most fascinating woman I had ever seen. She looked so young that it was almost impossible to believe that she had been a wife and was a widow; but I knew afterwards that she was at least ten years older than we thought her. I will not describe her to you; you will see her and judge for yourself.

"Nellie," continued Mark, "there is as great a difference between you and Lurline as between a simple natural lily of the valley and a gaudy artificial camelia. I saw it afterwards; but at first she took my senses captive, and held them in thrall. I remember how she puzzled me, how I watched her. One of the first things that struck me was the subtle odor of sweet violets that seemed to envelope her. Everything belonging to her—her sables, shawls, books, fans, gloves—everything had the same sweet odor of fresh violets. That charmed me. Oh, Nellie, I was a rash, foolish coward, but I never thought of loving her, and I never dreamed of marrying any one but you! Every man on board was in love with her; but she favored me, and I was weak enough, young and foolish enough, to be flattered by this preference, to feel proud and delighted when the little court of admirers had to make way for me, when she turned from them all with a smile for me, when she laid that white-gemmed hand of hers on my arm, dismissing the others with a little nod of the head, saying, 'I will accompany you, Lord Severne. I should like a quiet promenade.'

"It pleased me to mark hot, angry jealousy in other men's eyes; it pleased me to note how they envied every mark of preference which this beautiful woman showered on me. Still, Nellie, I never dreamed of being false to you.

"At first I was attracted by her great beauty, her fascination, her low sweet voice, her nameless charm of dress and manner; then by her decided, open preference for me, shown at all times and in all places.

"I never thought that rank, title, or money had anything to do with it; I believed it was for myself alone that she cared. Ah, Nellie, perhaps even a stronger man than myself might have succumbed! I shall never forget the nights on the ocean, with the stars like golden meteors in the sky, the sea dark, silent, mysterious and solemn. Such nights they were—the sea and sky so calm, and the beautiful face looking into mine! Ah, Nellie, you taught me love, and it will never die; she taught me passion, and it is dead!

"There can be no excuse for me, Nellie—I offer none. But remember that for the first time in my life I was flattered by all the subtle flatteries that a clever and beautiful woman could use. The balance of my reason was gone. She had roused passion that yet was not love in my heart. I was driven onwards by the anger of those whom she slighted for me; and one night—one fatal night, when the moon was shining brilliantly, and the sea was calm as a lake—we stood together at the stern of the vessel, hidden by the wheel-house. Her hand stole into mine, her face was raised to mine, pale with emotion, her eyes glistening with tears. I forgot you, Nellie; I forgot honor, truth, and loyalty. I bent down to her, and—— Well, I cannot tell you how it happened. I am speaking the truth, Nellie. I would not hide one thought from you. I feel sure that when I bent my head to kiss her I had no thought of asking her to be my wife; but before another half hour had passed, I had promised to marry her, and—Nellie, love, listen—from that moment to this I have never had one single happy moment—not one. There could be no drawing back—no hesitation even, for I found the next day that the whole of the passengers knew that Lord Severne and the beautiful Mrs. Nugent were engaged.

"Weak, cowardly, disloyal—ah, yes, I know I was all that! But I have suffered horribly. From that hour to this I have been a miserable man, for I found out that it was you I loved after all, and that the love of the lad was better than the passion of the man. There were times when I resolved on telling her, but it would have been useless. She had decided on marrying me, and I knew that my intentions were quite secondary to hers. When it was too late, my heart went back to its first allegiance. I found my engagement to this woman of the world a very business-like matter. There was no nonsense, no delay. We were married three weeks after the Queen of the Seas reached London.

"Ah, Nellie, you have suffered, but my pain has been greater! My conscience gave me no rest. Night and day your image was with me, night and day my folly and cowardice were ever before me. I longed, yet dreaded to see you. If I had known that your mother was dead, and that you were waiting for me in the old home alone, I should have gone to you, no matter what had happened; but your letter did not reach me."

"It was returned to me," I interposed.

"As soon as my affairs were settled," he continued, "I went abroad. Lurline preferred it. She said she never cared to live in England; and, in truth, I was indifferent on the subject, knowing that no place could ever be the same to me again. At Mentone we met the Yorkes, and I liked them very much. I was a miserable, haunted, gloomy man. My wealth brought me no happiness, because I had lost you. I found rest in talking to Lady Yorke. She seemed to think that I had some great sorrow in my life. I do not suppose I should have returned to England, at least for some years, had not imperative business compelled me to go to Severne Court a few weeks ago. Oh, Nellie, there are some disappointments too bitter, too great for words! I shall return to Italy; I cannot live in England."

"Why?" I asked.

His face clouded, an angry gleam came into the eyes which had been full of pain and despair.

"I cannot tell you why, Nellie, but my life is blighted. I cannot stay anywhere for long."

"Shall you never live at Severne Court?" I asked.

"Never," was the gloomy reply. "The punishment of my folly is that I shall be a wanderer on the face of the earth."

"But why, Mark—why?" I cried, beginning to forget my own troubles in his.

"There are some things that a man cannot speak of," he replied, "cannot even think of, or lay bare to his own heart. This sorrow of mine is one of them."

"Then Mark," I could not help saying as I looked sadly at him, "you have ruined all the happiness of my life without securing your own."

"That is just what I have done, Nellie. Between the remorse I feel at the loss of you and the sorrow of my secret, I am the most miserable man in the world."

Ah, Mark, my lover, I read in your face that your folly had cost you dear! We sat in silence for some time, the wind stirring the lilac branches and bearing to us sweet gusts of perfume. We had not been there an hour, and already it seemed to me an eternity. I knew that we must part. Time was passing, and I should be wanted. Then the full force of my misery rushed over me like a lava tide. How could I ever take up the duties of life again? My heart and soul had no strength, no life. Where should I turn for help or comfort? For, alas, I had given my whole heart to a man who had married another and had forgotten me!

"Mark, what shall I do with the rest of my life?" I asked, wearily. "I cannot die just because I wish to die. I am like a ship without a rudder. Love of you, whether living or dead, has hitherto filled my life. What am I to do?"

"I cannot tell, Nellie," he replied. "Are you happy with Lady Yorke?"

"Yes—as happy as I could be anywhere without you," I replied.

"Then do not go away. We will do that, not you. We will remain for a few days; then I shall say that I am summoned to the Court on business. Nellie, forgive me for what I am going to say. All I have in the world ought to have been yours—and I have such abundant wealth; let me give you what will keep you in comfort and affluence."

I could not be angry; his eyes were full of tears, and his lip quivered.

"No," I replied, gently; "you must not do that, Mark. I do not care for money. I would rather have had one true word of love from your lips than all the money you possess."

I could not help it—doubtless it was very undignified; but, when I saw the pain on the honest face, the humble sorrow in the dear eyes, when I saw Mark distressed, grieved with the misery of a lifetime on his face, I forgot my wounded love for one short moment. How could I refuse him anything to whom I had never said nay? How could I refuse him pardon when he asked it with tears in his eyes? He had marred my life, ruined my happiness, made every hope bankrupt; but I loved him still. I held out my hands to him; I tried to smile, although the raining tears blinded me.

"I will forgive you, Mark," I said. "Ah, my dear, I could not, if I would, be angry with you! We must never meet again, Mark. The wide world must be ever between us two who were once to be always together; a deep grave lies between us, and in it I must bury my love; but I forgive you, even as I hope to be forgiven."

He held my hand in his for one moment, and then he said, with tears that did not shame his manhood:

"My dear, lost love, farewell!"

I knew what he meant. It would be better for him, better for me, that we should meet as strangers. He would be leaving in a few days, and we should see each other no more. Better so!

Trembling, fainting, dazed by my own misery, I dared not go back to the house just then, lest any one meeting me should ask what ailed me. I had a strange, vague idea that I had changed my own identity, and that the sorrow-stricken woman walking by herself under the summer trees could not be Nellie Chester.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Burlesque Was a Necessity.

After the members of the quartet, in the disguise of actors, had gone through the usual act, involving discords and other absurdities, they came to the front of the stage, formed in line, put their hands behind their backs, and began a sentimental song, while the actors settled down for a short rest.

Then it was that the country cousin turned to his city relative and said:

"Why, they made horrible discords at first."

"Yes," replied the city relative.

"And the actors all made fun of them."

"Yes."

"And the audience laughed at them."

"Yes."

"They made a regular burlesque of the scene."

"Yes."

"But now they are trying to really sing."

"They are trying to."

"If that's what they're here for why was all the horse-play put in?"

"My boy," said the city relative in a fatherly way, "you don't understand some of these modern plays. It was done for two reasons. First, it was necessary in order to lug a quartet in where it didn't belong and so stop the action of the play. Second—and this is the principal reason, my boy—a certain amount of burlesque is necessary to put the audience in a humor to stand the singing. If you went to the theater much you'd understand all this."—Chicago Tribune.

The Weight of a Dollar Bill.

In the Treasury here one day this week the question came up as to the weight of a $1 bill. Scales of perfect accuracy were brought into requisition and the surprising discovery was made that twenty-seven $1 notes weighed exactly as much as a $20 gold piece. The latter just balances 540 grains. However, the bills weighed were perfectly crisp and new. Trial made with soiled notes, such as come in every day for redemption, showed that twenty-seven of them weighed considerably more than the $20 coin. Every paper dollar on its way through the world continually accumulates dirt, perspiration and grease, so that after a year of use it is perceptibly heavier.—Washington Letter.

Playing-Card Figures.

Few people know the significance of the figures in playing cards. In olden times hearts represented "choirmen" or ecclesiastics, and the early cards of that suit have a cape, which in form resembled a heart. The spade was originally a pikehead, typifying the nobility of the soldiery. The artisans were represented by a stone tile, now known as a diamond. Farmers were represented by a trefoil, or clover leaf, now called a club. The four kings were originally David, Alexander, Cæsar and Charlemagne, representing the four great monarchies. The queens were Argine, Judith, Esther and Pallas, representing birth, fortitude, piety and wisdom. The knaves were either knights or servants to knights.

Helen Hunt Jackson's body has been removed from Cheyenne Mountain, where it has been buried for six years, and interred in Evergreen cemetery at Colorado Springs.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

☞Sold by Druggists, 75c.

MEN Wanted; salary and expenses. Permanent place. Apply at once Browne Bros. Co., Nurserymen, Chicago

"German Syrup"

A Cough and Croup Medicine.

For children a medicine should be absolutely reliable. A mother must be able to pin her faith to it as to her Bible. It must contain nothing violent, uncertain, or dangerous. It must be standard in material and manufacture. It must be plain and simple to administer; easy and pleasant to take. The child must like it. It must be prompt in action, giving immediate relief, as childrens' troubles come quick, grow fast, and end fatally or otherwise in a very short time. It must not only relieve quick but bring them around quick, as children chafe and fret and spoil their constitutions under long confinement. It must do its work in moderate doses. A large quantity of medicine in a child is not desirable. It must not interfere with the child's spirits, appetite or general health. These things suit old as well as young folks, and make Boschee's German Syrup the favorite family medicine. ⑥

Farm For Sale.

A No. 1 Improved Stock Farm of 365 Acres for Sale Cheap.

THE PORTLAND STOCK FAR[illegible]

Situated adjo[illegible] on the C. M[illegible] Mason Cit[illegible] fenced [illegible] hog tigh[illegible] and all impro[illegible] large troughs [illegible] [illegible] 75 feet high [illegible] 1890 [illegible] Mason City [illegible] county, and [illegible] tiful little city [illegible] inhabitants [illegible]

PILE[illegible]

[illegible]

Pape[illegible]

The leading Rep[illegible] at a good county seat. [illegible] office Address Y care M. C. Ne[illegible]paper [illegible] Mason City, Ia.-1a*

TUMORS

Internal or External, successfully Treated by New Method. No knife; no pain or shock. For pamphlet write The Sanitarium, Union Springs, N.Y.

THE OLD DOCTOR'S

Cotton Root Pills

LADIES' FAVORITE.

ALWAYS RELIABLE and perfectly SAFE. The same as used by thousands of woman all over the United States, in the OLD DOCTORS private mail practice, for 38 years, and not a single bad result. Money returned if not as represented. Send 4 cents (stamps) for sealed particulars.

Dr. WARD & CO., 117 N. 8th St., St. Louis, Mo.

The WEAK made STRONG

FREE TRIAL { In Nervous Debility, Lost Vitality, Weakness and Decay, sent free for 12 cents postage.

Address Dr. Ward & Co., 117 N. 8th Street, St. Louis, Mo.

WANTED.

$15 A WEEK, ANY LADY, employed or unemployed, can make this for a few hours work each day. Salary or com. $10 samples free.

Ad. H. BENJAMIN & CO., 115 N. 8th St., ST. LOUIS, MO.

☞ANY LADY can get a valuable secret that cost me $5.00, and a rubber shield for 30 cents.

Mrs. V. M. APP. CO.

115 N. 8th STREET, ST. LOUIS, MO.

FAT FOLKS REDUCED

Mrs. Alice Maple, Oregon, Mo., writes: "My weight was 320 pounds, now it is 195, a reduction of 125 lbs." For circulars address, with 6c., Dr. O. W. F. SNYDER, McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, Ill.

WE WANT AGENTS FOR THE FASTEST SELLING article. Big money. No risk. WM. BACHALR, 253 Bissell Street, Chicago, Ill.

Mason City Newspaper Co-91-53

MASON CITY, IOWA,

Cancer Infirmary

The Only Reliable Institution in the Northwest, Homelike and Pleasant,

DR. M. V. MAYFIELD, the Specialist, has been more than successful for thirteen years. No Knife. No Caustics.

H. E. MOORE, the President, GUARANTEES A CURE OR NO PAY.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR 25 CTS.

Best Cough Medicine. Recommended by Physicians. Cures where all else fails. Pleasant and agreeable to the taste. Children take it without objection. By druggists.

CONSUMPTION

Red Lake Falls
Iron Works,

P. & J. MEEHAN, Proprietors.
J. Z PERRON, Manager.

SAW AND GRIST MILL
MACHINERY MADE AND REPAIRED.

Repairing Thresher Engines
AND BOILERS AND
AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS

Circular Saws Hammered. Satisfaction Guaranteed, Correspondenc solicited.

BRING IN YOUR WORK

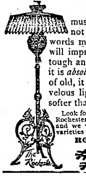
Scrap Brass and Copper Bought.

PERFECTION IN BUTTER MAKING.

The O. K. OUTFIT EXCELS THEM ALL.

THE O.K. CREAMERY

Has the largest cooling surface; takes less cooling material; less labor, and gives Best Results. All cream raised between milkings. Skimming Glass whole depth of can, showing condition of milk without touching Creamery. Send for O. K. Catalogue.
JOHN S. CARTER, Sole Manf'r, SYRACUSE, N. Y.



"Seeing is Believing."

And a good lamp must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer hasn't the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue and we will send you a lamp safely by express—your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.
ROCHESTER LAMP CO., 42 Park Place, New York City.

"The Rochester."

WE are making a specialty this season of what we call our PARAGON HARNESS. Made of the FINEST STOCK and the very BEST WORKMANSHIP. Such a harness cannot be bought for less than $25. at retail. But we are willing, in order to introduce it, to SELL ONE SET ONLY to one person as a sample for $16.50.

$25.00 HARNESS FOR $16.50
IN GENUINE RUBBER $18.50.

DESCRIPTION OF HARNESS.

A fine Buggy Harness stitched twelve stitches to the inch, except traces which are stitched ten. Is made to represent a $50 harness. It has a 3 or 3 1-2 hand laced, leather pad saddle, with covered seat and jockeys; is made from fine stock. Bridle is of usual dimensions, has fine blinds, nice leather front and beautiful rosettes with glass centers, nice nickel bit. Check-rein, either overdraw with nose piece, or side check. Nice russet or black reins. The breast-collar, neck-strap, breeching and girt folds are made either of patent enamel or plain harness leather as preferred and the layers on the same are cut wide and straight, and being stitched so very fine and nicely creased, give to the harness a costly custom-made appearance. The hip and back straps are doubled and stitched, nicely creased and finished throughout. Boxloops of beautiful design as on custom-made work. Trimmings either Davis Rubber, Nickel Wire or Brass Wire, or a Fancy style. We refer you to the publishers of this paper as to our responsibility. Remit by Express or Money Order. Money refunded if goods are not satisfactory.
BOSTON HARNESS CO.
Concord Junction, Mas

THE NEWS.
Entered at the post office at Red Lake Falls as second-class mail matter.
Official Paper of the City.

I. LEMIEUX,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON,
Office in residence, First street, Red Lake Falls, Minn.

JOHN WATSON,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEGN,
Office in residence, Sixth street, Red Lake Falls Minn.

Caution. Barbed Wire.

What that barbed wire fence has done to your horses Metzger's Veterinary Ointment will heal at once not leaving a scar, and will grow the hair as before. It is natures own remedy, and is warranted to heal any and all cases of scratches, Grease heal, collar and saddle gall, speed cracks, cracked heels, cuts, wounds, stiff or inflamed joints, frost bites, sore eyes, sore teats, mud fever, inflamed and diseasee feet, and will grow a new hoof in the quickest possible time. Call at W. A. Screiter's and get a box and try it price 50c and full lbs $1.00.

A Standard Remedy.

Mezger's Pile Ointment has long proven a boon to suffering humanity, and is effective whenever used. Those in need of a remedy of this kind can find [illegible]

A Sad Mistake.

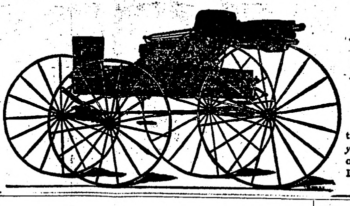
Is to have a stable of fine horses and have the distemper start among them with nothing to prevent its spreading. Heed the warning, and check it in the first stages of the disease by using Metzger's Pink Eye and Distemper Cure, as it has never been known to fail. Cures horses of old chronic coughs, colds, chills, epizootic, and all throat, lung Bronchial and nasal troubles. Especially good in hay fever or heaves. Price $1 per bottle or 6 for $5. For sale by W. A. Schreiter

Strength and Health.

If you are not feeling strong and healthy, Electric Bitters. If LaGrippe has left you weak and weary, use Electric Bitters. This remedy acts directly on Liver, Stomach and Kidneys, gently aiding those organs to perform their functions. If you are afflicted with Sick Headach, you will find speed and permanent relief by taking Electric bitters. One trial will convince you that this is the remedy. Large bottles only 50c. at W A. Schreiter's Drug Store.

A Little Girl's Experience in a Lighthouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Loren Trescot are keepers of the Gov. Lighthouse at Sand Beach, Mich. and are blessed with a daughter four years old. Last April she was taken down with Measles, followed with a dreadful Cough and turning into a Fever. Doctors at home and at Detroit treated her, but in vain, she grew worse rapidly, until she was a mere "handful of bones".—Then she tried Dr. King's New Discovery and after the use of two and a half bottles, was completely cured. They says Dr. King's Discovery is worth its weight in gold, yet you may get a trial bottle free at W. A. Schreiter's Drug



WARRANTED WAGONS & BUGGIES
MANUFACTURED BY
EASY WAGON GEAR CO.
DETROIT, MICH.

If you wish the easiest riding, most durable and attractive Wagon or Buggy made, ask your Dealer to show you these goods. A written warranty furnished with every one. Take no other. You may as well have the BEST. It costs no more than an inferior article.

CATALOGUE SENT IF REQUESTED.

We Would Like to Call the Attention of

Capitalists

Manufacturers and Others Desiring a Place for

INVESTMENT

To the

Superior Advantages of

RED LAKE FALLS

Its Many WaterPowers and other natural advantages. It is only a question of a few years until this will be one of the leading cities of Minnesota. Investment in real estate or water privileges are sure to secure to the investors handsome returns.

WE RE

In the Cnter of Vast

Farming District.

Yearly consuming large amounts of imported products of manufactures. This vast tract of land is watered by the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers. Within the limits of the city are

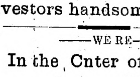
12 DISTINCT WATER POWERS.

The only natural water powers on these streams. There are fine openings for paper and pulp mills, woolen and other factories. Parties outside desiring any information concerning property, address

LOVELL DIAMOND CYCLES.

No. 1, Solid Tires,	$85.00
No. 2, Cushion Tires,	$95.00
No. 3, Ladies' Solid Tires,	$85.00
No. 3 C, Ladies' Cushion Tires,	$95.00
No. 4, Convertible Solid Tires,	$85.00
No. 4, C, " Cushion Tires,	$95.00

STRICTLY HIGH GRADE.



OUR Cushion Tires ARE Warranted ALL PARTS Interchangeable.
$85.00

No better machine made at any price.

Bicycle Catalogue Free.
$85.00

JOHN P. LOVELL ARMS CO.,
MANUFACTURERS, BOSTON, MASS.

Send six cents in stamps for our 160 page Illustrated Catalogue of Guns, Rifles, Revolvers, Sporting Goods of all kinds, etc.

ANDERSON'S SHORTHAND TYPEWRITER
Prints A Word at One Stroke.

THIS is the machine that is used in the Office, Court-room, and for reporting lectures and sermons.

While its speed is greater than any other known method, it is so simple that any intelligent person can gain a speed of 100 or more words per minute, in five or six weeks, without the aid of an instructor. Circulars and testimonials sent to all who mention this paper.

E. T. PIERCE, FAYETTE, OHIO,
Sole Agent for U. S. and Canada.

THE NEW WEBSTER
JUST PUBLISHED—ENTIRELY NEW.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

A GRAND INVESTMENT
for the Family, the School, or the Library.
Revision has been in progress for over 10 Years.
More than 100 editorial laborers employed.
$300,000 expended before first copy was printed.
Critical examination invited. Get the Best.
Sold by all Booksellers. Illustrated pamphlet free.
G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Publishers,
Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

RALPH & BOURDON,
Proprietors of the CITY
DRAY
LINE.
WOOD & COAL
Anything in our line done
Promptly and at very Reasonable
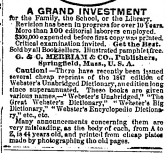
Rates.
GIVE US A CALL

INDIANA RANGE CO.
MANUFACTURERS
OF WROUGHT STEEL RANGES



Guaranteed to be the most economical, most durable and most perfect Range on the market. Suitable for hard or soft coal, or wood.

Send for catalogue to
INDIANA RANGE CO.
EVANSVILLE, IND.

PASTOR KOENIG'S TRADE MARK NERVE TONIC

Two Bottles Cured Her.

CARROLL, Iowa, July, 1889.
I was suffering ten years from shocks in my head, so much so, that at times I didn't expect to recover. I took medicines from many doctors, but did not get any relief until I took Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic; the second dose relieved and two bottles cured me.
S. W. PECK.

Worth Its Weight in Gold.

EMMET, Dak., July 28, 1890.
The young man concerned has not now the slightest symptoms of fits, since using Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic. I consider it worth its weight in gold.
J. J. SHEA, Pastor.

Rev. John Bedecker, of Wesphalia, Kan., writes, Oct. 13, 1890: "There is a 16-year-old boy here, who suffered from fits about a year. I ordered a bottle of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic for him, and the sickness left him altogether. He never had it since."

FREE—A Valuable Book on Nervous Diseases sent free to any address, and poor patients can also obtain this medicine free of charge.

This remedy has been prepared by the Reverend Pastor Koenig, of Fort Wayne, Ind., since 1876, and is now prepared under his direction by the KOENIG MED. CO., Chicago, Ill.
Sold by Druggists at $1 per Bottle. 6 for $5.
Large Size. $1.75. 6 Bottles for $9.

The Police Gazette

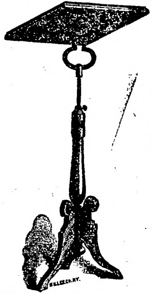
Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensations, and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes. Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 3 weeks for $1.00. Send Five Cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX,
Franklin Square, New York City.

Good Looks.

Good looks are more than skin deep, depending upon a healthy condition of all the vital organs. If the Liver be inactive you have a Bilious Look, if your stomach be disordered you have a Dyspeptic Look and if your Kidneys be affected you have a Pinched Look. Secure good health and you will have good Looks. Electric Bitters is the great alterative and Tonic and acts directly on these vital organs. Cures Pimples, Blotches, Boils and gives a good complexion. Sold at W. A. Schreiter's Drugstore, 50c per bottle.

Adjustable Extension Stand.



Uses: Book Stand, Music Stand, Atlas Stand, Album Stand, Bible Stand, Flower Stand, also Lamp, Lecture, Parlor, Library, Office, Dictionary and Checker Stand and Easel. Hard wood, rubbed finish, height 34 inches. Height extended, 50 inches. Weight 12 lbs.; size of top 14 x 18; shipped K. D. Price, $5. KEELER & CO., Furniture Man'f'rs, 81-91 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

ADAM SCHMITZ
DEALER IN
Horse Furnishing Goods,

5/A HORSE BLANKETS
5/A HORSE BLANKETS

EVERYBODY WANTS ONE.

Two or three dollars for a 5/A Horse Blanket will save double its cost. Your horse will eat less to keep warm and be worth fifty dollars more.

LIGHT AND HEAVY HARNESS, Whips, Combs, Brushes, Trunks, Valises.

The celebrated STANDARD HORSE AND CATTLE FOOD. Every stock owner should test its merits. For sale by ADAM SCHMITZ.
Brodway. Red Lake Falls

Librarion
Minnesota State Hist

MI[illegible] HIST[illegible] SOC[illegible]

RED LAKE FALLS NEWS.

JAS. MEEHAN JR. / P. MEEHAN { EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF CITY

Vol. IX No. 1. RED LAKE FALLS, POLK COUNTY, MINESOTA, DECEMBER 31, 1891. TERMS, $1.50 PER YEAR

Joseph Smith & Co.

HAVE, AS USUAL, A COMPLETE Stock of General Merchandise, Including a Fine Assortment of Goods Suitable For Holiday Gifts.

A large stock of Ladies Winter Dress Goods, Cloaks, etc. and general furnishing goods.

A Large Stock of Gents Furnishings. Call and Examine Stock.

Frank E. Hunt,

DEALER IN

GENERAL : HARDWARE.

P & J MEEHAN,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. J. HOWE & CO)

Manufacturers and Dealers in

LUMBER,

LATH,

SHINGLES

Sash, Doors, Moldings, Building Paper,

Yards and Office on Main St.

A Complete Reference Library

AT ABOUT 2 CTS. A DAY.

REVISED ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA

20 Large Octavo Volumes, 7,000 Pages, 8,000,000 Words, and 97 Maps Printed in Colors, Bound in Jute Manilla.

AND THE WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS FOR ONE YEAR

ALL FOR $7.50!

This is the GREATEST OFFER ever made by any Newspaper. The Revised Encyclopædia Britannica is a Dictionary of Art, Science and Literature to which is added descriptions of American Cities with a History of their Origin and Growth, together with Accurate Information of their Situation, Population, Resources, etc., etc.

The Best, Cheapest, Completest and Latest Revised Encyclopædia and the Greatest Newspaper,

THE WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS FOR ONE YEAR FOR $7.50!

AND WE PAY THE FREIGHT.

Address WEEKLY PIONEER PRESS, St. Paul, Minn.

St. Joseph's Bazar.

Proves an Unqualified Success—The Fair Held in the Holmes Block.

The Outcome a Surprise—Contests the Source of Much Interest and Profit.

St. Joseph's bazaar opend Monday and closed Wednesday night, in the Holmes block. The attendance on Monday was not very large, but on Tuesday and Wednesday the rooms were so crowded as to be uncomfortable. Tuesday night after the contests and canvassing closed a dance was attempted, but was soon given up. However, the money flowec freely and the results were destined to surprise everybody. The supper served by the ladies in an adjoining room was the most excellent fair supper we ever partook of and the ladies proved their determination to please by many delicate courtesies which are so often conspicuous for their absence at such occasions. Wednesday night conveyances ran to all parts of the city every half hour to convey, gratis, any who wished to attend. The result was soon apparent, for the crowd last night was something to delight those interested in the success of the fair. Many who otherwise would not have attended took advantage of this accommodation. The last night at a fair is always the most interesting. Those contesting for different prizes are endeavoring to get in the decisive work ere the close of the polls, those canvassing for different lotteries seem determined to make the best of the last moments, and so it goes. It will be seen that the receipts from the contest foot up to over a thousand dollars. The votes stood:

SILK DRESS.

Miss Bray	2,200.
Miss Gervais	1,254.

GOLD WATCH.

Peter Paradis	1,876
F. Munier	1,259

CASTORS.

Mrs. M. Verboncouer	996
Mrs. F. Gonier	510

DOLL.

Victoria Paul	876
Elodia Cyr	588

TOILET CASE.

Miss J. La Freniere	417
Miss Dufoe	337

THE RAFFLE.

Following are the winners of articles raffled:

Toy set, No, 21, Joe Tessier.
Glove case, No 30, W. T. Spellaine
Lamp, No. 6, Mrs. Latendresse.
Muff, No. 11, P. Amard.
Silver set, No. 10, E. A. Morau.
Lamp mat, No. 9, Theodore Gamache.
Vase and bouquet No. 15, Mrs. Latendresse.
Embroidery machine, No. 31, Leon Hubert.
Wool rug, No. 1, Joe Pouliot.
Foot stool, No. 4, Beter Perrault.
Table scarf. No. 2, Mrs. Emma Houll.
Picture, No. 3, D. Cyr.
Chair pillow, No. 25, J. F. Holmes.
Bed-room set, No. 28, Mrs. B. Cya.
Clock No. 27, Dr. I. Lemieux.
Table Scarf, No. 23, Miss Rebecca Brunelle.
Baby's cloak and bonnet, No. 5, D. Cyr.
Lady's slippers, No. 14, N. A. Bray.
Frame, No. 31, F. Patuaude.
Chair cushion, No. 24, Victoria Lafreniere.
Vases, No. 22, Nap. LaBissoniere.
Doll's Bonnet, No. 7, D. Cyr.
Stove, No. 8, P. Emard.

The net receipts are estimated at $1-250.

The managers of the fair desire to express their appreciation of the liberal patronage of our citizens at large.

His Curiosity Was Gratified.

A stranger stood alone in the street of a great city. His hat was napless his boots covered with the dust of travel. Around him on every side a hurrying throng pushed and jostled in mad haste. He turned to a friendly policeman and said: "Say Where be all these people gwine"! The officer was dumfounded at such ignorance Where are they going? Why, to purchase tickets via the popul r Wisconsin Central If you are going anywhere you want to go with the crowd and ride on the best track in the most comfortable cars and with the greatest ease you ever experienced". For tickets berths and further information apply to any ticket agent.

Terrebonne.

Mr. L. St. Yves drove to the county seat on Monday, returning Tuesday.

High mass will be held at half past ten at Ste. Antoine's church on New Years Day.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Berthiaume of Gentilly were in town on Christmas day and attended divine service.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank St. Martin are the happy parents of a baby girl born last week—since which time Frank wears a broad smile.

Lambert.

Mr. Lowe, of Red Lake Falls, was a guest at the Lambert hotel Monday.

Adolph Hince and wife, Joseph Boisel, and wife and L. Boisel and wife of Crookston are visiting at the home of Louis Hince. They will spend the New Yeers holiday here.

A man called "Gopher Nels" went up to the north of Lost river to procure some logs and accidently got one of his legs caught between two logs. The leg was severely crushed and it is feared the man will be laid up for a long time.

B—— Ol——

They are Hearing From us.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28,—The general land office is being flooded with petitions and resolutions these days from Minnesota against the proposed forest reservation in northern Minnesota. Commissioner Carter has ordered a complete report in this case to be made up as soon as possible, which will probably be submitted to the congressmen. In this report will be incorporated the results of the investigations of a special agent of the department who has been in Minnesota looking up facts relative to the sentiment prevailing for and against this proposed reservation.

Speed of Bicycles.

The Kolnishe Zeitung gives an account of some interesting experiments which were tried by Major Brix, the comander of the Militar Turnanstalt in Berlin, in order to test the speed of bicycles as compared with that of horses, for the purpose of conveying dispatches to Berlin and Weissensee. The distances attempted were, from Straussberg to Weissensee, a distance of just under 24 miles, and from Eberswalbe to Weissensee, 32 miles In the latter journey two cavalry officers rode aginst two infantry officers mounted on bicyles. The latter accomplished the journey in 215 minutes and 210 minutes respectively, while the two lieutenants on horseback arrived at their destination seven minutes before the first bicycle rider. In the shorter distance the same result was obtained, the rider arriving a few minutes in advance of the bicyclists. In both cases the cavalry officers only rode at a gallop for the fiirst fifteen minutes of the journey, while the bicyclists went at full speed all the way.

County Cullings.

From the Thief River Falls Press.

A steamboat about 20 feet wide by 60 feet long will be built on the east bank of Red Lake river. Who is the owner we have not learned but work has commenced and it will be finished by spring and will no doubt ply between this point and the Red Lakes.

From the Crookston Times.

Fred Lowe, of Red Lake Falls, a member of the mercantile firm of McClatchie & Lowe, was in the city this morning, and favored the Times' sanctum with a pleasant call.

E. D. Childs returned yesterday from Duluth where he has been attendinding a meeting of the Directors of the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad. He says that the matter of extending the road was fully talked over among the directors, and there was a strong sentiment favoring the building of a line into the Red River Valley.

Sheriff Grundysen and Deputy Losey returned from a trip to Stillwater and the reformatory this morning. The visited and investigated both places of safe keeping most thorougly, and while at the former city had a pleasant chat with those noted criminals, the Younger boys, whom they found to be fluent linguists. As they have been confined in the prison nearly a score of years and during that time have been given light work which has enabled them to, read and study, they should be well versed in all matters of public interest.

Mat Skala's place on Broadway stil retains its popularity, and not without reason—Mat has dexterity and tact. A full stock of wines, liquors and cigars. When in need of liquors for medicinal purposes.

Another Christmas

Tide Has Come and Gone—How Its Advent was Observed In Red Lake

Fallls—Special Services in the Churches—Xmas Eve at Presbyterian Church.

Christmas has come and gone since last the NEWS was issued—the day looked forward to with such high-strung anticipation and such absorbing and unqualified reverence by all Christians in the world. When we pause to think we readily realize that therefore a great event has occurred. Here acting in common with a multitudinous host who observe Christmas, we people in Red Lake Falls played our own part in the commemoration of that great event which annully inspires countless hosts. We had our fireside celebrations, our home-gatherings and our church-observances. The warm weather which prevailed up to Thursday morning suddenly gave place to conventional holiday weather and the thermometer, in deference to the approach of fur begrimed Santa Claus, sank down low among the 30's.

Friday morning the quiet after the merry making of the eve before was broken early by pilgrims to St. Marys church, where high mass was solemnized at 5 a. m. Rev. Fr. Arpin officiating. Services were also held at St. Joseph's church at 9 and 10 a. m.

There was very little out door enthusiasm Christmas day, the weather being the coldest of the season. Few sleigh-rides were indulged in, and scarce a figure could be seen on the streets.

Christmas eve witnessed one of the most successful celebrations ever held in the Presbyterian church. The recitations were pronounced by all as most interesting and excellent—thanks to the pains of the ladies who drilled the different speakers. After Santa Claus had made his appearence joy of the little folks was beyond measure.

PROGRAM.

Song by the school.
Prayer.
Recitation—"When Xmas Comes"—Scott Hall.
"The Star in the East", Louisa Lonson.
Song, by Mrs. Marshall's class.
Recitation—Willie Smith
Recitation, Della Wilkins.
Xmas Carol—solo by Mrs. Marshall, chorus by school.
Recitation—"Hang up the Baby's Stocking"—Marjorie Rodgers.
Dialogue—Bessie Hunt and Fred Smith.
Song by school.
Recitation—"Two Stockings"—Rachel Taylor.
Recitation, "New Year Resolutions"—Henry Davis.
Song by a quartette.
Recitation—"Xmas Eve," Agnes Rodgers
Songs by a quartette of boys.

The play was this: Santa Claus arrived through the fire place via the chimney; no sooner had he descended than the capering of his rein-deer hitched to a cutter laden with presents outside evidenced that they were becoming disorderly. The jingle of sleigh bells became fainter and Santa Claus realized that his reindeer had decamped, with all his presents. In this predicament, this sorry plight, the Yule Princess came from the fire place, and calling to her aid her mysterious prowess, produced presents from the Yule log in the fire-place and thus relieved Santa Claus from a most embarrassing position, and all were happy.

Santa Claus was assisted by two goblins, Henry Zutz and Ned Taylor, and the Yule Princess, Lillie Zutz.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retird from practice having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and desire to relieve human suffering I will send, free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

St. Paul Correspondence.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Dec. 28, 1891.

At a meeting last Monday the city council adopted the plans of Architect Reed of this city for the auditorium. The building will cost about $115,000 when completed.

Mrs. Frank Benoit died at St. Joseph's hospital Tuesday evening from an operation performed upon her the day before. She leaves a husband and four grown-up children to mourn her loss. Mr. Benoit, now railway mail clerk, formerly lived in Crookston, and was employed in the New York Store there.

Thursday evening Louis, the eldest son of Judge J. B. Olivier, was killed by a fall upon the pavement after leaving the house about five minutes before. It is believed that death resulted from concussion of the brain. Louis Olivier was 21 years old and his sudden death is a terrible shock to the family.

Christmas day was appropriately observed in all the churches here. At the Cathederal the first mass was celebrated at 5 o'clock. At 10:30 his grace Archbishop Ireland celebrated pontifical high mass. The choir was composed of forty voices with an orchestra of twenty pieces. The mass was Gounod's Messe Solenelle, St. Cecillia. It is said to be the finest mass ever composed, Mozart's Twelfth Mass not excepted. At Christ's church the full choir of forty voices sung Christmas carols, the musical services being of special interest.

In the afternoon the wet falling snow and wind made it very disagreeable for outdoor pleasures.

Saturday morning the thermometer went down to zero. This is as cold as it got this year.

A marriage took place here Thursday which was very romantic. A young man who was working in a wholesale house at a small salary thought he could make life happier by getting a bride, so he answered an advertisement "Husband Wanted" found in a stray paper. The correspondence was long and tedious but resulted favorably. Photographs had not been exchanged but an idea struck the young man. Everything at the store is done by sample so he sent for a sample of the dress of the bride elect. The sample was received and resulted in their marriage Thursday morning.

Course of Sermons.

Beginning with Sabbath evening, January 3d, 1892, I hope to begin a course of sermons setting forth the evidences of Christianity. The purpose of these sermons is to bring before the public the different arguments that support the teachings of Christ and the Apostles which are the foundation of all Christian belief. The public are invited to attend these meetings. The subjects for the different sermons will be as follows:

Genuineness and Authenticity of the Gospel, Jan. 3d.
Evidences Derived from the Gospels, Jan. 17th.
The Resurrection, Jan 31st.
Testimony of the Apostles," Feb. 14th.
Paul's Conversion, Feb. 28th.
Evidences as Furnished by Christianity, March 13th.

And possibly a seventh will be delivered on March 27th on Evidences as Derived from Intuition. This one has not been determined upon so may not be given. If any change should be found necessary in this course we will endeavor to give the notice through this paper.

J. S. MCCORNACK,
Pastor Presbyterian Church.

Sign the Protest.

Petitions to the President of the United States protesting against the proposed park and forest reserve "because the boundaries include twelve thousand square miles, or more than one seventh of the territory of the state of Minnesota; because there are lands included therein which in the ordinary course of development will belong to the state for school purposes, and increase the school fund by from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000, all of which will be lost if these lands are set apart for park purposes; because the boundaries include forest, prairie and mineral lands indiscriminately, and the necessary and the inevitable result will be to hinder the further settlement and development of the Northwest, to prevent the construction of direct lines of railroad from Northern Minnesota and North Dakota to Lake Superior, and to work hardship to honest settlers, both by preventing reductions in the transportation charges on his products and by increasing the cost of the lumber from which his home is built",—have been circulated this week throughout the Red River Valley. The petition was numerously signed.

Red Lake Falls News
TERMS, $1.50 PER YEAR.
P. & JAS. MEEHAN, PROPRIETORS.

The Northwest.

IOWA.

The jury returned a verdict for the defendant in the case of Ira Stubbs vs. R. P. Clarkson, for alleged slander, at Des Moines.

Estherville claims to have more handsome married ladies and more homely married men to the square inch than any other town of its size in the state.

Father Chandler, of Mount Pleasant was born in Vermont, in 1794. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. He is probably the oldest man in the state, at least in good health.

The Algona jail has a prisoner who is confined for selling mortgaged property. He is a singer and has the rest of the prisoners well trained in singing Sunday school hymns.

Charles D. Arms, of Sioux Rapids, dropped dead in an apoplectic fit, while playing billiards. He had eaten a hearty supper half an hour before and was apparently in the best of health.

Charles Smith, the Dubuque man who left his wife and five children in poverty and ran away and married Sarah Olson, a pretty Swede girl, was sentenced to two years in the penitentiary for bigamy.

Plymouth county has good roads. Mr. Kemp, a farmer, marketed fourteen loads of corn in Le Mars, the average weight of the loads being 8,725 pounds. The largest load weighing 9,208 pounds and the smallest 8,144 pounds.

Payson Sammis and Miss Eva Short had a narrow escape from drowning while skating on the river at Le Mars. They went through an airhole into deep water, but managed to keep their heads out until assistance arrived.

Des Moines News 27th: An old soldier named James Cleen, who lived with his aged wife in the most abject poverty in an old hotograph car on the South Side, died yesterday morning, his malady being dropsy.

MINNESOTA.

John Cramer, an old settler of Rice county, died at Northfield.

Clara Fuller will represent Northfield in the declamatory interstate contest at St. Paul.

Reports from Northfield are encouraging relative to raising its share of the World's fair fund.

Eddie Nelson, while skating on a pond near Pine City, broke through the ice and was drowned.

The citizens of Brown's Valley held a meeting, urging that the Lisseton reservation be immediately opened.

Mrs. David Herbert committed suicide at Mankato by hanging herself. She leaves a husband and seven children.

Claude Cooley was killed while playing in the freight yards of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway at Winona.

An oil fight between the Independent and Standard companies is going on at Anoka. The cut rates make oil cheap in that region.

To accommodate commercial traveless living in Mankato, the Northwestern has put on an early Monday merning train going west.

Near Mabel, Miss Josephine Swenson, while driving, was struch by a locomotive. Her horse was killed and she badly injured, yet she may live.

Miss Geeevieve Paquine, of Little Falls, was selected from the high school there as a contestant in the state declamatory contest to be held in St. Paul.

A party from the Minneapolis high school visited the observatory at Northfield to improve their astronomical knowledge by looking thrhugh the telescopes.

The John Windom lumber company has purchased the largest mill in Pine City, and will commence operations in a few days. The cut will exceed that of previous years.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

One of the alliance trust stores has been opened at Mitchell.

Goodwin Gunderson was acquitted of rape by a jury at Vermillion.

Billy Mills, a brakeman, was killed at Flandreau while coupling cars.

Watertown proposes to contribute a car load of flour to the starving Russians.

The work upon the three school buildings at the Cheyenne agency will begin next April.

A Jefferson club is to be formed at Watertown. As its name indicates it will be democratic.

Senator Kyle has been placed on four committees, that of education, labor, patents and irrigation.

Henry Goodman's place at Aberdeen was raided by the city marshall and a large quantity of liquor seized.

Yankton has formed a Business men's association, the main object of which is to boycott the deadbeats.

They are boasting in the southern part of the state that the farmers are able to plow right through December.

Dr. John C. Leslie, a prominent physician who mysteriously disappeared from Brooklyn, N. Y., has been found at Sioux Falls, where he has joined the divorce colony.

James Flannery, Ed. Wood and other inebriates, of Elk Point, are inmates of the Keeley institute of Sioux Falls. They inform their friends that they abhor liquor after a two week's treatment.

In about one month the Golden Reward chlorination works, in Deadwood, will be treating 100 tons of ore daily. The order for the machinery to make their increase in the capacity has been given.

Mitchell has organized a Commercial club with the following officers: President, T. C. Burns; vice president, S. E. Gilbert; secretary, J. K. Smith; treasurer, R. D. Welsh; executive committee, J. D. Lawler, J. D. Wood, R. W. Wheelock.

THE VERY LATEST.

News From all Quarters to Suit the Taste of Everybody.

Events of the Week Carefully Condensed for Busy Readers.

Snow is said to be eighteen feet deep in parts of New Mexico.

An Indian at Chamberlain, S. D., was granted a divorce Tuesday.

A statehood convention was held at Oklahoma City, O. T., Tuesday.

Joel R. Mayes, chief of the Cherokee Nation, died Monday at Tahlequah, I. T.

John W. Daniel was re-elected United States Senator from Virginia Tuesday.

Senator Colquitt, of Georgia, it is said, is likely to resign on account of ill-health.

There are 20,000 cases of grippe in St. Louis, but the mortality list is not large.

The National Prohibition Committee voted to hold the convention in St. Louis.

All the big salmon canneries on the Pacific coast are now said to be in the salmon trust.

The diphtheria epidemic in Walkerville, Ontario, opposite Detroit, Mich., is said to be alarming.

Peasants from the famine-stricken districts of Russia are to be given employment on public roads.

Colonel John Hathaway, of Milwaukee, Governor of the National Soldiers' Home died Thursday.

The wheat exports from San Francisco last week were four hundred and forty-five thousand centals.

Seven persons died at Butte, Mont., Tuesday as the result of breathing the fumes from roasting ores.

There is a plan, it is said, to connect Minneapolis and St. Paul with Lake Superior by means of a canal.

Packing in Chicago since Nov. 1 show an increase of 186,000 hogs as compared with the same time last year.

Ten thousand young seals are said to have starved to death in Bering Sea on account of the killing of their dams.

Petroleum equal to the product of Pennsylvania wells is said to have been struck near Sheerkstown, Ontario.

Extensive damage and loss of life is reported from Southern California as the result of a severe gale of wind.

Wednesday at New York the American District and Mutual District Telegraph Companies were consolidated.

It is declared at the Brazilian Legation in Paris that the reports of uprising in Brazil are without foundation.

There is a belief current in New York City that Jay Gould's sons have been caught short in the stock market.

Judge S. D. McEnery was nominated for Governor of Louisiana by the regular Democratic convention at Baton Rouge.

During the past sixteen weeks Chicago received flour and grain equal to 92,466,000 bushels, and shipped 80,934,000 bushels.

The Hon. Josiah Minot, once the law partner of President Franklin Pierce, died at Concord, N. H., Monday, aged 73 years.

Governor Elect McKinley, of Ohio, who has been ill, is reported to be improving. Senator M. S. Quay has entirely recovered.

John G. Whittier celebrated his birthday Thursday at the home of his cousin in Newburyport, Mass. The poet is 84 years old.

Wednesday the telegraphers' strike on the Atlantic and Pacific Road was formally declared off, and trains began to move again.

New York tobacco importers, it is claimed, have swindled the government out of over $2,000,000 in duties within the last few months.

Fire destroyed the old stone and wood warehouse at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, Monday. The building was a historical landmark.

John L. Ferguson, a bookkeeper in the National Bank of Kansas City, was arrested for embezzling $20,000. He confessed his guilt.

George Jacob Schweinfurth, of Rockford, Ill., mortgaged his "Heaven" and returned $2,100 to James Ogilvie, formerly one of his converts.

Funeral services of Miss Julia A. Ames, the White Ribbon worker and co-editor of the Union Signal, were held at Streator, Ill., Wednesday.

In the Federation of Labor convention President Gompers expressed opinion that boycotts were ofttimes levied unjustly by local trades unions.

Ministers at Mexico, Mo., have declared against the ball which is to be given on Christmas night for the benefit of the ex-confederates' home.

The Iowa Columbian Commission announce that they intend to ask the Legislature for an aggregate of $339,000 for the World's Fair display.

Monday the permit giving the Progressive Benefit Order of Boston the privilege of doing business in Indiana was revoked by the State Auditor.

The Union Mercantile Company of Pennsylvania is reported to be insolvent, causing, as stated, "considerable excitement among State capitalists."

Canada's annual Christmas poultry train left Ottawa for Boston Friday. The value of the cargo at the frontier was $26,000 and the duties were $8,750.

Local insurance agents at Minneapolis, have been ordered to advance rates on risks from 20 to 40 per cent on wholesale mercantile establishments.

Miss Mitchell, daughter of Senator Mitchell of Oregon, says that her marriage to the Duke de la Rochefouclad will probable take place in February.

Ex-Secretary of State Loper, of Michigan, who was forced to resign by Governor Winans, says he will soon make a statement to the people in defense of his acts.

The Hadfield Company, owners of a stone quarry and railway interests in Waukesha County, Wis., assigned Tuesday. Assets and liabilities are about $500,000 each.

The brothers and sisters of the late William J. Florence intend to contest the will of the actor, which left all his property to Mrs. Florence. They say there is a later will.

A passenger train on the Southern Kansas Railroad was wrecked by defective ties near Cherryvale, Kan., Thursday morning. Twenty-six persons were injured, three fatally.

Murphy J. Foster was nominated for Governor of Louisiana, at Baton Rouge, by the minority faction of the Democratic party, knows as the "Adams Anti-lottery Combine."

The South Dakota Lady World's Fair Commissioners instructed their Secretary to request Mrs. Benjamin Harrison to invite Queen Victoria to attend the Exposition.

Acting Deputy Grand Chief Rumsy, of the Order of Railway Telegraph Operators, Monday ordered all members of the order employed on the Southern Pacific to strike Tuesday.

The search for the missing Mexican vessel Tahaiti has been abandoned. She had on board a crew of sixteen men. Messrs. Lovitt and Serynser of New York and 200 laborers.

It is rumored in New York that Henry Villard will soon be requested to sever his connections with the Edison General Electric Company and the Northern Pacific Railway.

A New York paper states that the case of the Adams Express Company against ex-President Hoey will be compromised by the return of about $500,000 to the company by Mr. Hoey.

Mrs. S. S. Cox, widow of the late Congressman, has been presented with a silver tea service by the life-saving corps in recognition of the work done to the corps by her husband.

New York railroad officials blame the Western roads for the shortage in cars. They say that all Eastern freights are handled there without difficulty, and that there is no blockade.

Three beet sugar factories in California, which have shut down for the season, produced 8,070,136 pounds of sugur during the season. The total amount of bounty to be paid is $161,400.

Commissioner Lane, of the Alabama Department of Agriculture, has issued a call for a meeting of planters to consider the advisability of decreasing the acreage cotton in the South.

It is reported that a sailing vessel containing the members of Lowande's circus was caught in a cyclone between the West Indies and South America, and that all on board were lost.

Middletown, a Maryland village, held a big celebration in honor of the 100th birthday of Miss Elizabeth Appleman, one of its citizens. There was a procession headed by a brass band.

At Wednesday's session of the Western Commercial Congress, at Aspen, Col., a resolution favoring free and unlimited coinage of silver was adopted by unanimous vote of the 150 delegates.

A row among rival societies at Monmouth (Ill.) college resulted in the arrest of W. T. Meloy of Chicago, John R. Maxwell of Keokuk, and Merwyn Boon of Kansas City on the charge of riot.

Five men held up the mail wagon from the Chicago Stock Yards on Desplaines street Tuesday evening, and secured $3,000 in cash and $200,000 of non-negotiable paper from the Stock Yards banks.

Miss Julia A. Ames, associate editor of the Union Signal of Chicago, the official organ of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, died at the Homeopathic Hospital in Boston of typhoid pneumonia.

At Dixon, Ill., Tuesday the Grand Detour Plow Company and the Henderson Shoe Company informed their employes that under no circumstances would Knights of Labor be employed in either establishment.

Monday the Very Rev. Father James Schwebach was appointed to the Bishepric of LaCrosse, Wis., and the Rev. Sebastian Messmer, D. D., of South Orange, N. J., was appointed Bishop of Green Bay, Wis.

Kansas grain dealers assert that State Grain Inspector Haskell, acting with a certain firm, is discriminating against farmers, and that grain graded as No. 3 on the Kansas side is sent to Missouri and graded No. 2.

Sectionmen on the Rio Grande Western tried to thaw out giant powder near Grand Junction, Col. It thawed. Daniel O'Neill, the foreman, is dead, four of the men fatally injured, and the remaining fifteen slightly.

It is rumored at Omaha, Neb., that the Chicago and Northwestern has issued orders to discharge all their employes who are members of the Order of Railway Telegraphers and refuse to withdraw from that body.

Inhabitants of villages adjacent to the volcano of Colima, in Mexico, have been advised to abandon their homes lest they should share the fate of Pompeii. The outflow of lava, ashes and smoke is increasing.

Henry Marshall Kingman, recently vice president and oashier of the First National Bank of Chicago, committed suicide by hanging at Grand Rapids, Michigan, Wednesday. He was suffering with nervous prostration.

Andrew Carnegie hss been requested to establish an iron industry at Hamilton, Ontario. He declined the invitation with the remark that Canada should first become a part of the Union before American capital be invested there.

The Hunza Niger tribesmen, though driven out of Nilt, their fortified stronghold, by Indian troops, and compelled to retreat to the mountains, have not been entirely subdued. They are conducting a sort of guerilla warfare.

The association of southern ladies organized to restore the "Hermitage," President Jackson's old home, will give a grand reception in the Ponce de Leon hotel at St. Augustine, Fla., Feb. 3. Mrs. Harrison is one of the patronesses.

The exports of breadstuffs for the eleven months ended Nov. 30, 1891, amounted to $194,077,607 against $126,719,160 for 1890, and exports of beef, hog, and dairy products for the some months were $108,829,919, as compared with $118,196,027 for 1890.

It has been discovered that Chinese girls by the dozens are brought to Victoria, B. C., and sold to brothel-keepers. A number of girls brought over in Oct. sold for $1,000 apiece, but the market has been stagnant of late, prices ranging from $770 to $885.

Specials from manufacturing points in northwestern Ohio say that nine-tenths of the factories in that region which have been hitherto using gas for fuel have been obliged to go back to coal owing to the gradual weakening of the gas pressure.

A committee of French officers is said to have decided to recommend the adoption of a breast-plate for the infantry made of nine parts of copper and one of aluminum, equal to a steel plate of three times the thickness. It will only be worn in time of action.

CAPITAL BREVITIES

Resume of Important Events at the National Capital.

What Is Being Done by the Executive and Other Departments.

The case of Collector Warmcastle of Pittsburg, charged with official misconduct, has been submitted to the president. The impression is a change in the office will be made.

Representative Mills of Texas has been confined to his rooms at Willard's hotel for almost a week with a very heavy cold and prostration following the speakership canvass.

Senator Manderson Tuesday introduced a bill authorizing the secretary of war to detail army officers for special duty in connection with the World's Fair without loss of rank.

Charges have been formulated against Maj. Lewis C. Overman of the Engineer Corps, based on the evidence of the persons who accused him of official misconduct while on duty in Cleveland.

An order has been issued by the secretary of the navy that hereafter all information concerning the movements of naval vessels shall be given to the press by Assistant Soley and no other officer.

The recent heavy disbursements for pensions have reduced the treasury cash balance to $33,128,815, of which amount $13,364,491 is on deposit with national banks and $13,984,292 is in subsidiary coin.

President Harrison Thursday sent to the senate the name of Stephen B. Elkins of West Virginia to be secretary of war, vice Proctor, resigned. The nomination was referred to the committee on military affairs.

Maryland was given leave by the Supreme court to file a bill against West Virginia to decide whether Maryland's jurisdiction extends to the south branch of the Potomac, several miles south of the present generally accepted boundary line.

Mr. Turpie (Ind.) addressed the senate Thursday in support of the joint resolution (introduced by him on Dec. 10) proposing an amendment to the constitution providing for the election of United States senators by a direct vote of the people of the several states.

CHINESE MUST KEEP OUT.

Acting on the information that 1,200 Chinese laborers who had been discharged by the Tehuantepec railroad company were on their way to the United States Acting Secretary Spaulding instructed the customs officials along the Mexican frontier to use extra vigilance to prevent any of them from crossing the border line.

ROAD ACROSS SOUTH AMERICA.

The bureau of the American republics is informed that but forty-nine miles remain to be constructed of the railway that is to connect Buenos Ayres with Valparaiso. At a recent meeting of the directors in London it was announced that 700 miles were now open to traffic. Had it not been for the Baring Bros. failure it is believed that the road would have been finished by this time.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Aquilla J. Doughtery, consul of the United States at Callao, Peru, desires to learn the names and addresses of the heirs of John Spaulding, an American citizen who died at Ica, Peru, in 1883. Spaulding's place of residence in the United States is not known. This information is desired with a view to the settlement of the deceased's estate in Peru. Inquiries should be addressed directly to the consul.

TWO NEW STATES.

There are to be two more stars added to the American flag within a short time. It has been agreed that Arizona and Oklahoma are to depart from territorial and have state governments. This is the result of a verbal understanding reached between the leading republican and democratic members of the two houses who have been interesting themselves directly in statehood matters since the present congress convened.

ITALY MUST TAKE THE INITIATIVE.

Assistant Secretary of State Wharton says that he is not advised as to the intention of the Italian government to resume active diplomatic relations with the United States by appointing a minister to succeed Baron Fava, recalled. It is learned that when Italy takes the initiative in the matter the leave of absence granted Gen. Porter, United States minister to Italy, will expire, and he will resume his post at Rome, from which he has been absent since the recall of Baron Fava.

PROPOSED CHANGES IN THE LAND LAWS.

Senator Vilas of Wisconsin introduced a bill amendatory of the act of the last congress repealing the timber-culture laws. The first amendment strikes out the requirement in section 1 of the act that a person must be an actual, bona fide resident of the state or territory in which the land he seeks patent for is located to be allowed to make final proof. The amendment strikes out the provision that no person shall be entitled to make the entry of desert land except he be a resident of the state or territory in which the land sought to be entered is located.

SENATOR SHERMAN'S FLAG BILL.

Senator Sherman's flag bill authorizes the quartermaster-general of the army to sell for cash to Grand Army of the Republic posts and citizens of the United States flags of the patterns prescribed by the army regulations, the price to be fixed at the same they cost the government, the object being to promote and encourage the display of the flag. The bill further provides that any person found guilty of printing, painting or affixing to any flag anything tending to bring the government into contempt shall be guilty of misdemeanor and subject to a fine and imprisonment.

TO TAX DEALERS IN OPTIONS.

Senator Washburn has introduced in the senate a bill defining "futures" and "options" and imposing special taxes on dealers therein. The articles included in the bill in the two terms are wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, cotton and all other farm products; also pork, lard and all other hog products. The bill provides that dealers in futures and options therein shall pay annually a tax of $1,000 and the further sum of 5 cents a pound on cotton and hog products and 20 cents a bushel on any of the other articles mentioned.

COMMERCIAL RECIPROCITY TREATY.

The secretary of state announces the conclusion of a commercial reciprocity agreement between the United States and all the British West India islands and British Guiana, and on Jan. 1 next the president will issue a proclamation announcing the details of the convention. The agreement includes special arrangements with Jamaica, Barbadoes and Trinidad and the Leeward islands. The following is a brief statement of the value of imports and exports of the countries during the last year: Imports from British West Indies, $14,860,000; imports from British Guiana, $4,320,000. Total, $19,180,000. Exports to British West Indies, $8,100,000; exports to British Guiana, $2,100,000. Total, $10,200,000.

MILLS MAY NOT BE SENATOR.

Mr. Mills' friends in Washington do not have much confidence in the Texas legislature choosing him senator. Had he been elected speaker the prestige of that honor might have made him senator, because the Texans are like other people in worshiping success. But while they have plenty of sympathy for him in defeat, the sentiment does not seem overwhelming enough to make him senator when other ambitious men want the place. Gov. Hogg does not want Mills to become senator. He intended to call an extra session of the legislature in January. Now it is said he will wait a couple of months in order that any disposition to choose Mills out of sympathy may die out.

FOR INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

In the senate Thursday Mr. Mitchell offered the following resolution, which was referred to the committee on foreign relations:

Resolved, That the committee on foreign relations be and is hereby instructed to inquire into the advisability of appropriate action looking to the invitation of the governments of the world to a conference to be held in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago for the purpose of discussing and recommending measures by which the principles of arbitration may be incorporated in treaties, conflicting international laws harmonized, and an international court established, having jurisdiction in cases which governments shall fail to settle by negotiation, and to report by bill or otherwise.

ESTIMATES FOR NEXT YEAR'S APPROPRIATIONS

A comparative statement of the estimates of apporopriations needed for the next fiscal year with the estimates and appropriations for the current fiscal year has been prepared. A comparison shows these figures: Agricultural, $[illegible],360,99[illegible], an increase of $[illegible]48,992; army, $ 5,949,207, increase $133,502; diplomatic and consular, $[illegible],188,[illegible]63, increase $195,861; District of Columbia, $[illegible],602,125, increase $151,910; fortifications, $9,3[illegible]6,607, increase $1,902,284; Indians, $8,003,907, increase $1,976,199; legislative, executive and judicial, $22,7[illegible]4,038, increase $64,755; military academy, $506,320, decrease $46,416; navy, $27,194,[illegible]39, decrease $6,136,940; pensions, $1[illegible]7,061,550, increase $11,[illegible]01,485; postoffice, $80,3[illegible]3,400, increase $2,777,503; sundry civil, $35,183,955, decrease $3,627,126.

MORRISON WILL BE REAPPOINTED.

It is stated that the nominations for the inter-state commerce commission will go to the senate as soon as the committees are organized, so that Commissioner Culberson and his republican coadjutor—possibly Lambertson of Nebraska—may be confirmed before the holiday recess. Col. Morrison's name will not be sent in now because his term is not up till January. No one doubts that he will be renominated. Some of the Illinois followers of Springer are resentful of Morrison's part in the speakership fight and some letters have been written from Chicago against Morrison. But there has been no formal movement against him, and the president is not likely to take notice of a factional party fight. Morrison will be reappointed on his merits as a commissioner.

CORN FOR STARVING RUSSIANS.

Secretary Rusk and Senator Paddock have agreed upon a striking plan for the introduction of American corn as a food article in Europe. They have had a conference and concluded to ask the farmers of Nebraska and Kansas to contribute a trainload of corn to be shipped to the suffering inhabitants of Russia. They believe this would call the attention of the civilized world to our corn and its uses and result in a very material increase of its consumption. The trouble has been and is now that the Europeans cannot conceive how one could eat corn, which they regard as an animal diet only. Besides the enormous advertisement it would give our domestic corn, and also the states supplying it, there would be an act of charity in it which would be a gratification to all who contributed.

CIRCUIT JUDGES SELECTED.

President Harrison has sent to the senate the names of the men selected by him to occupy the positions of United States circuit judges as provided by section 1, chapter 517, United States statutes. The nominations are as follows:

William L. Putnam of Maine for the first judicial circuit.

Nathaniel Shipman of Connecticut for the second judicial circuit.

George M. Dallas of Pennsylvania for the third judicial circuit.

Nathan Goff of West Virginia for the fourth judicial circuit.

William H. Taft of Ohio for the sixth judicial circuit.

William A. Woods of Indiana for the seventh judicial circuit.

Warren Truitt of Oregon United States district judge for the district of Alaska.

SAILING OF THE BALTIMORE.

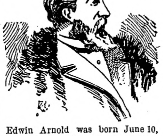
The secretary of the navy has received a cable message from Captain Schley, commanding the United States steamer Baltimore, saying that as there appeared to be no further necessity for the presence of that vessel at Valparaiso she sailed for San Francisco for the purpose of being docked and scraped. The Yorktown is now the only American war ship at Valparaiso, but she will be joined there in about ten days by the cruiser Boston, which sailed from Montevideo a few days ago.

It was originally intended that the Baltimore should leave Chili on the arrival of the Yorktown, but this plan was changed in order to allow members of her crew to testify before the Chilian committee investigating the savage attack on American sailors. When her presence was no longer needed for that purpose she started home

It took forty men three months to make the drawings of the Eiffel tower.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD.

THE ENGLISH POET—AUTHOR OF "THE LIGHT OF ASIA."



Edwin Arnold was born June 10, 1832, was educated at King's College, London, and University College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1854. He became Principal of the Government Sanskrit College at Poonah, India, and Fellow of the University of Bombay, remaining througn the Sepoy mutiny of 1857 and resigning his post in 1861. He subsequently became conductor of the London Daily Telegraph, for which journal he is said to have written some 8,000 editorials. He is the author of a number of works. "The Light of Asia," by which he is best known, is a poem on the life and doctrines of Gautama Buddha, the supposed founder of the Buddhistic religion. This work, considered simply as a poem, possesses many claims upon our admiration, but it does not give a just idea of the spirit of that religion. The author did not feel called upon to confine himself within the statements of the Buddhistic authorities, and this total freedom from restraint has unquestionably been favorable to the production of a pleasing and beautiful poem. Sir Edwin Arnold was knighted by Queen Victoria, and will pay his second visit to the United States within the next few weeks for a lecturing tour. He has been twice a widower. His second wife was an American, a niece of Dr. Channing, of Boston. Sir Edwin Arnold is of medium height, of rather swarthy complexion and is master of ten dead and living languages.

S. B. ELKINS NAMED.

Nominated by the President Secretary of War.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The President has sent to the Senate the nomination of Stephen B. Elkins, of West Virginia, to be Secretary of War.

Stephen B. Elkins was born in Perry County, Ohio, Sept. 26, 1841. He removed to Missouri when very young; was graduated at Missouri University in 1860 and studied law. He served in 1862-3 as a captain in the Seventy-seventh Missouri Regiment, and in the latter year went to Mexico, where he was admitted to the bar in 1864. He also engaged in mining and stock-raising there and accumulated a fortune. He was a member of the Territorial Legislature in 1865-6, Attorney General of the Territory in 1868-9 and United States Attorney in 1870-2. He was then elected a Delegate to Congress and served two terms, from 1873 to 1877.

Mr. Elkins was a member of the National Republican Committee from 1872 to 1884. He took an active part in the Chicago convention of 1884 that nominated James G. Blaine for the Presidency and earnestly supported him in the canvass. Since 1884 Mr. Elkins has devoted all his energies to the development of his extensive coal, railroad, and timber interests in West Virginia, in which he has taken a deep interest. He spends a good portion of his time there, but makes frequent business trips to New York, where he also has business interests. Mr. Elkins is the president of the West Virginia Railway. He is a son-in law of ex-Senator Henry G. Davis, who represented West Virginia in the Senate for several years.

THEY REACH TRE PEOPLE.

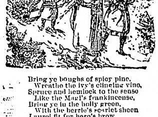
Richard Mansfield's Opinion Regarding Newspapers as Advertising Mediums

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Richard Mansfield has issued instructions to his manager to discontinue the use of lithographs and printing of all kinds for use in windows and on walls and to confine all advertising exclusively to the newspapers. He is firmly convinced that this is the only proper way to reach all classes of theater-goers. "The influence and tremendous power of the press as an advertising medium is making itself felt more and more every day, both in business and theatrical circles. A man who does not read the newspapers never attends the theater," says Mr. Mansfield. "The weekly expenditure for printing at a low average is $150, which makes for a season of forty weeks, $6,000. In event of 100 companies adopting my system, which is a small fraction of the number of companies on the road, it would give to the newspapers throughout the country a clear revenue of $600,000, which I am satisfied, would bring greater and more satisfactory results, both to the theatergoer and to the attractions."

The half-breed Indians on the Sioux reservation claim that if the decision declaring them not Indians is upheld, then the necessary number of names was not secured and the reservation was illegally opened.

Such an excellent judge of a trotter as John A. Goldsmith says of Arion: "I never saw such a colt before. He glides over the ground like a bird flying, and does his work with less effort than any horse I ever saw move. He has not the least bit of superfluous action, and keeps his feet closer to the ground than any other fast trotter. His knee action is very slight, and he has a way of turning from the ankle down that is entirely new and prevents his interfering. He is surely a phenomenon, and, if he keeps on improving, as he naturally should, there is no reason why in his developed state he should not closely approach the two-minute mark."

CHRISTMAS GREETING.



Bring ye boughs of spicy pine,
Wreathe the ivy's clinging vine,
Spruce and hemlock to the sense
Like the Magi's frankincense,
Bring ye in the holly green,
With the berrie's scarlet sheen
Laurel fit for hero's brow,
Fragrant box bring hither now;
All that winter frost doth spare
In our joyous feast may share,
Bough and berry, leaf and vine
We will offer at His shrine
Who for us in time of old
Left His glories manifold,—
Left His kingdom, left His crown,
And in pitying love came down.
Here a little child to be
Cradled in humility.
—Abbie F. Judd.

A JOYOUS CHRISTMAS.

"Only two days until Christmas! How different this will be from the one I looked forward to this year!" thought Mr. Romain, as he restlessly paced the wide porch of his handsome home.

"How pleasant the air is—as warm and balmy as spring! Exquisite, if one had some one to enjoy it with; but I'm lonesome. Poor Tom! How I hoped to see you again, to tell you that the fault was mine in that quarrel; and you are dead—buried only last week, they tell me—and I am back in Old Virginia, with never a child or a chick to bid me welcome."

"Dood-mornin', Mister Man; will you please tum to ye nauction?"

As these words fell on his ear, Mr. Romain turned and saw two little children standing on the steps, a chicken held tightly under the arm of one of them.

They were pretty children, too—a boy and a girl, exactly the same size. Blonde curls crowned each shining head; brown eyes, with long, curling lashes, looked frankly out from under straight, clear-cut eyebrows, and two little pug noses turned up merrily from the little rosy mouths that were always smiling beneath. No, not always; for there was a frightened little quiver about them now, as their owner looked up timidly at the stern, handsome man who was so earnestly regarding them.

"Come to your what?" repeated Mr. Romain.

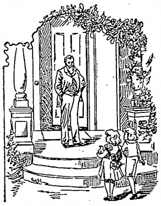
"To our nauction," the boy explained. "Papa's gone to heaven, and we's goin' to have a nauction; it's to det money, you see; we's goin' to sell all our sings. Mamma says ye more ye folkes come ye more we'll det money; and if dere's enough, we's not going to sell my wockin-horse. I'se dot Pickle, dis here chickie, safe—me and Rosy take turns holdin' her—but we tan't hole ye horse. I dess we'll go now."

"Did your mamma send you?" asked Mr. Romain.

"Oh, no! she's cryin', an' we dus fought we'd help ask folks. Please tum, Mr. Man."

And smiling in a friendly, but half-frightened fashion, the children trotted down the walk. As their little figures vanished, Uncle Peter came around the house.

"Who are those children, uncle?" questioned Mr. Romain, gazing after them.



"DOOD MORNIN' MISTER MAN."

"Dey's po' Massa Blake's chillun, sah. Yo' 'members I tole you how Massa Tom done die las' week; well, dey's his twins. Dey do say it's scan'lous how Miss' Blake's bein' treated. Massa Tom done sign a note fur a genneman, an' he can't pay an' dey is ter be an auction dere to morrow, an' Massa Tom not dead a week yet scasely. Po' Miss' Blake!"

That night Mr. Romain sat up late in his library, reading over letters and papers he had not seen in ten years,—not since the day he had that quarrel with Tom Blake, for it was that same morning he had received a cablegram calling him to Europe to take possession of a large estate left him, and yesterday he had reached home for the first time since his departure.

"I was just beginning my battle with the world then," he mused; "now I feel like a warrior, battle-scarred and lonely. How enthusiastic Tom and I were then! how close our friendship was!"

And taking up an old letter, a low laugh burst from his lips as he read its witty allusion to an almost forgotten college scrape.

A very different look came into his face as he glanced down the page of the next letter which met his eye, and read:

"My Dear Fellow:—After all, I find I can lend you that money. I have seen old Brown, and he is willing to give it if I mortgage the Meadow Farm. I don't like mortgages, but we must save your home. Brown imagines that there is coal under that land. I think not. I'll tell you a secret, though. I know there is under the field adjoining.

"In ten years I hope to have money to open my mining land; meantime I'll use my Meadow Farm to save your home, and you can repay me before the mortgage falls due. I had intended to settle both farms on Nellie as soon as we were married; so if anything happens to me, my dear boy, you may consider Nellie and her interests your legacy from

"Yours as ever,
"TOM."

"To think I threw away a friendship like that!" almost groaned Mr. Romain, as he laid down the paper. Then a sudden thought struck him, and he hastily rang the bell.

"Uncle Peter," he said, "who owns what used to be Mr. Tom Blake's Meadow Farm?"

"Old Mr. Brown, sah; he got powerful rich on dat farm. Yo' see, sah, hit's got a coal-mine in it. Oh, yes, sah, he's rich."

"And Tom mortgaged that land to save my old home," thought Mr. Romain, sorrowfully. "I wonder if it could be that the check I sent from England did not get to him in time? In any case he's dead, and Nellie and the children penniless, and"—glancing at the letter again—"a legacy to me!"

* * * * * * *

"An auction almost on Christmas Eve! Why, it seems fairly barbarous!" thought Mr. Romain, indignantly, as he entered what had been the pleasant home of his friend Tom, and was so soon to be left desolate under the hands of the auctioneer.

It was early in the day, but already the house was filled with neighbors who had come from miles around to attend the sale; and as Mr. Romain moved among them his ears were constantly greeted with remarks on the foolishness of "signin' for people."

Sick at heart he entered the little kitchen back of the house, which was as yet unoccupied, save by Mrs. Blake's faithful colored cook, Aunt Nancy. She was sitting on a split-bottom chair, rocking herself to and fro, and occasionally wiping her eyes with her blue-check apron.

"Where is your mistress, auntie?" Mr. Romain asked.

There was a kindly ring in his voice that unlocked the old woman's burdened heart, and she sobbed aloud as she answered:

"Oh, massa, she done took de chilluns, an' gon' to her cousin's, Miss Rachel. It jest broke my po' ole heart to see 'em go! But Miss' Blake say she couldn't stand it here, an' dey have to go soon sure. Po' things! only de good Lord know what's to come of dem, she say.

"Oh, massa, hit awful hard on missis, dis is. She went all over de house dis mornin' tryin' to say good-bye to it. De little ones a clingin' to her kep' a pickin' up things. 'Mamma, dey won't take my wockin'-horse, will dey?' "Mammy, will de nauction man det my little chair?' dey ask. Missis tried to hol' back de tears an' speak chirk to dem chilluns, but when she come to her own room she say: 'You stay out here, darlings; mammy wants to go in here alone.' I took de chilluns, but pres'ntly I peek in de room, 'nd dere my po' missis, a kneelin' 'fore massa's big arm-chair, wid her head a lyin' on de big fambly Bible dat she'd put on de chair; she had her arms around dat, and she was cryin' softly.

"'Oh, my husband!' she whispered over and over, and den she say:

"'A fader to de faderless, a husband to de widow.' 'Dear Lord, let dis cup pass from me.'

"I shut de door den. By 'm by she come out, all white and tremblin', but she tried to smile on de chilluns as she led dem down de walk.

"Dose po' little things! Rosy was huggin' her rag doll an' tryin' to hide it under her rag aprun, an' Romain was totin' Pickie, de chicken, clost in he arms. 'De nauction man can't take mamma's chilluns, and so he can't take ours,' dey'd keep sayin'."

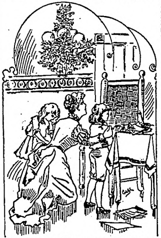
"Romain?" repeated her visitor.

"Yes, sah, Romain: dat's for a fren' of Massa Tom's. Massa not see him for years, but he talk a heap o' Mr. Romain."

"Thank God! Tom forgave me," whispered Mr. Romain, as he left the kitchen in response to the business-like tone of the auctioneer that now rang out clear and cold as he began offering the parlor furniture.

Great was the indignation of one spinster when the first bid of a tall, handsome stranger, carried the price far beyond the sum she had mentally decided on, and he secured it without opposition.

Her feelings were soon shared by most of those present, for a similar scene took place over almost every article offered for sale, from Mrs. Blake's piano to Romain's rocking-horse. The stranger outbid every one, and was soon sole possessor.



"THANK GOD, WE'VE A HOME ONCE MORE."

He even became the owner of the farm and stock, the only active bidder against him being the representative of Mr. Brown for the field adjoining his coal-mine.

Mr. Brown had not expected to meet with any opposition, and so had set the limit his representative was to pay at a very moderate figure. This Mr. Romain instantly outbid, and soon secured the whole.

As soon as the auctioneer announced the close of the sale, Mr. Romain asked the astonished and disappointed crowd to please vacate the premises as soon as possible, as he had bought everything for a lady who would take possession of her property that night.

The people filed slowly out and Mr. Romain was at last left alone with a lawyer he had brought, the auctioneer and the holder of Mr. Blake's unfortunate obligation. All the claims against the property were very soon met, and then, after seeing the gentlemen depart, Mr. Romain hastened to the little kitchen.

"Go for your mistress, auntie," he said, "and ask her to please bring the children and come back at once. There is a paper she must read."

When Aunt Nancy delivered this message, a few minutes later, to Mrs. Blake, she was greatly surprised; but, with the patience born of great suffering, she at once called the children accompany her, and went home, wondering, as she walked along, how she was to endure the agony of seeing her home despoiled of its treasures.

She had dreaded the sight of wagons and people moving her goods, and, as she entered the gate, was astonished to see no one. Only Rollo, the old dog, lay basking in the last rays of the setting sun, and bounded up to meet them. The children ran joyfully up the walk, and at the sight of the rooms, when they entered, cried gleefully. "Why, mamma, maybe dere wasn't no nauction!"

Mrs. Blake gave herself no time to think, but hastened from one room to another, seeking the lawyers, until she came to her own room.

How pretty and homelike it still looked! There was her husband's big arm chair, still drawn up to the table, just as she had left it; the family Bible still lay on its seat, but on it lay something she had not left there, and as she picked it up she read her own name on the big envelope. With fingers trembling so she could hardly use them, she tore it open and read:

"My Dear Mrs. Blake—When you read the enclosed letter, written twelve years ago, by my friend and your husband, I think you will not deny it is my right to give you the enclosed deeds, etc., securing to you your home. He gave me mine.

"I find Mr. Brown hurried the sale to secure the land adjacent to his coal-mine. It is very valuable, and in a few years will make you rich.

"And now, my dear friend, to-morrow cannot be to you a Merry Christmas, but with brave cheerfulness I hope you will make it to your children not an unhappy one. I am "Very sincerely your friend, as I was your husband's friend,

"JOHN ROMAIN."

"A father to the fatherless, a husband to the widow." Once again the words fell from the lips of the weeping woman, who for the second time that day knelt by the old arm-chair.

Then, clasping her children in her arms, she cried:

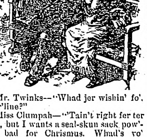
"Thank God with me, my darlings; we have a home one more!"

"And is de nauction clear gone away, mamma?" Romain asked, anxiously.

"All gone, my treasure; every bit gone, thank God!"

"Then," said little Romain, carefully pulling out Susanna Louise from under his apron, "set down, Pickie, and tum on, folkses, an' less have Chrismus!"—Anna Pierpont Siviter.

Just Before the Engagement.



Mr. Twinks—"Whad jer wishin' fo', Car'line?"

Miss Clumpah—"'Tain't right fer ter tell, but I wants a seal-skun sack pow'ful bad for Chrismus. Whad's yo' wishin' fer?"

Mr. Twinks—I'se jes' wishin' d' bone 'll brek on yo' side ob d' handles!"

The Art of Giving Wisely.

The secret of success in gift-giving is not in the expending of large sums, but in loving thought upon each gift provided. Everything is usually successful in proportion to the amount of thought that has been put into it, whether it be a banquet, a costume, a book, or the making of a simple gift. If you are cramped for money, do not think you need to spend much for Christmas gifts. The thought shown in a loving Christmas letter, a simple verse, or a pen-and-ink sketch, may give as genuine pleasure as a present of pearls. Reflect well upon the peculiarities and needs of the friend whom you wish to please. Then choose your gift carefully. Finally, after it is chosen and delivered, do not refer to it again in the way of self-congratulation upon your cleverness.

It is a good plan when a gift is bestowed to let the matter, as far as you are concerned, drop out of mind.—Harper's Bazar.

Ploughing With Dynamite.

Sub-soil ploughing with dynamite is one of the new methods in the south, and it is said to be equal to the process of trenching used by market gardeners to loosen the earth to a depth of two or three feet and allow the absorption of a good deal of water for sustaining vegetation during a drought. The inventor drills holes two or three feet deep and five feet apart, making 1,600 to the acre. In each he puts an explosive, and, after tamping, discharges it, the whole number being connected with a wire leading to a battery. In a recent experiment the explosive used was one-fourth of a small-sized dynamite cartridge, with about an ounce of Judson powder. The surface of the ground appeared to be lifted two or three feet, a few small clods being thrown up to the height of a house. It was broken to the depth of 30 inches at the points of the explosion and sidewise for a part of the distance between the holes.

How He Amuses Himself.

There is an old Frenchman living on Fifty-ninth street, New York, who goes to Brooklyn about once a week, hires six messenger boys, and takes them to Prospect park to fly kites, play marbles and spin tops. He has a collection of over 100 kites, varying in superficial area from the size of a dinner plate to that of a barn door. The old gentleman directs the boys in their play, but does it in a grave, joyless way, as if it was work.—Roseleaf.

Boulanger left a letter saying he "wished to die in war." Then why did he leave his wife?—Columbus Post.

READING BY LAMP-LIGHT.

Pertinent Points on this Pernicious Practice.

On the "Care of the Eyes" was the title of an article I was much interested in recently, says Robert J. Burdette in the N. Y. Herald. My memory is neither so accurate nor so imaginative as it was a score of years ago, but the article in question runs, as near as I can guess by memory, something like this:

"Have a reading-lamp for night use." There is a great deal of wisdom in this. In a brightly lighted room at noon, or as late as 3 o'clock p. m., if the room be on the sunny side of the house, a person with strong eyes may be able to read coarse print without injury. But after 9 o'clock at night, and in a very dark room, most people will find a lamp indispensable to comfortable reading, especially in fine print or poor paper. The learned physician who writes the article does not say that the lamp should be lighted, but, speaking as a layman, I should certainly advise lighting the illuminator. I may be wrong in this, but nevertheless such has been my own custom, and I can now read a circus-poster in two colors without the aid of glasses—spectacles, that is.

"Hold the book at your focus." This is a rule that any person able to read should commit to memory. Very few people realize the importance of this aid to preserving the eyesight. Until I read this valuable rule I used to prop my book up on the other side of the room, where I could not distinguish the print from the margin, and try to read. I did not suppose it made any difference about the focus. And many people, I have no doubt, who supposed they were blind because they could not see to read a book at a distance of 150 yards, will, upon learning this rule and putting it into practice, soon find that they can read quite well enough to drive everybody out of the room. The medical profession has been very remiss in its duty that it did not publish this rule long ago.

"Reading in bed is strongly advised against; it is injurious." I should say so. I have always found it so. If you get comfortably fixed you read about one page and then find the blooming book isn't cut, and the paper-cutter is down-stairs, and your pocket-knife is in the pocket of your trousers, hanging away over near the coldest window. The colder the night the more the book is not cut. You get settled down again, and the lamp smokes. You fix it and drop back again. The pillows you piled up have fallen down and your head comes crashing back against the headboard of the bed. It is late at night and the bang brings somebody out into the hall with a shriek of "What's the matter?" After awhile order is restored and you get quiet, then interested, finally absorbed, and then somebody comes out into the hall crying "What's the matter?" again. You say, "Nothing; it's all right."

"But your lamp is burning."

"Yes," you say, "I am reading."

A wail of dismay and rebuke follows this confession. "What! in bed?"

It is a matter of a quarter of an hour before the book tastes right again, and then once more the appealing voice comes drifting from a distant room.

"Are you going to read all night?"

You say—but it doesn't matter what you say; the public is not interested in your commonplace remarks. But whatever you do say elicits a pathetic sigh that makes your heart ache and secures you quiet for yourself and your book once more. And then, just as you get to a place where you just couldn't stop for anything in the world the beggarly lamp falters, turns yellow, grows black in the face, and goes dead out, dry as a bone. There is no fun and no good reading in bed.

It doesn't help matters much to sit up in your den, or, if you prefer, your study, and read. It annoys the rest of the family. I have tried it, and always experience great difficulty in getting to bed quietly after 1 o'clock. One or two challenges in quick, frightened tones that always thrill me with terror by their very earnestness, I am sure to encounter. Sometimes I remove my slippers and glide along the hall with the stealthy tread of a ghost that has intentions on the hat-rack. The very quiet is startling and the challenge comes:

"Who's there?"

And I have to say "It's me." I never think to say "It is I" and explain. On the other hand, I sometimes seek to avoid unpleasant notoriety by walking boldly down the hall, with the tramp of a policeman. Then the voice, or it may be two or three voices, says or say:

"What's that?"

Which is still worse, because the implication is that I am, not a human being, but a "thing."

Mottoes For Book Covers.

The careful lover of books has originated the idea, now that linen picture frames are the style of making linen covers to put upon the books lent to friends and relatives.

They are daintily etched in floral designs and have pertinent mottoes, perhaps adaptable to the borrower. If the person is noted for never returning a book or for keeping it an exasperating long time, a pleasant little motto relative to the virtue of returning books and so forth meets her eye every time she happens to see the one she has borrowed.

Fear not, nor soil not.
Read all but spoil not is a cordial invitation to the reader to enjoy the book with dainty, clean-fingered appreciation.

If any one should borrow me,
Don't bother to keep my cover clean,
For I am made of linen cloth
And can be washed again.

This gives the lender carte blanch to leave the book on the grass or munch candy while she is reading it, or to use it for a writing tablet while penning answers to various invitations brought by hurrying messenger boys.

Judge—"Your are accused of not supporting your wife." Prisoner—"But, your Honor, you don't know my wife. She is insupportable."—Boston Transcript.

FOSSIL FOOTPRINTS.

Several Marks of Reptiles's Feet Discovered in Holyoke.

Several footprints of reptiles of various dimensions have lately been discovered about three miles from Holyoke, Mass., upon the rock in G. L. Bosworth's quarry, near the shore of the Connecticut river, which have caused considerable excitement and elicited many inquiries.

These discoveries occur not infrequently, more than twelve thousand such footmarks having already been brought to light, and, in fact, it is well known throughout the scientific world that the new red sandstone of the Connecticut valley, which extends about one hundred and ten miles from north to south and average about twenty miles in width from east to west, is one of the most prolific depositories of fossil prints. Slabs of this stone having upon them the wonderful indentations can be found in almost all the museums of this country and Europe.

"A few days ago," says a naturalist, "accompanied by my friend, Prof. Woodman, who is, as the world knows, one of the most profound scholars in the natural sciences, I visited Mr. Bosworth's quarry. The soil over the rocks, which is not very thick at that locality, has been removed and left exposed an extensive area, upon which a large number of tracks are apparent. Prof. Woodman said that in all his ramblings through the world he had not seen such a large number clustered together in so circumscribed a place. Several of the tracks can be traced from one end of the quarry to the other."

There is not only a large number of them, but they are of various sizes and were made by animals of different species, though the conformation of the foot indicates that they belong to the same genus. Some of the tracks measure 18 inches in length and 10 in width; others are 10 inches long and there are others that do not measure more than 3 or 4 inches and are of proportional width. A slab taken out near the edge of the public road which forms the northern boundary of the quarry has two large, well-delineated tracks upon its surface 4 feet 6 inches apart, which indicate the stride in the steps of the animal.

All the tracks bear the same conformation of the foot—that is, all have only three toes and the steps bear the same characteristics—they are single; that is, made by bipeds. There is no doubt they are much smaller now than when first made. The mud in drying up must have contracted considerably to become as the rock is to-day—of a crystalline texture.

Experience with Cannibals.

It is more than 15 years ago—in February, 1876—that I started away from Zanzibar with a score of natives, says Rev. Edmund Bassett, English missionary to the Congo country, in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. I had a journey of over four months before I reached the chief village of the Aryumenari people. The king, who was afterward converted, treated me kindly, but the day after I arrived went away with most of his people, leaving me to the care of the women, children and a large guard.

On the fourth day I noticed that the men in the king's guard acted strangely toward me and my people. They watched us, but would not approach us. The next morning one of my men was found dead from a spear wound, and the Aryumenari replied sullenly to my accusations, neither admitting nor denying the crime. I made arrangements to bury the poor fellow that afternoon, but during a temporary absence the Aryumenari beat the guard I had stationed over the body, took the corpse and when I returned all the people of the village were gathered about a great fire, over which I learned they were roasting a human being.

I did not see it. I dared not look at such a sight, and the Aryumenari motioned me to stay away under pain of death. There was a great festival that night and during its wildest moments I tried to steal away with my people, but the camp was guarded and one of the guards said I was to die next day. That was a night of torture. In the morning the king came back and saved us. When I told him what his people had done he pretended to be very angry and made a show of punishing them, while I left as soon as I could. A converted Aryumenari afterwards told me that the king himself partook of the flesh of that poor helpless Zanzibari.

Berlin's Streets and Population.

A lover of the curious in numbers has figured out some interesting facts concerning the city of Berlin. The city has 210 miles of streets, so that a person might walk ten days in the German capital without going up or down the same street twice. If the 1,400,000 inhabitants were to turn out at a grand review and march in double file they would form a line 750 miles in length, a column long enough to reach nearly entirely across France. If the citizens should all determine to start on a journey at the same time, all the cars in Germany would accommodate but two-thirds of their number. If formed in a single file, each with his hands on the other's shoulder, the column would be nearly 2,000 miles long. If separated until only within speaking distance of each other the column would be a human telegraph line long enough to reach from Berlin to Calcutta, India.

When Woods Decay.

Tests have been made to determine the variations in the length of time that is required to produce decay in different kinds of woods when buried under the surface of the ground. The birch and aspen were both found to decay in three years, the willow and the buckeye in four years, the maple and the red beech in five years, elm and ash in seven, while the larch, juniper, and arbor vitæ were uninjured at the expiration of eight years.

The value of land in Berlin has increased 85 per cent in the last ten years.

INCIDENTS OF HOTEL LIFE.

High-Priced Slaps, a Fit of Delirium Tremens, and an Earthquake.

Some time ago a French waiter was attending upon a very roystering party of diners in a private room at a London restaurant, when an altercation arose and the waiter attempting to restore order received a couple of slaps in the face. He made no remark at the time, but when he brought in the bill there was on it this item: "Deux soufflets, £5." As the aggressor scanned this entry the waiter set his lips and said in a significant tone: "If you find those slaps too dear, sir, I will return them!"

I once spent a remarkable night in a hotel at Belgium, owing to the antics of a man with delirium tremens, says a writer in the London Graphic. The Servians have an abominable liquor distilled from fermented cabbage. The mere smell is enough to turn an English stomach, but the natives swill the stuff until sometimes it addles their heads. The killer of my night's rest was a member of the Servian skuptschina or parliament, who had come to Belgrade on some place-hunting expedition, and had found the excitement, combined with the cabbage liquor, too much for him. Awaking in the middle of the night with a fit of the horrors he began flinging boots, brushes, crockery and money at the door which separated our two rooms. I went out into the passage and found a throng of gentlemen in their night-shirts. Most of them were for allowing the fit to spend itself, until somebody suggested that the M. P. might set fire to the house. Then they altered their minds, vanished to put on their nether garments, and reappeared ready for action. A series of thumps on the delirious one's door caused him to open it, when a spring was made upon him by half a dozen men together. Such yells as the M. P. uttered I never heard from any other human being, and the bumps which he got as he was carried, kicking and foaming, down the staircase to the courtyard, were enough to make one shudder. The man's wooden head seemed to come into collision with every knob and angle on the way. At last his captors got him into the stone trough of a fountain and turned a wide-mouthed powerful watercock on him, till he was nearly drowned. When he could yell no longer, but only gasp, they tore his only garment dripping from his back, cuffed him and smacked him unmercifully with their huge brown palms, bound him hand and foot with wisps of hay, and finally flung him quite extinct into the loose box of a cow-shed. I thought the man must have been killed. Great was my relief, therefore, when on the very next evening I beheld him sitting in the cafe of the hotel with one of the men who had doctored him in the approved national fashion. He looked a little groggy about the eyes, but was having another "go" of his favorite cabbage stuff.

As to the earthquake, I was staying on the Riviera when the famous convulsion of 1888 occurred. I was awakened by a shock which dashed two pictures off the wall of my room and upset the washstand. While I was striking a match another shock strewed me and some chairs among some fragments of broken crockery. I had presence of mind enough to remember that during an earthquake you are no safer in the streets than you are in a covered building, so I dressed without mad precipitancy, and after a desperate struggle to open my door—which had got jammed—walked down-stairs. The sight was one never to be forgotten. Men, women and children in deshabille were huddled in the front hall, crying, shrieking and praying. Some had bolted out of doors with hardly any clothes on, and had made for the sea, where they clamored to be rowed out in open boats—about the worst thing they could do. Among the panic-stricken folk was an old gentleman in pyjamas, who had come down the stairs three steps at a time. But on reaching the hall he exclaimed that he had forgotten something and must go back. His friends shouted to him that the upper stories were dangerous; but he turned a deaf ear, bounded up-stairs, and presently returned panting. The thing which he had forgotten was his set of false teeth!

How Deep Does the Earth Quake.

The Mississippi Valley has recently experienced an earthquake shock which for severity has not been equaled for years, an incident which revives interest in the query: How deep does the earth "quake" when nature shakes her crust like the cyclone does the circus tent?

At Virginia City, Nev., the great earthquake of 1879 was not noticed by the miners in the deeper portions of the Comstock mines. The famous earthquake at the same place in 1874, which shook down chimneys, fire walls, &c., and cracked every brick building in the city, was merely noticed by some of the miners working in the "upper levels," but did them no damage, not even shaking down loose rocks and earth. The station men in the various shafts felt it strongest, and the deepest point where it was noticed was by the ninth station man, who was on watch at the 900-foot level, which is, of course, 900 feet below the surface. He said it felt like a faint throb or pulsation of air, as though a blast had been fired above, below, or in some indefinite direction. In some of the Virginia City mines the shook was not felt at all, not even by station men in the shafts.

A Mixed Drink.

Men who study the art of making mixed drinks declare that the best tasting cider-cup or champagne-cup is that which contains a little of nearly everything on the shelves of a bar-room. Brandy, sherry, and a touch of applejack give the required body, and all the cordials that make up the pousse cafe add the aroma and flavor. It is said that perfect skill in the making will blend all these ingredients so that not one can be detected by the palate.

There are 46,000 oil wells in the United States, which produce about 130,000 barrels of oil per pay.

Country Roads.

There is not a rural town within boarding distance of a great city which could not at slight expense assure itself all the city boarders that it could accommodate by the simple process of systematically and intelligently improving and beautifying its roads. If it were to appoint a town committee with power to employ experts, or to obtain expert advice, and to carry out the suggestions thus obtained in road improvement, the mere public advertisement of that proceeding would attract boarders from all directions. The expense would not be great. In nearly every case the gravel or cracked stone necessary for the construction of a serviceable, well drained road can be obtained within moderate distance.

There is, for example, in some parts of Orange county, in New York state, a kind of soft red sandstone to be found in great abundance, which crushes readily under the wheels and makes a hard, firm roadbed, which is never dusty and never muddy, which is yielding to the horses' feet and most agreeable to ride over. Ordinary gravel can be used with almost equally good results. The main thing is to secure something like scientific knowledge in the construction of the road and in the mixture of materials. The vicious idea that anybody can make a road by shoveling dirt into the middle of it from the gutter, or, what is the same thing in a wholesale form, hauling it there by means of a "scraper," must be abandoned at the outset, and not only abandoned but prohibited. Until that is done no reform will be possible.—Century.

An Uncouth Mode of Burial.

Of all the modes of burial ever practiced by creatures in the shape of human beings the method of the Queensland nomads is certainly the most uncouth. After drying the corpse in the sun and knocking out its teeth for keepsakes, they deposit it on a framework of rough poles and bury it under a few armsful of rushes and old kangaroo skins, leaving the bush wolves to sing its requiem.

No member of the dead man's tribe will settle within a mile of his grave for fear of being haunted by the spooks making the burial place their midnight rendezvous. The metaphysical opinions of the Australian aborigines prove, indeed, that savages can be afflicted with an abundance of supernaturalism without betraying a t[illegible] of anything deserving the name of [illegible] sentiment.

They believe in evil spirits whistling in the blasts of the storm wind, and try to ex[illegible] them by spitting in the direction [illegible] say; but for the conceptions of the deity, of future existence, of repentance, atonement and conscience, their language has not even a definite word. From somewhere in the land of their forefathers—[illegible] Asia, perhaps—they have imported [illegible] faintly resembling the Buddhist [illegible] of metempsychosis, and believe [illegible] may be reborn as men, and [illegible] human beings of a superior rank. —Professor Oswald in Good Words.

A Fish with Teeth on His Tongue.

The biggest of fresh water fishes, the "arapaima" of the Amazon, in South America, which grows to six feet in length, has teeth on its tongue, so that the latter resembles the file and is used as such. Some kinds of trout also have the same peculiarity. Fishes that swallow their prey entire have their teeth so supported on flexible bases as to bend backward but not forward, in order that their victims shall not escape after they have been once seized. In ages gone by there were ferocious sharks, such as would make a mouthful of you without blinking, seventy feet in length.

Plenty of their teeth have been found which are five inches long, whereas the biggest of the teeth belonging to sharks that exist at the present day are one and a half inches long. Speaking of extinct creatures reminds me to say that all of the early birds—those of early geological times, that is—had teeth, with which they captured the early worms of the same period. Being descended from reptiles it is natural that they should possess a dental equipment, but when they ceased to be carnivorous they had no teeth any longer.—Interview in Washington Star.

Where Her Prayer Ended.

Little Fanny, five years old, was spending a week at her grandmother's, when word came of the arrival in her home of a baby brother. That night, as grandma was putting her to bed, she noticed that the child did not mention the new comer in her prayers. She had asked God to bless her grandmother A—— and her grandmother H——, and both grandfathers by name, all the aunts and uncles by name, and last her dear father and mother and darling little sister Bell, even the old house dog and the old barn cat.

"Why, Fanny," said the aggrieved old lady, after the resounding "Amen" had signified that Fanny's petitions were over, "you have not asked God to bless the dear baby brother."

"No," cried the child; "I have not. Bell can do the praying for him."—Wide Awake.

Hygiene.

It is useful to have a note of the first appearance of a word in our language. At the end of the first volume of the third edition of Southey's "Letters Written During a Journey in Spain," occurs a translation of the "Rules of the Royal College of Surgery at Madrid, founded by Carlos III, 1787." Here we find that the second professorship "shall be of physiology and hygiene." To this word the following note is attached, "I do not understand this word, perhaps it means the doctrine of health." Southey was a great reader, and had a verbal memory to be envied. It is obvious that he had never met with hygiene before.—Notes and Queries.

When the Earth Was Young.

When the earth was young, says Dr. Ball, astronomer royal for Ireland, it went around so fast that the day was only three hours long. The earth was liquid then, and as it spun around and around at that fearful speed, and as the sun caused ever increasing tides upon its surface, it at last burst in two. The smaller part became the moon, which has been going around the earth ever since at an increasing distance. The influence of the moon now rises tides on the earth, and, while there was any liquid to operate on in the moon, the earth returned the compliment.—New York Telegram.

How It Escaped Her.

Smiley—I hadn't been out of the house five minutes this morning when I found a five dollar gold piece.

Yonker—Where did you find it?

Smiley—In my pocket; my wife mistook it for a cent.—Munsey's Weekly.

A Ridiculous Idea.

Mabel—Oh, dear! I've lost my diary.

Amy—Well, you didn't expect to keep it very long, did you?—Puck.

A ROMANCE OF THE DESERT.

Married His Friend at the Other End of the Wire When He Found He Was She.

Telegraph operators frequently make warm friends with each other with no other means of communication than the insensate wire, and more than once friendships thus made have lasted for years without either person having had so much as a glimpse of the other's features. It is not often, however, that a courtship is carried on under such circumstances, but a pretty little romance comes from the desert which had for its sequel the recent registration at a prominent hotel of "J. J. Stansbury and wife, Jackson Springs, Cal." The story is repeated by the hero himself.

"About a year and a half ago," said he, "I was a railroad agent and telegraph operator at a little station down on the desert side of Yuma. The station consisted of nothing more than a big water tank, a shed for myself and another for a small crew of trackmen. There for nearly a year I put in the loneliest and the hottest time that I ever passed in my life. The thermometer had a way of monkeying around between 100 degs. and 150 degs. above zero on most days, and almost my only pleasure was found in talking over the wires with the operators at various stations along the line.

"I had never seen the operator at Banning at that time, but he was a cheerful, jolly sort of fellow, and as time also hung heavily upon his hands, we passed many a pleasant hour in conversation over the wires. We had sort of half arranged to get a vacation together, and there was a good deal of joyful anticipation—on my part at least—of the manner in which we should pass it. We were to go into the mountains and spend two or three weeks in hunting, fishing, etc. All of our plans were arranged in those scorching and lonely days, and we usually agreed in our ideas of the preparations, although there was occasionally a little difference of opinion.

"I remember, for instance, that he said he was going to take along a pair of rubber boots for trout fishing, while I asked him, 'What's the matter with your taking off your shoes and stockings and rolling up your pants?' But he said he preferred boots. As the time drew near, however, he, for some reason that I could not understand, backed squarely out of the enterprize, much to my disgust.

"Finally he told me one day that he was going to New Mexico to pass his vacation, and we anticipated considerable pleasure in meeting each other during the train's brief stop at my station. But I did not meet him at all, for when the train that bore him arrived I was sick and unconscious with a burning fever, the result of my long stay under the torrid sun.

"Into the fever tortured brain there sometimes creeps a semiconsciousness of the life about it, and so during the days of my agony I was vaguely aware of gentle, womanly hands and a kindly feminine presence in my sickroom, and when I returned to the conscious world I was not surprised to find a fair and pleasant face beside me. She said that she had been upon the train when I was found stricken down, and had staid to minister to my sore need. The idea may seem preposterous, but I believe the foundation of my affection for my kind attendant had been laid while the unconsciousness of fever was still upon me, and the affection grew into the deepest love as she cared for me during the days of my convalescence.

"After a time I ventured to tell her of my love and to ask her if she would be mine, but I was not prepared for her answer.

"'John,' she said, 'do you really mean that you wish to marry a girl that insists upon wearing rubber boots and will not-roll'—

"'Mat!' I said, for I was completely beaten. Then it flashed upon me. She was the operator at Banning, and I, like a fool, had always taken it for granted that she was a man.

"Well, I am not going to tell how I convinced her that I wanted to marry her, boots and all, but I did it, and, like Barkis, she was willin, and here we are on our wedding journey. The Southern Pacific has lost an operator, but I calculate that I am ahead on the deal."—Los Angeles Herald.

Against Her Will.

Almost every one knows the distress occasioned by a sudden tendency to cry at a time when one wishes to appear particularly unmoved and even stoical.

Marjorie never cries when any little mishap befalls her, and has been known to sustain, without shedding a tear, severe bumps that have rapidly acquired a black and blue aspect. But the other day, Araminta, her dearly beloved and tenderly cherished doll, fell into the open grate, and received a contusion of the nose which was most unpleasant to contemplate.

Marjorie winked very hard for a few minutes, and then, running with her injured Araminta to her mother, she buried her head in her mother's lap, sobbing, "Oh, mamma, I don't want to cry, but my tears have all come unfastened!"—Youth's Companion.

An Eye on All.

You may have seen the old man, for he haunts Central park every fair day and prowls about with apparently one object. Whenever he sees a man, woman or child breaking any of the park commission's rules he cautions them.

"Don't go on the grass," he will say to a child who happens to wander from the pathway.

"Get outer there!" he will shout at a young fellow he sees lounging beneath a shady tree. If not obeyed he shakes a heavy bent wood stick threateningly and moves on mumbling.

It is said that the old man has constituted himself a protector of the park and is doing a good work that every citizen ought to do. Yet everybody declares that he is crazy.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Risky Experiment.

The revised census of Great Britain quotes London proper, i. e., the corporate city, with 4,200,000 inhabitants; London and suburbs with 5,850,000. The average yearly increase since 1880 would fill a fair sized town, and the next twenty years will witness many curious results of the attempt to crowd the population of a kingdom into the space of a county. In certain respects centralization has its undeniable advantages, emphasized by improved methods of rapid transit, but modified by the shadow of the dire possibilities apt to result if an epidemic in that monster metropolis should be favored by a sultry summer or a conflagration by a sudden gale.—Philadelphia Times.

For domestic uses sadiron holders are now made of asbestos. With them the grasp of the iron, however hot it may be, never causes pain or burning. There are also made large holders, intended for use by smelters, molders and workers in metal generally.

Attention Canadians.

WINTER EXCURSIONS TO PRINCIPAL POINTS IN CANADA.

Will again be run from the Northest and all principles points in at the low rate of $40.00 for the round tirp. Tickets will be on sale in Manitoba daily from Tuesday December 1st to 30th inclusive and Northern Minnesota and North Dakota on Tuesday December 1st and 8th and daily from December 15th to 22nd inclusive and on Tuesday December 29th. Limit of tickets 90 days from date of sale. Those contemplate taking advantage of these low rate excursions should bear in mind that the Northern Pacific in connection with the Wisconsin central from the public highway from points in the Nortewest to Chicago On December 1st, 8th, 15thr22nd, anp 29th through Pullman furnised tourist sleeping cars will be run via those lenes to Chicago with out change, in which the rate for one double berth from starting point Chicago will be but $2.00.

Tickets, maps, time table and full information can be obtainet from any agent of the Northern Pacific R. R.

Canadian Excursions.

Excursion tickets to Canada will be no sale via St. Paul and "The North-Western Line," to Chicago at offices of the Great Northern Rs, from points in Minnesota and Dakota north of and including Crookston and Grand Forks on December 1st, 8th, 15th, 20th, 21st, 22nd and 29th, and from points in Manitoba on December 1st, 8th, 15th, 22nd and 29th, 1891.

To Motreal and points west of Montre[illegible] the rate will be $40.00 for the round trip.

Tickets will also be sold to points east of Montreal at a trifle higher rate.

The Montana and Manitoba Express train [illegible] the Great Northern Ry. arrives in St. Paul in the morning in time to connect with the "North-Western Line" fast day train leaving St. Paul at 7.50 a. m., arriving in Chicago 9.35 p. m., making connections with late night trains out of Chicago to the east.

Passenger arriving in St. Paul in the morning, desiring to stay over until evening can take the vestibule limited on this line that leaves St. Paul at 7.30 p. m. and arrives Chicago 9 o'clock next morning.

Buy your tickets over "The Norte-Western Line" it is also the only line running a train from St. Paul every morning both week [illegible] and Sundays to Milwaukee and Chicago.

M. M. Wheeler,
Agent.

T. W. T[illegible],
Gen'l Passenger Agt., St. Paul, Minn.

PATENTS!

Pension, Postal, Land and Indian Depredation Claims.

U. S. and Foreign Patents Obtained; Interferences conducted; S[illegible] examinations; Trade-marks, copy-rights, labels and designs registered.

Rejected cases prosecuted; Infringement suits conducted in any United States Court.

If you have an invention, send us a sketch, photograph or small model, together with a brief description of the most important features and we will advise you the course to pursue. If you are in posession of patents and the same are infringed, or if you are charged with infringement, submit the matter to us for a reliable opinion.

NATIONAL BUREAU OF CLAIMS.

Box 35 Washington, D. C.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. Kin'gs New Discovery for consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Armica Salev and Electric Bitters, and have never handlhe remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits W. A. Schreiter Druggists.

A Safe Investment.

Is one which is guaranteed to bring satisfactory results, or in case of failure a purchase price. on this safe plan you can buy from our advertised Druggist a bottles of Dr. Kings' New Discovery for Consumption. It is guaranteed to bring relief in every case, when used for any affection of Throat, Lungs or Chest, such as Consumption, Inflammation of Lungs, Bronchitis Asthma. Whooping Cough Croup, colic can always bedepended upon Trial bottles free at W. A. Schreiter's. Drugstore.

Boys will be boys, but not everyone knows how to manage them; but if you wish some practical, common sense suggestions, read the article on the subject published in the January number of Demorest's Family Magazine, that ideal publication which bears out to the full the promise of its name. The January number contains a genuine holiday feast; and this splendid menu, with variation, is furnished twelve times a year, for the subscription price of $2. Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St. New York City.

For Sale.

I HAVE FOR SALE THE FOLLOWING LANDS,

Improved and Unimproved

FARMS

IN POLK COUNTY, MINN.

Long Time, Small Payments, Low Rate of Interest.

	SECTION.	TOWN.	RANGE.	SETTLER
W½ of Nw¼	29	147	43	Wilson
Nw¼ of sw¼	28	147	43	Wilson
Se¼ of Ne¼	30	141	52	Wilson
Se¼	6	148	42	Sylvesterson
Se¼	8	146	45	Troxell
Ne¼	2	148	45	Dillon
Sw¼	2	148	44	LaDue
S½ of Nw¼	2	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Beaudry
Lots 3 and 4	3	149	44	Rivard
S½ of Sw¼	4	149	44	Bombardier
N½ of Nw¼	9	149	44	Bombardier
Se¼	7	146	44	Vaudrin
Nw¼	11	149	44	Tanasse
Ne¼	11	149	44	Emil Fontane
Ne¼	4	149	45	Beaudette
Sw¼	12	149	45	Herbert
E½ of Ne¼ & E½ of Se¼	23	149	45	Patnode
Sw¼	24	149	46	Chayer
Sw¼	20	149	46	Haber
Ne¼	26	149	48	Folk
Ne¼ of Nw¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
N½ of Ne¼	8	150	41	Lemieux
Nw¼ of nw¼	9	150	41	Lemieux
Ne¼	26	150	41	Gabourey
Ne¼	10	150	42	Dagneau
Se¼	13	150	42	Lajambe
Se¼	25	150	42	Sylvester
Nw¼	32	150	42	Lachapelle
Se¼	12	150	43	Deserve
W½ of Se¼	13	15	43	Marlow
N½ of Ne¼	24	150	43	Marlow
Nw¼	17	150	43	Desotelle
se¼	11	150	43	Lizee
Ne¼	23	150	43	Besson
Se¼	23	150	43	Valle
Se¼	29	150	43	Toepin
E½ of Nw¼	31	150	43	Rabillard
Lots 1 and 2	31	150	43	Rabillard
Nw¼	32	150	43	Dandenault
Ne¼	33	150	43	Gaudette
Ne¼	19	150	44	Boutellere
Se¼	31	150	44	Charron
Nw¼	33	150	44	Zaiser
Sw¼	34	150	44	Houle
Ne¼	6	150	45	Garon
E½Sw¼	6	150	45	LaBelle
Lots 6 and 7	6	150	45	LaBelle
E½ of Sw¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
W½Se¼	26	150	45	Beauvais
Nw¼	12	150	46	Pare
Sw¼ of Tw¼	3	151	42	Doutre
S½ Se¼	4	151	42	Doutre
Se¼Sw¼	4	154	42	Doutre
Se¼ of Nw¼	4	150	42	Meilleur
Sw¼ of Ne¼	4	151	42	Meilleur
Lots 2 and 3	4	151	42	Meilleur
N½ of Se¼	18	151	42	Sotourneau
N½ of Sw¼	17	151	42	Sotourneau
Se¼	15	151	43	McIntire
Lots 1 2 and 3	17	151	43	Emard
E½ of Nw¼	17	151	43	Emard
Ne¼ of Nw¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
Nw¼ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
S½ of Ne¼	22	151	43	Lafebore
W½ of W½	23	151	43	Page
Ne¼	33	161	43	Beausoleel
E½ of Nw¼	7	151	44	Blaire
Lots 1 and 2	7	151	44	Blaire
Nw¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Lots 8 9 and 12	15	151	44	Bottineau
Ne¼ Se¼	22	151	44	Bottineau
Nw¼ Sw¼	23	151	44	Bottineau
S½ Ne¼	6	151	44	Muller
Lots 1 and 2	6	151	44	Muller
Se¼	4	151	45	Jones
Se¼	14	151	45	Bery
Ne¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	18	151	45	Goyette
Sw¼	32	151	45	Fleurie
Ne¼	20	150	46	McLean
Ne¼	24	151	46	Gauthier
Se¼	24	161	46	Tougas
Se¼	8	151	48	Lyle
Ne¼	25	152	42	Paussant
W½ of Ne¼ & w½ of se¼	28	152	43	Beaulieu
Nw¼	30	152	43	Turville
E½ of Nw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
Lot 1	31	152	43	Rourke
Ne¼ of Sw¼	31	152	43	Rourke
N½ of Sw	10	152	44	Loe
Sw¼ of Se¼	10	152	44	Loe
Ne¼	13	152	44	Sandon
Sw¼	15	152	44	Dahlbeck
Nw¼	25	152	44	Rourke
Sw¼	25	152	44	Comstock
Ne¼	34	152	44	Rourke
Nw¼	25	152	45	Carroll
Se¼	28	152	45	Pepin
Nw¼	32	152	45	Pilon
S½ of Ew¼	2	152	46	Kirsch
Lots 3 and 4	2	152	46	Kirsch
E½ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼ of Ne	14	152	46	Bete
Ne¼ of Se¼	14	152	46	Bete
Sw¼	20	152	46	Carlton
Tw¼	26	152	46	Billandeau
Sw¼	4	152	48	Feeny
Ne¼	24	152	49	Brownlee
Se¼	11	153	43	Ness
Nw¼	25	153	44	Ives
Sw¼ of Ne¼	2	152	45	Bray
Lot 2	2	153	45	Bray
W½ of Se¼	2	153	45	Bray
Nw¼ of Sw¼	10	153	45	Bray
Sw¼	4	153	45	Lucian
Nw¼	6	152	45	Lusia
Sw¼	12	153	45	Clement
E½ of E½	14	153	45	Clement
W½ of E½	14	153	45	Coe
Se¼	18	153	45	Labounta Sr.
Sw¼	18	153	45	Labounta
E½ of W½	2	153	46	Lusie
Nw¼	8	153	46	Kelly
Se¼	8	153	46	Hazeltine
Ne¼	14	153	46	Stacy
Nw¼	26	153	46	Cole
Se¼	26	153	46	Labounty
Se¼	28	154	45	Gooler
S½ of Ne	32	154	46	Bautain
Se¼	25	153	46	Lusian
Ne¼	34	154	46	Thamas
S½ Ne¼ & 1 1,2	2	152	46	Filbin
Nw¼	32	150	45	Brosseau
Ne¼	30	152	43	Miller
Ne¼	19	152	42	Borup
Ne¼	29	150	41	Stone
Sw¼	10	151	46	Benoit

A. D. Wishard,
RED LAKE FALLS,
Polk Co., Minn.

ma 31f

Railroad Time Table.

LEAVE		ARRIVE
P. M.		A. M.
8	St. Paul.	10.30
8.35	Minneapolis.	9.55
1159	Brainerd	5.05
A. M.
2.37	Wadena	3.22
4.35	Detroit	1.38
		P. M.
5.33	Winnipeg Jct.	12.51
8.50	Fertile.	7.20
10.05 p.m		7.31 a. m.
p. m.		a. m.
5.58	Red Lake Falls.	5.48
10.08	Crookston.	8.25
2.50 }	Grand Forks,	} 9.40
3.30 }	Via Red Lake Falls.	} 11.50
7.32	Forest River	11.10
6.58	Grafton	11.40
P. M.		P. M.
5.13	Pombina	1.34
4.03	Morris	2.44
2.30	Winnipeg.	4.25
CHAS. S. FEE G. P. T. A.	W. S. MELLEN, G. M.	J. A. DUFFY, Agt.

Get an Estimate

Of the Cost of Your Building - From

JAMES BRADY,

CONTRACTOR AND BUILDER.

Foreman of the Constrvction of

North Side Roller Mill.
P.&J. Meehan's Saw Mill.
J.D. Marshall's residence.
And others

Office at residence on hamilton av.

In conjunction with the Erie System operates Fast Vestibuled Trains between Chicago and the Atlantic Seaboard. you may travel in the most Elegant and complete Pullman Vestibuled Trains ever constructed and save $1.50 to Buffalo and Niagara Falls, $2.00 to New York $2.35 to Albany and Troy, and $3.00 to Boston and New England Cities.

No rival line offers the advantages of a system of throuh first and second-class day coaches and Pullman Dining cars chicago to New York.

It is the only line operating pullman cars to Boston and New England via Albany.

Entire trains are lighted by gas, heated by steam. Pullman dining cars run through in either direction.

Pullman chair and sleeping cars toColumbus, O., and Ashland, Ky., Daily.

No extra charge for fast time yeep unsurpassed accommodations afforded on these luxurious trains.

NORTHERN PACIFIC

BETWEEN

Winnipeg, Gilby, Dayton, Grafton, G and Forks-Crookston, Red Lake Falls,

AND ALL POINTS

EAST AND WEST.

There is nothing better than the service on

THE DINING CAR LINE

Through Pullman Sleeping Cars Daily Between Points in the

RED RIVER VALLEY

AND

ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS

PACIFIC COAST TRAINS
PASSING THROUGH
MINNESOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA
IDAHO, ORENON AND WASHINGTON,

CARRY COMPLETE EQUIPMENT OF

Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars,
First and Second Class Coaches,
Pullman Tourist and
Free Colonist Sleepers.

And Elegant Dining Cars.

THROUGH TICKETS Are sold at all coupon offices of the Northern Pacific Railroad to points North, East, South and west, in the United States and Canada.

For further information regarding rates, routes maps, etc., address

CHAS. S. FEE,
G. P. & T. Agt.,
St. Paul, Minn.

J. A. DUFFY
Local A.gt

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Nov. 24, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on January 9th, 1892, viz, Paul Prue, hd 11856 for the s½ ne¼ and lots 1 and 2, sec 6, twp 149, r 42.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz.

Toussaint Beaudry, Joseph Benoit, Joseph Leroux, all of Terrebonne, Polk Co., Minn., John Quesnell, of Mentor, Polk Co., Minn.

nov26d31 H. H. Dickmann, Register.

Scientific American Agency for

PATENTS

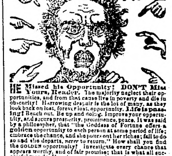
CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the

Scientific American

Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York.

The Mormon Elders' Book on Sexual Strength, mailed free to married men, address F. B. Crouch, 202 Grand St., New York



HE Missed his Opportunity! DON'T Miss Yours, Reader. The majority neglect their opportunities, and from that cause live in poverty and die in obscurity! Harrowing despair is the lot of many, as they look back on lost, forever lost, opportunity. Life is passing! Reach out. Be up and doing. Improve your opportunity, and secure prosperity, prominence, peace. It was said by a philosopher, that "the Goddess of Fortune offers a golden opportunity to each person at some period of life; embrace the chance, and she pours out her riches; fail to do so and she departs, never to return." How shall you find the GOLDEN opportunity? Investigate every chance that appears worthy, and of fair promise; that is what all successful men do. Here is an opportunity, such as is not often within the reach of laboring people. Improved, it will give, at least, a grand start in life. The GOLDEN opportunity for many is here. Money to be made rapidly and honorably by any industrious person of either sex. All ages. You can do the work and live at home, wherever you are. Even beginners are easily earning from $5 to $10 per day. You can do as well if you will work, not too hard, but industriously; and you can increase your income as you go on. You can give spare time only, or all your time to the work. Easy to learn. Capital not required. We start you. All is comparatively new and really wonderful. We instruct and show you how, free. Failure unknown among our workers. No room to explain here. Write and learn all free, by return mail. Unwise to delay. Address at once. H. Hallett & Co., Box 880, Portland, Maine.

Green Bay, Winona & St. Paul

Railroad. Best and most Direct Line Between

LACROSSE,
WINONA,
Neillsville,
Eau Claire,
Grand Rapids,
Stevens Point,
New London,
Appelton,
Neenah,
Menasha,
Oshkosh,
Fon du Lac,
GREEN BAY,

And all Points in

EASTERN WISCONSIN,

Iron Districts of Northern Michigan and Lake Superior Regions.

Close Connections and Quick Time,

See That Your Ticket Reads Via
GREEN BAY, WINONA & ST. PAUL
Railroad,

S. W. Champion,
Superintendent, Green Bay, Wis.
J. B Last,
Ass't Gen. Pass. Agt., Green Bay, Wis.

REAL ESTATE,

INTELLIGENCE AND COLLECTION OFFICE

SPECIAL BARGAINS NOW ON HAND

In Desirable Property. Call or Write for Particulars.

CYPRIEN GOSSELIN.

Office on Bottineau Avenue, Red Lake Falls.

Land office at Crookston, Minn., Nov. 27th 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register or Receiver U. S. Land office at Crookston Minn. on January 11, 1892, viz: Euclide Beaudry Hd 10794 for the NE¼ sec 23 Twp 150 Rg 44.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:

John T. Beaudry, Crookston, Louis Albert, Ambroise Delorme, Louis Guilmette all of Red Lake Falls, Minn.

dec. 3-jan 6 Hugh Thompson Register

Land office at Crookston, Minn., Dec. 19th, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim and that said proof will be made before the U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on March 1st, 1892, viz: Vila Roch, D. S. 10,526, for the sw¼ sec. 15, twp 150, r 43.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz:

Joseph Dupont, Leon Rivard, Mitchell Champagne, E. Lambert, all of Terrebonne P. O., Polk Co., Minn.

d24jan22 Hugh Thompson, Register.

First National ank

RED LAKE FALLS, MINN.

JAS. I. WYER, Pres.
JOS. SMITH, Vice President.
THEO. GARCEAU, Cashier

Capital.... $50,000.
Surplus..... $5,000.

Careful Attention and Prompt returns given all Collections.

ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

J. C. O'Brien went to Grand Forks Monday.

Rev. Er. Arpin celebrated mass at Argyle Sunday.

August and Tellesfore Brunelle drove to Crookston Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris Dargan drove to town from Wylie Monday.

The holiday trade this year was enormous, and our dealers feel good.

Pete Morisette's new chair and mirror are an ornament to the "Imperial."

Mrs. Angus Campbell is in Buffington visiting her daughter Mrs. Ed. Duffy.

Hon. Marcus Johnson arrived in town Tuesday morning from Minneapolis.

Joe Bray is elated over finding his dog Sank which was lost over six months.

Martin Hanson, who kept the popular store in the Gosselin block, has gone hence.

Prof. Rutherford is spending a two week's vacation in the southern part of the state.

Miss Elodia Bray is still very sick with congestion of the lungs, but is slowly recovering.

The vacant lot where formerly stood C. B. Wells' confectionery must feel "an aching void."

This week we realize that investments in banana orchards in Minnesota might occasionally be hazardous.

New Years Day will be celebrated with due enthusiasm this year, especially by our French Canadian friends.

Napoleon Bray, of Staples, Minn., is in the city visiting friends and relatives, having arrived Monday morning.

Miss Emma Woodall spent Christmas at home on the Keystone farm, returning in time to begin teaching Monday.

Leon Hubert returned to Duluth Tuesday evening, after having spent two weeks visiting among old acquaintances.

W. P. Crawford returned to Hitchcock S. D. Tuesday, via Crookston after having spent a pleasant week in the city, a guest of Mr. and Mrs. M. Boyle.

The South Side intermediate and primary departments of our schools did not have a holiday vacation, as they are endeavoring to make up lost time.

Philip Zeh drove down from Thief River Falls Saturday, and was accompanied on his return, Sunday, by his mother, who will visit there a short time.

J. C. O'Brien is at East Grand Forks conferring with Com'r Rhinehardt. They will resume the work of appraisal on the White Earth reservation in short order.

Work will soon commence repairing the Red Lake river wagon bridge. The contract will be let Jan. 5th, the next meeting of the county commissioners.

Dr. John Watson went to Minneapolis Monday. The remains of his child and sisterinlaw were removed from here to that place for interment in the family lot.

Frank E. Hunt has leased the Findeisen store room, formerly occupied by Redmond & Morin, and will move his hardware stock after his return from the East.

The republicans appear to exert every legislative power to win back the disasters. Senator Washburn's bill to obviate gambling in wheat is a commendable piece of legislation.

Mr. Morisette, of Emardville, uncle of Napoleon and Peter Morisitte, had an arm badly frozen this week. We have not learned the particulars. Dr. I. Lemieux is in attendance.

Miss Katie McNerthney arrived home Thursday morning from the Moorhead normal school to spend the hol'd y vacation. Miss Katie is delighted and much interested with her school work.

There will be a grand New Year's ball to-night at the opera house. Lovers of the mazy dance will attend in large numbers on the popular plea of "dancing the old year out and the new year in."

A series of afternoon teas was given in honor of Mrs. H. J. Kaufer. Saturday by Miss Lizzie Boyle, Monday by Mrs. L. A. Kaufer, Tuesday by Mrs. Ed. Garceau. They proved delightful social events.

O. Noel of Louisville is anticipating a trip to Florida. Mr. Noel has been a sufferer with severe bronchial troubles and it is for the alleviation of this that he will make the journey as soon as he is physically able to travel.

Mrs. H. J. Kaufer and Mamie returned to St. Paul yesterday via Wylie Station.

The death at Lambert reported in last week's NEWS was sensational. Biland fell from the steeple of the new church building to the frozen earth, his death resulting therefrom after intense agony.

Mrs. W. S. Milligan came up from St. Paul last week with W. S. and will remain with her husband the greater part of the winter. We notice a smile constantly adorns Mr. M's physiognomy of late.

Mrs. J. S. McCornack was quite ill the latter part of last week and the first of this week. The usual trip of Rev. J. S. McCornack to Euclid was therefore postponed. We are pleased to note her convalescense.

The residence of Michael Boyle was discovered to be ablaze Tuesday about 12 o'clock m. Prompt action soon extinguished the flames. As there was no insurance on either building or contents, the result was doubly fortunate.

A Brunner, of Crookston, shoemaker, brother of August Brunner who formerly resided here, became intoxicated Monday night and slept in the snow. Freezing his feet, he crawled home in the morning on his hands and knees. Fortunately no amputations were necessary.

William Ditty, a conductor on the Great Northern, met with a severe accident Monday evening while coupling cars in the yard at Crookston. When the cars came together the draw-bar broke and he was badly squeezed. His collar bone was fractured and he was otherwise badly bruised.

W. F. Zutz, who has been teaching school in the Coad district has resigned, to accept a position as book-keeper in H.B. Laughlin's store at Fisher. Mr. Zutz has become well acquainted in the city and will be much missed by his many friends, who will wish him success in his new field.

Moses Verboncouer has spent much more comfortable days than those he is now enduring. While at Terrebonne indulging in Christmas festivities his right arm was accidently scalded in a fearful manner. The whole arm, wrist and hand is now in an inflamed and swollen condition and Moses is under the care of a physician.

Peter Morisette met with a rather peculiar and painful accident Monday—while putting on one of his shoes a needle was run into his foot four inches. The sharp pain almost rendered him insensible and he was unable to extract the needle himself. The foot is pretty sore, and it is unlikely that Peter will do much dancing this New Years.

Hugh and James Dean and P. Moylan came down from their farms which are located in the proposed forestry reserve. The boys have spent two years in that section and they voice the sentiments of several hundred settlers i the Red Lake country when they condemn the action of the forest y cranks—who are endeavoring to steal their homes.

The home of Joe Ducharme at Badger Creek was the scene of a happy event which transpired Wednesday evening last. It being the fifteenth birthday anniversary of Miss Josephine Ducharme, her many friends gathered to celebrate the occasion. The house rung with mirth and merriment that evening, and it is safe to say that it was one of the most enjoyable soirees ever held at Badger.

Speaker Crisp in relegating Northern democrats to the rear has made a greater mistake than did the democrats when they elected Crisp to the speakership. The independent element of the Northwest is dissatisfied and unless the present congress evokes radical changes that will redound to their glory the cause of democracy will receive a death blow. tory which naturally belougs to it.

Court has adjourned. Among the more important sentences was that of Geo. O'Brien to the St. Cloud reformatory, he having been convicted of incendiarism. After the Thompson elevator conflagration at Fisher last February he confessed himself the author of the fire, but later made an effort for acquittal. This case was the last one disposed of. The remainder of the cases on the calendar will be attended to at the special session in February.

MONEY can be earned at our NEW line of work, rapidly and honorably, by those of either sex, young or old, and in their own localities, wherever they live. Any one can do the work. Easy to learn. We furnish everything. We start you. No risk. You can devote your spare moments, or all your time to the work. This is an entirely new lead, and brings wonderful success to every worker. Beginners are earning from $25 to $50 per week and upwards, and more after a little experience. We can furnish you the employment and teach you FREE. No space to explain here. Full information FREE. TRUE & CO., AUGUSTA, MAINE.

DR. PRICE'S
Cream Baking Powder.
Used in Millions of Homes—40 Years the Standard.

Mrs. H. Zutz has been suffering with a severe cold this week.

High mass will be celebrated at St. Mary's church to-morrow morning.

Mrs. John Kege, of Minneapolis, nee Miss Eliza Gervais, arrived in town today on a visit.

The people of the Red River Valley seem awake to the necessities of the hour and are signing remonstrances against the scheme to rob the Valley of the territory which naturally belongs to it.

For every dollar purchase you make at the Drug and Jewelry Store you will receive a 25c present.

Best horseshoeing done at Findeisen's.

Dolls, Dolls, Dolls, at Schreiter's drug store.

Everything in holiday goods at Schreiters' drug store.

More new goods just received at the Drug and Jewelry Store.

The largest and best assorted line of holiday goods at Schreiter's.

For every 50c purchase at my store you will receie a 10c present.
Flack the Jeweler.

All kinds of COAL for sale at Hoskin's elevator.
32 W. T. SPILLANE.

Buy your candy, nuts, figs and popcorn of Flack the Jeweler. A fine new stock just received.

Grand display of holiday goods in Clocks and Silverware at Schreiter's.

O My! Those beautiful Dolls at the Drug and Jewelry Store are just too sweet for anything.

You will find a nice line of stoves including Radiant Home, Early Breakfast and Charter Oak at Hunts. B

Give us a chance to show you our holiday goods and quote prices. We carry all the latest novelties
W A. SCHREITER.

Buy your holiday goods of Flack the Jeweler and get a nice present with every 50c purchase.

The largest stock of tin and wood toys in Eastern Polk county sold very cheap at Schreiter's drug store.

If you want a sewing machine be sure and examine Hunt's. He carries the Domestic, Favorite and American No. 7. Prices or terms to suit.

Team of working horses for sale. Weight 12 and 14 hundred. P. & J. Meehan, Red Lake Falls, Minn. Apply at the lumber yards.

Buy your presents at the Drug and Jewelry Store and gladden the hearts of your father, mother, sister, brother or sweetheart.

Conversation cards, card games, authors and lotos at Schreiters.

Horseowners, Take Notice.

At the request of many of my customers I have secured the services of a first class horse shoer and respectfully solicit a share of your patronage. First class work guaranteed.
Wm. Findeisen.

Rich Prizes for Wreckers.

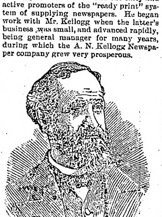
There are prizes floating about the Atlantic waiting to be picked up in the shape of derelict vessels and cargoes, which are said by competent marine authorities to be worth $2,000,000. Some of these vessels, unless blown up or burned by government cruisers, will long continue to be dangerous obstacles on ocean highways. Many wrecking tugs are now cruising for the derelicts nearest the Maine coast, and some of the abandoned craft will probably be towed in. The least of them would be a rich find for the wreckers.

How a Plant Was Named.

A curious story is told of the way in which that curious plant the mother-in-law got its name. An employee of the botanical gardens attached to the Smithsonian institution, in explaining the properties of the plant to a reporter, mentioned the fact that it had the power of paralyzing the tongue. "A good thing for a mother-in-law," said the reporter, and then and there the name mother-in-law was applied to the plant.

Well Known to Newspaper Men.

The late Edwin E. Pratt, of Chicago, had a very varied career in life, and was known among journalists as one of the early and active promoters of the "ready print" system of supplying newspapers. He began work with Mr. Kellogg when the latter's business was small, and advanced rapidly, being general manager for many years, during which the A. N. Kellogg Newspaper company grew very prosperous.



EDWIN E. PRATT.

Edwin E. Pratt and his brother, Edward E. Pratt, were born in New England fifty-seven years ago, and up to the age of thirty were as completely alike as it is possible for two human beings to be. A picture of one would appear to their most intimate friends as a picture of either. Edward E. now lives in Florida. Edwin E. went to Wisconsin in time to enlist and serve in the war in a Wisconsin regiment, after which he was employed for some time in the state treasurer's office, and then removed to Chicago and entered the Kellogg service. After Mr. Kellogg's death Mr. Pratt became president of the company. Last winter he had the grip and never entirely recovered, dying finally of heart failure.

Land Office at Crookston Minn. Dec 15th., 891.
Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register or Receiver U. S. Land office at Crookston Minn., on February 4th, 1892, viz: Toussaint Fournier H d No. 14293, for the S. ½, NE ¼ and S½ Nw¼ Sec 34 Twp 151 R 43.
He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:
Joseph Laurent, Frank St Martin, Joseph St. Martin, Henry Prudhomme, all of Terrebonne, Polk county, Minn.
dec17-jan15 Hugh Thompson, Register.

Land office at Crookston, Minn., Dec. 14th, 1891.
Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of the U. S. land office at Crookston Minn., on February 1st, 1892, viz: Louis Lefevre, Hd 10,970, for the n½ ne¼ sec 33 and n½ nw¼ sec 34, tp 152, r 42.
He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz.
Isaiah Morrisette, H. Blivin, Peter Morrisette, Louis Thoreau, all of Emard P. O. Polk County, Minn.
jan15 Hugh Thompson, Register.

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Dec. 14th, 1891.
Notice is hereby given, that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of the U. S Land Office at Crookston Minn., on February 1st, 1892, viz: Isaiah Morrisette, hd 11,039, for the s½ se¼ sec 5, se¼ sw¼ sec 4, nw¼ nw¼ sec 9, tp 151, r 42.
He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:
Louis Lefevre, H. Blivin, Frank Vallencourt, John B. Derosier, all of Emard P. O., Polk Co., Minn.
jan 15 Hugh Thompson, Register.

Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Dec. 10th, 1891.
Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim and that said proof will be made before the register or receiver of the U. S. land office at Crookston, Minn., on February 10th, 1892, viz: Charles Benoit, pre D S 11,518, for the nw¼ sec 24, twp 150, r 42.
He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz:
Treffley Robidaux, Napoleon Guilmette, J. Ebert Joseph Chaupon, all of Lambert, Polk Co. Minn.
Harry Juvenville, who made Pre D. S. 11191 on the above land on May 28th, 1889, is hereby cited to appear at this office February 10th, 1892, and show cause why said proof should not be allowed and his said entry cancelled.
jan15 Hugh Thompson, Register.

State of Minnesota, county of Polk—ss.
In Probate Court, Special Term, Dec. 5th 1891.
In the matter of the estate of Peter Bischoff, deceased:
On reading and filing the petition of Joseph Bischoff, administrator of the estate of Peter Bischoff, deceased, representing, among other things, that he has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining, settling and allowing the final account of his administration, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to the parties entitled thereto by law.
It is ordered that said account be examined, and petition heard by this court on Monday, the 11th day of January, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the office of the judge of probate, in the city of Crookston in said county.
And it is further ordered, That notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Red Lake Falls News, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls in said county.
Dated at Crookston the 5th day of December, A. D. 1891.
de15-29 By the Court,
C. M. Benson, Judge of Probate

King Solomon (who was a very wise man, except regarding the feminine half of humanity) one remarked that there was nothing new under the sun. Probably he had just had an interview with a book peddler, or a vender of a new kind of soap. While we are welcoming the new year with friendly greetings and social courtesies, how many know that this is a very ancient custom. When our Saxon ancestors were dwelling in caves and wearing skins of wild beasts, the polished Roman was celebrating the advent of the new year much as we do now. Visits were exchanged, presents given and received, the streets were filled with gay masqueraders, and there were long processions of white robed priests and devotees to the temples, and smoking sacrifices. In these days, however, visits could not be exchanged with friends at a distance—there were no railroads, with "holiday rates." Now, the people can reach distant friends with ease and speed, by taking The Burlington, which goes everywhere. For rates and tickets, ask your local agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

ARemarkable Good Man.

He who attends to the comfort of his family and will not suffer himself or allow them to, with that most dreadful of pains, rheumatism. Metzger's Angle and Wormwood oil Liniment is a positive cure for rheumatism and sprains. It is he best extern l application on earth. One bottle is better than any amount of porous plaster. Price 50 cents per bottle. For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

A Very Narrow Escape.

Yes, I had a very narrow escape, said a prominent citizen to a friend. I was confined to my bed for more than two years and all my friends gave me up. had running sores on my limbs and after using nearly everything was induced to try Metzger's Pain Eradicator and now here I am, sound and hearty. You will find it for sale by W. A. Schreiter. Price 50c a bottle, trial sizefree.

The Excitement Not Over.

The rush at Schreiter's drug store stilp continues on account of persons afflicted with Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scrofula, Soreness and inflammation of eyes, sores, pains, etc., etc., to procure a package of Metzger's Pain Eradicator which is sold on a guarantee and is giving entire satisfaction. It is a standard family remedy. Price 50 cents. Trial size free.

Bucklin's Arnica Salve.

The best salve in the world for cuts bruises, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25 cents per bottle. For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

TO DEFEND THE COASTS.

A TASK DEVOLVING UPON THE ENGINEERING DEPARTMENT.

Plans Are All Ready and Only Money Is Needed to Put Harbors and Seaports in Fine Defensive Condition—General Abbot's Career.

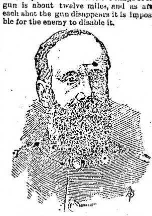
The recent diplomatic complications with Italy and the present attitude of Chili have directed the attention of the American people to the question of efficient seacoast defense.

The war department realized ten years back that the establishment of a strong coast and harbor defense would be an ample guarantee of peace, and consequently ordered a thorough investigation as to the best means by which American seaports could be thoroughly protected.

Some time has passed since plans were prepared for the fortification of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Hampton Roads, Washington, New Orleans, San Francisco and other cities, but lack of money has hitherto prevented the engineering department from prosecuting the work of construction. The gigantic task that sooner or later must be accomplished is only in an elementary stage. At the rate at which it is now carried on it will take at least fifteen years before anything like an efficient coast and harbor system of defense can be completed. There is, however, every hope that the next congress will be liberal in its appropriations for this purpose.

The engineering department is now constructing fortifications, mortar, dynamite gun and disappearing batteries at New York, Boston, Baltimore and San Francisco, while other cities are to receive their share of modern coast rifles, for which contracts amounting to about $3,000,000 have been recently placed. The mortar batteries consist of several guns each, which are hidden behind heavy earthworks at points along the shore where they can command a long seaward range.

A shell from one of these iron monsters weighs 623 pounds and will travel five miles with an initial velocity of 1,500 feet per second and pierce easily the protective steel deck of an ironclad. The shell loaded with powder and exploding on a vessel's deck will cause great destruction of life. The disappearing batteries consist of only one heavy gun each, which throws a shell of 1,050 pounds. The effective range of this gun is about twelve miles, and as after each shot the gun disappears it is impossible for the enemy to disable it.



GENERAL HENRY LARCOM ABBOT.

The new plans for coast and harbor defense are highly creditable to the capability and ingenuity of the engineer corps. Among the most prominent officers of this corps is General Henry Larcom Abbot, the director of the board of fortifications and engineers. This eminent officer and war scientist is known far beyond the borders of the United States as one of the best authorities in the art of modern military engineering. It is with a feeling of pride that the writer pays tribute to so distinguished a soldier. Most of the new plans are of General Abbot's creation, and they all reflect his genius and practical skill. Apart from his success in this direction he has worked hard to develop the general art of military engineering in America, and the existence of the engineer school of application at Willet's Point is due to his efforts.

General Abbot was born in Beverly, Mass., Aug. 13, 1831. He was graduated at West Point in 1854, and then became brevet second lieutenant of topographical engineers. He was subsequently employed in the office of the Pacific railroad surveys at Washington. One year afterward he was transferred to the survey of the route between California and Oregon. It was not, however, until the civil war that Abbot's capabilities were fully appreciated. He was then engaged as a military engineer and took part in various actions, being seriously wounded at Bull Run. After the war he was brevetted brigadier general United States army, and in 1880 he was made lieutenant colonel of engineers.

For a quarter of a century he has studied the coast and harbor defenses of America, and on the subject of high explosives he is regarded as an authority in Europe as well as in the United States.

He has also invented and developed a system of submarine mines for coast and harbor defense, and has held positions as a member of the engineer board on United States military bridge equipage and drill and on the board for the protection of the alluvial region of the Mississippi against inundations. He has likewise been connected with nearly every board on fortifications and river and harbor improvements. At present he is director of engineers and the board of fortifications.

The United States government sent him in 1870 to Sicily to observe the solar eclipse which took place during that year, and his work there, as elsewhere, was performed with complete satisfaction. Among his most noted literary productions the following deserve special mention: "Physics and Hydraulics of the Mississippi," which he jointly published in 1861 with Captain A. A. Humphreys; "Siege Artillery in the Campaign Against Richmond;" "United States Bridge Equipage and Drill," 1870; "Experiments and Investigations to Develop a System of Submarine Mines for Harbors of the United States," 1881; "Report of Gun Foundry," 1884, and "Report of the Board on Fortifications or Other Defenses," 1886.

General Abbot is now sixty years old. He is a man of medium height, with iron gray hair and a full beard. His large gray eyes are very expressive and glow with intelligence and affability. The high forehead reveals the thinker. He is greatly esteemed by his superiors and beloved by the officers of his corps.

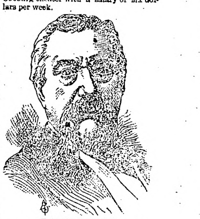
LIEUT. F. DE THUMMEL CLOTH.

The provisions for the future maintenance of public schools in the partially settled northwest provinces of Canada are on a large scale. Saskatchewan has set apart 8,648,000 acres of land for that purpose, Assiniboia 8,040,000 acres and Alberta 8,200,000 acres.

A WRITER OF SONGS.

A Once Famous Man Now Enjoying a Green Old Age.

Professor F. Nicholls Crouch, the composer of the music for "Kathleen Mavourneen," was born in Warren street, Fitzroy square, parish of St. Pancras, Marylebone, London, on July 31, 1808. He was the second son of F. W. Crouch, a violoncellist, and Anna Maria, daughter of Nicholls, a barrister. At the age of nine he began his professional career in the Royal Coubourg theater with a salary of six dollars per week.



F. NICHOLLS CROUCH.

After reaching maturity and gaining considerable knowledge of vocal and instrumental music he entered the orchestra of Drury Lane as seventh violoncello, a position from which he rose, year after year, until he reached the principal desk, to which he was appointed by Henry R. Bishop. Crouch's voice had developed with his physical growth and he studied with William Hawes, soon becoming a chorister in the Abbey and St. Paul's under Thomas Attwood, and finally a student in the Royal Academy of Music. This experience culminated in the honors of the Philharmonic and Ancient concerts, the King's band, the Italian opera, and in playing nightly in the presence of royalty.

At the time he composed "Kathleen Mavourneen" (1835) he was a recluse in his chambers in Great Titchfield street. A lamentable marriage had terminated in disgrace and separation. After placing his daughters in foreign schools, he lived a hermit existence, except when engaged at the music festivals or in lecturing throughout the United Kingdom, with occasional visits to Ireland.

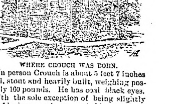
In 1849 he came to America and in Portland, Me., first produced Rossini's "Stabat Mater." In Philadelphia he gave "Joseph and His Brethren" and Locke's music in "Macbeth." In Washington he conducted the choir of St. Matthew's church, and in 1860 he was an assistant in the musical services of St. Paul's church, Richmond.

While at the most successful point of his varied career the civil war burst upon the country, and influenced by his surroundings he joined the Richmond Howitzers and served during the entire conflict as a Confederate.

After Appomattox he trudged toward Buckingham Court House, resting at the mansion of Tom Perkins, with whom he found employment as farm laborer and gardener, gradually developing into a music teacher of the Misses Perkins and other ladies in the vicinity. Later he returned to Richmond, wrote for Southern Opinion, taught music, married the daughter of a poor farmer near Staunton, and in 1877 removed to Baltimore. In the early spring of 1883 Crouch was visited by a stranger, James Roche, a paymaster's clerk in the United States navy, who manifested an enthusiastic interest, and stated his desire to have legal measures taken by which he could become the self adopted son of a man whose plaintive music had thrilled a world.

To use Crouch's own language, "the legal forms were complied with, and in that relation he stands to me to-day. Father and son are in constant correspondence and the man of many trials now confines himself to literary pursuits, composing music and contemplating the muses, his mind and creative faculties as fertile in this, the last quarter of the Nineteenth century, as they were in the first."

It is a matter of personal knowledge that a goodly portion of the monthly pay of James Roche-Crouch is sent regularly to his adopted father.



WHERE CROUCH WAS BORN.

In person Crouch is about 5 feet 7 inches tall, stout and heavily built, weighing possibly 160 pounds. He has coal black eyes. With the sole exception of being slightly deaf he bears no impress of old age. Until a few years ago his hair and thick, long mustache were jet black. A physical peculiarity is an ear with immense lower lobe clinging close to the side of his head. He lives at 220 Parkin street, in a section that has the nearest approach to a tenement house system in Baltimore. Four times has he entered the connubial state. Cora Pearl, the notorious beauty of Paris, was a daughter by his second marriage, and he has been the father of thirty-three children. Of fully a third of these he has no knowledge. By his last wife, who is thirty six years his junior, he has three girls and two boys, the eldest of which, Joseph, is a simple minded lad of nineteen.

Trains Delayed by Leaves.

Railway engineers in Connecticut, according to a New London paper, have experienced much difficulty of late in running their trains on time, "owing to the fall of leaves upon the tracks. The Housatonic road has suffered most through the long stretches of woodland which the road passes. It has been impossible for the section hands on the different divisions to keep the tracks free from them. The result is that when the wheels of the locomotive pass over them the sap from the leaves makes the rails slippery, and the obstruction is as bad as hail, snow or ice. It is even worse, as the leaves refuse to melt or freeze, but stick to the rails until dried up."

A Muscular Son of Maine.

The strong man of Corinna, Me., is named A. M. Burton, and his physical development sometimes gets him out of trouble. The other day his horse balked upon a railroad crossing as a train was approaching, and everybody expected a crash. But the strong man got out, seized the horse by the bridle and pulled the whole outfit off the track in time to avoid a collision.

AT CHRISTMASTIDE.

The merry, merry bells rang out upon the frosty morn,
They chimed the song that angels sung when Christ the Lord was born:
"O peace on earth, good will to men," the chorus rolled and died
In far reverberations on this blessed Christmastide.

O! bring the holly branches and the boughs of mistletoe
And twine them both together here within the fire-light glow,
Forgetting all of bitterness, of rankling and pride,
Let each be reconciled to each this gladsome Christmastide.

Let all the sweet old songs be sung, the dear old stories told,
The dross of Life all overlaid with what is life's pure gold,
Let pain and disappointment be but chastenings sanctified,
And heart shall answer unto heart this joyous Christmastide.

Long, long our silvern-throated bells shall echo out their chime,
Far-reaching waves of promise unto every race and clime,
And year shall follow after year until the One who died
On Calvary, shall come to claim his own at Christmastide.

—Mary Clark Huntington.

A PRAIRIE CHRISTMAS STORY.

In a log cabin on Thompson Creek, in Central Kansas, lived a widow named Campbell and her only son Grant.

Mrs. Campbell, her husband, two boys—Grant and Sherman—and daughter Katy, aged fourteen, just at the close of the Civil War had moved from Connecticut and, like thousands of others, taken up a Government claim of one hundred and sixty acres in the "New West."

The Indians had not yet been placed on "Reservations," and they were surly, defiant and murderous, because of this intrusion by the whites into the country they claimed as their own. For three or four years they made raids on the sparsely-settled region, butchering and carrying into captivity hundreds of inoffensive "homesteaders."

Only a few months after the Campbells had arrived, built their rude but comfortable cabin, and begun to feel happy in their new and strange surroundings, the Cheyennes made a raid through the State; but, fortunately, the Campbells received news of their coming in time to reach Fort Ellsworth, thus escaping the fury and vengeance of the Indians.

When the Indians were driven back the Campbells returned, and remained in a sort of fancied security on their farm all that winter, adding little by little to their comforts through hard work and economy until the next fall, when Mr. Campbell and the boys had harvested their small crops. One beautiful September morning the father had gone into the meadow of wild-grass with a couple of neighbors to stack the hay cured the day before; Sherman had left home early for the village, twelve miles away, to make some purchases for the family, while Grant, who was only twelve years old, remained at home to cut wood and help his mother.

Just before noon, Grant having been sent to the field for potatoes, Katy mounted her little bay pony "Barty" with her father's dinner, and started for the meadow, two miles away. The meadow was about three hundred yards wide, flanked on both sides by a heavy growth of timber.

Katy was an expert and dashing young horsewoman. Her pony possessed a wonderful amount of endurance. He was one of that small species bred in Texas on the Rio Grande, famous for their hardy nature and ability to make long, wearisome journeys on prairie-grass alone.

When the happy girl reached the meadow she saw, at its upper end, her father on a stack, and the two neighbors pitching the freshly-made hay up to him. She rode up, and had gotten within a couple of hundred yards of where they were, when, to her horror, she saw her father fall head first from the stack, and the neighbor nearest to him also tumble to the ground. At the same instant the report of two rifles rang out.

Before she could utter a single cry, ten Indians rushed out of their ambush, all but two mounted. Regaining her dazed senses, but dumb with fear, she turned Barty's head, and fairly flew down the level "bottom" towards her home. She had not been quick enough, however, and in a few moments found herself surrounded by the painted fiends.

KATY MOUNTED HER PONY."

Pale with terror, she was led to the hay-stack, where she was compelled to witness one of the red devils wrench off the reeking scalp of her poor dead father and that of the other victim of the brutal murder. How the second neighbor escaped from the meadow the unfortunate child could never tell, her own mental suffering was so awful. To add to her misery, she saw the two Indians who were at first on foot go into the timber and presently emerge mounted, one of them riding the very horse on which her brother Sherman had started for the village that morning!

After a short pow-wow, the savages rode off south, forcing the terrified girl to accompany them. And there we will leave her for the present, inviting the reader to return with us to the cabin and learn how things were there.

Night came on, but, of course, neither Katy, Sherman or Mr. Campbell arrived.

Early the next morning, after Mrs. Campbell and Grant had passed the long, weary hours in horrible mental torture, the neighbor who had somehow mysteriously escaped murder in the hay-field came to tell her the dreadful fate of her husband, son and daughter, which he broke to her as gently as his rough, honest nature permitted.

The next day there was a sad burial in the rude cemetery of the settlement, where father and son—who had been found dead and scalped on his way to the village—were placed in the same grave.

Weeks dragged on. Mrs. Campbell had settled into a calm resignation which time fortunately brings. Grant, the dutiful son that he was, suddenly became a man, as it were, so faithfully and earnestly did he do the duty the care of the farm demanded, and cater to the every want of his widowed mother.

The afternoon of the twenty-fourth of December came, three months and a half since the dreadful tragedy that had made the once happy home desolate; and Mrs. Campbell was deploring the fact that she had no turkey for the morrow's Christmas dinner.

Grant wished he could gratify her, but he had no turkey and no gun. Just before sundown, as was his wont, he mounted his horse and went out after the cows. As he was riding slowly along, his animal stumbled into an abandoned coyote hole, throwing him headlong—but without hurting him—into the tall "blue-stem" with which the prairie was covered. Strange as it may appear, he fell right on top of an immense wild turkey hiding in the grass; his hands instinctively clutched it when he tumbled, to save himself. With great presence of mind and delight, he clung to it, rose, drew his jack-knife, cut off its head and tied it behind his saddle, mounted, hurried after the cows, brought them home, shut them in the corral, and then rushed into the house to his mother and showed her his prize.

The sun had not fairly risen next morning before mother and son were both up. Grant picked the turkey, and Mrs. Campbell cooked it.

By noon everything was ready, and just as Mrs. Campbell was going to place the turkey on the table, old Cyrus, the dog, who was lying in the shade of one of the big trees, suddenly set up a most terrible barking, which, of course, caused both Grant and his mother to go to the door, as Cyrus never made any fuss unless some one was coming.

Imagine their surprise to see coming up the trail through the woods a miserably thin-looking horse, on which sat a young woman, hatless, barefooted, her dress a mass of rags.

Mrs. Campbell stood with dish-cloth in hand, watching the strange apparition as it slowly approached, wondering who it could be, while Grant was equally puzzled. Presently, as the visitor drew nearer, she cried out:

"Mother, oh, mother, don't you know me?"

At the sound of her child's voice—which a mother never forgets—Mrs. Campbell dropped her dish-cloth, fainted away, and would have fallen upon the ground if Grant had not caught her in his arms.

"MOTHER, OH, MOTHER, DON'T YOU KNOW ME?"

Katy jumped from her horse and rushed to the assistance of her mother, who soon recovered from her shock, and then there was a scene of unspeakable joy.

They went into the house, while poor "Barty" was led to his old, familiar quarters, and they all sat down to a dinner that was truly a feast of joy and of thanksgiving, for one of the lost was found.

During the happy meal Katy told the story of her escape from the savages.

Immediately after her capture she was hurried south as rapidly as the horse could go for five days and nights, until she arrived at the Cheyenne camp on the Washita, beyond the Canadian River. Here, to her surprise, she was treated kindly, and placed in charge of some old squaws, but nearly frightened to death, because she expected some horrible fate. But she was safe, for the Indians anticipated a large sum from the Government for her surrender unharmed.

She was watched very closely for weeks, until she appeared to become resigned to her position. Then they relaxed their vigilance somewhat, and that was what the sensible girl was waiting for, as she had determined to attempt an escape, feigning contentment, though her mental torture was almost unbearable.

Katy had been an excellent scholar in the public schools at her old home in the East, and, when she arrived in Kansas, became an earnest student of Nature. She knew something of astronomy, and was perfectly familiar with the flora of her new home; she discovered, independently of textbooks, that the "rosin-weed," which grows all over the great plains of the West, always turns the edges of its broad leaves to the north and south, their surfaces coinciding with the line of the magnetic meridian, hence termed the compass or pilot-plant, and she used her knowledge to advantage, or she would never have found her way home across the trackless prairies, three hundred and seventy miles away!

TYING BARTY'S LARIAT TO A ROCK.

One dark night, having taken her bearings during the day-time for more than a week by the compass-plant, and now having the North Star for her guide, Katy carefully crept out while all the savages were sound asleep. She stood for a moment perfectly quiet. Not a sound disturbed the stillness. The dogs never uttered a growl; she had taken particular pains to cultivate their friendship, and they merely gathered around her in little groups, wagged their tails and then retired to their holes.

She carefully picked up her saddle and bridle and walked cautiously towards the herd of ponies picketed beyond the creek.

Presently she came to a huge old cottonwood. From a hole in its decayed trunk she drew out a "hide-budget," containing dried buffalo and antelope meat, which she had hidden there from time to time for this journey.

She then called "Barty" in a low voice. He came trotting up to her, so perfect was his affection for her, and was just about saluting her with a welcoming neigh, when she dexterously caught him by the nostrils, and, pressing them tightly, suppressed it. It would have raised the whole camp!

Quickly putting on the saddle and bridle and tying the "budget" behind, she wound the picket rope around his neck, and mounted, turning his head to the north. In a few moments Barty struck a narrow trail leading in that direction, and commenced his easy lope.

Katy could hear her own heart beat, so terrible was her excitement as she rode on in the awful solitude, every few moments looking behind to see if she was pursued. But on and on she went, not a sound breaking the silence except the hoofs of her faithful pony striking the hard trail.

Daylight had not yet come when she reached the Canadian, thirty miles from the camp on the Washita, where she watered Barty, bathed her feverish head, and swallowed a few mouthfuls herself.

By the time the sun was up she had made fifteen more miles, and had entered the broken country beyond the Canadian; here she knew that her pony must rest and graze. She turned off the trail into a small canon where there was plenty of grass, and where luckily she discovered a spring.

Tying Barty's lariat to a good-sized rock, she sat down on the grass near the spring, ate some of her meat and drank some of the water; then, tired nature asserting itself, the excited and worn-out child fell asleep.

When she awoke the sun had set, the sky was overcast, and Barty was standing over her. The bewildered girl gazed around her wildly for a moment before she could realize her situation, and then, looking at the heavens, saw, to her great sorrow, that she could not proceed, as her guiding-star was not visible.

At last, about daylight, she saw on the hillside several coyotes skulking along, and, not familiar with the cowardly brutes, their presence greatly alarmed her. So she hurriedly ate a few mouthfuls, saddled her pony and rode back to the "divide" she had left the day before. When she reached the trail she examined one of the "compass-plants" growing there, and found, to her delight, that the trail, which broadened out at that point, ran in the direction she wanted to go, and she loped out on it at a five-miles-an-hour gait.

Nothing disturbed the monotony of her journey but her own fears, until, just about dark, she arrived at the Beaver or North Fork of the Canadian, eighty miles from where she had started. Here she rested until midnight.

After a good rest and sound sleep she started on her lonely way again. Her dress now began to tear in ribbons, she had worn it so long, and she lost her hat before morning, not daring to stop to look for it.

Two more days of travel brought her to the Arkansas. By that time she presented a sorry picture, and the faithful Barty, too, commenced to show the effects of his hard work. She met on the "Old Santa Fe Trail," which ran close to the river here, a "caravan" going to Mexico, who kindly fed her and showed her the way to Thompson Creek, only thirty-five miles away, where she arrived the next noon, in time to eat her share of the Christmas turkey, having made her terrible journey in five days!—Henry Inman.

FUTURE OF SALTON SEA.

The Winter Floods Will Greatly Augment Its Volume of Water.

Dr. P. G. Cotter of Yuma was in the city recently, says a Los Angeles correspondent of the San Francisco Examiner. In a conversation in reference to the present condition of the Salton sea, the doctor said that it is estimated that nine-tenths of the Colorado river is flowing into it. The sea is not increased in depth by the feeding, but it has lowered about three inches. It is now from four to seven feet in depth in various places.

The river leaves its bed about fourteen miles below Yuma, where the elevation above the sea level is 143 feet. It flows in precipitous plunges, many of them in the nature of cataracts, down dozens of feet, wearing away the soil where it flows, and making the soil constantly more precipitous near the break in the river. It is therefore the fact that to reach the bottom of the Salton basin, a distance of 137 feet, the height that the break is above the sea, plus 263 feet, the depth that the Salton basin is below the sea, one must descend 400 feet.

Dr. Cotter states that the Colorado river water is very heavily charged with solids, and that it will precipitate a half-inch of alluvium to every six feet of water. This matter is being constantly washed down the river, and it is forming a bank in the river-bed just beyond this break, so that it will shortly be turned into the Salton sea. This winter floods, he thinks, will raise the Salton sea until it becomes a lake of 300 feet in depth and 150 miles long, and finds its outlet through the bed of New river into the gulf of Mexico.

Southern Pacific engineers have examined the river break with a view to finding some way to turn the river back into its old bed. They reported that such could be done by piling, but it would be too expensive for the company to undertake.

The cause of this break is explained by the doctor in this manner: The Colorado river flows as far as a point a few miles above Yuma directly south. At Yuma it meets the Yuma river, and turns to the west nearly at right angles. There it strikes a small mountain called Pilot Knob, and is changed again back to the south course. Recently, instead of flowing at an acute angle at Pilot Knob, the river has been making a turn from Yuma down into the south course bed, not reaching Pilot Knob at all. This threw the force of the stream against the west bank of the river, which soon washed that bank away and formed the break. The break would not have occurred had not the river left its bed near Pilot Knob.

The people of Yuma, the doctor says, are glad of the change, and the new sea will be a benefit to the climate, as well as provide them with a means of a new method of transportation, since vessels could come into the sea from the gulf of California.

Boulanger and Princess Carlotta.

Reminiscences of Boulanger are coming forth every day. Here is one that relates to the beginning of his fortune. He was with Marshal Bazaine in Mexico when Napoleon III. was hoping to establish an empire there. The Princess Carlotta and her husband were holding court there at the same time. The princess was a daring rider, and whenever she left the city for a ride she would gallop over the plains in a straight direction for miles, but no one of the court imagined that she was in danger at any time.

One hot afternoon Boulanger, who was then a captain and had command of the guard at the principal gate of the city, had just rolled a fresh cigarette and was about to light it when he saw a small cloud of dust in the distance, and he waited for the rider to approach nearer, supposing him to be a courier. But a few minutes afterward he saw that the galloping rider was the Princess Carlotta, and that she was being pursued by a small body of horsemen. He believed that the Mexicans were trying to capture her as a prize. Throwing away his cigarette he summoned the guard, ordered the gate thrown open, and rushed down the roadway, forming his men in line as the would-be kidnappers advanced. The princess galloped furiously onward and reached the gate in safety. Boulanger and the guard fired at her pursuers, and they, seeing that the princess had escaped from them, turned and galloped away. For that act, it is said, Boulanger was made a Mexican brigadier by Maximilian. When Boulanger returned to Paris Napoleon greeted him very cordially and spoke of the incident. From that day he was a favorite.

A Big Creamery.

Vermont claims the largest creamery in the world. It is at St. Albans. The building is three stories high and has 9,000 square feet of floor surface. The first floor is used for receiving the milk, separating the cream, and churning. In the second story is the cream-room, in which are ten tanks, with a capacity of 600 gallons. Tubs, salt, and boxes are stored on the third floor. The milk of 12,000 cows is made into butter here, 10,000 pounds of butter being the daily product. A carload of salt is used by the creamery every two months. Sixty persons are employed, included a chemist, whose business is to ascertain by tests how much the milk of different herds is worth. His test is made in the following manner: "He carefully measures a small quantity of milk into a flask, adds acid to take out the curd, and puts it into a centrifugal machine to bring out the butter fat. After revolving for a few minutes at 1,000 revolutions a minute the butter fat has risen into the neck of the flask, where the percentage can be read easily on a graduated scale. The average of butter fat in the milk is a trifle under 4 per cent, but the extremes are 3.25 and 4.75. This method demonstrates almost absolutely butter-making qualities of a herd, and will raise the standard of cows wherever it is followed, as no dairyman will continue to keep cows that give poor milk."

It is astonishing how debts will expand after being contracted.—Binghamton Republican.

CHRISTMAS GUESTS.

An Australian Poem.

"The loneliest night of all the year!"
The sick man murmured with a weary moan:
"And I shall spend, without a creature near,
Another dreary Christmas-tide alone!"

A wooden shanty, common, rough, and bare,
Rude shelter offered to a suffering man;
Its door flung open to the warm night air,
Courting, in vain, a breeze his cheek to fan.

A man well on in years; deep-lined and gray
His brow, and those scant locks which o'er it hung;
One who had lost, he had been heard to say,
All that he had lived for while he still was young.

A world-worn wand'rer on the face of earth,
Whom Death and Sorrow, in an evil time,
Had driven from the country of his birth
To lonely labor in an Austral clime.

Where, toiling without heart, to keep alive
A life he did not cherish, he had failed,
As hopeless toilers fail 'mid those who strive;
For sorry life alone his gains availed.

Half-dressed, and flung upon his restless bed,
He, burning-eyed, gazed out upon the night;
Gazed from the glowing darkness overhead
To where the distant township's lamps shone bright.

"Full many kindly souls," he muttered low,
"Feasting and laughing on this Christmas Eve,
Did they my dire extremity but know
Would gladly seek my suff'rings to relieve.

"And who am I, to wrap me in my pride,
Scorning to ask what would be freely given?
Yet, no! I cannot beg!" he feebly cried,
"Help, to be help for me, must come from Heav'n!"

E'en as he spoke, high in the vast dark blue,
A meteor, loosened from its viewless ties,
Across the star-flow'red fields of ether flew,
Like some grand fire-winged bird of paradise.

Its trailing lustre shed a transient gleam
Upon two figures at the open door,
Whose faces brightened with a tender beam
The lonely hut that was so dim before.

A woman and a child! Was he distraught,
That neither fear nor wonder held him bound
To we come beings who, his reason taught,
Had slept for twenty years in English ground?

Why should he fear them? Were they not his own—
The wife, the child—with whom his heart had died?
What wonder if, when he was sick and lone,
They left their Heaven for service at his side?

Hand clasped in hand they crossed his threshold now,
Smiling upon their loved one as they came;
They spoke no word, but kissed his pain-dewed brow,
And coolness fell upon his frame.

How 'twas he knew not—but within a space
That seemed no longer than a moment's flight—
A happy change had come upon the place,
And all around him streamed a soft, clear light.

The child was hanging garlands ev'rywhere
Familiar wreaths of holly's glossy green,
Of laurel and of bay: while here and there
Gleamed marv'lous unknown blooms of snowy sheen.

The mother spread the table for a feast,
As though resuming old, sweet household care;
And he, in whom all sense of pain had ceas'd,
Was gently led this wondrous meal to share.

What was his fare, that Eve of Christmas morn?
He cannot tell us, and he only could;
But, if 'twere not a dream of weakness born,
He, for the first time, tasted angels' food!

Then, smiling still, they held his feeble hands,
And sweetly raised that old, old hymn of praise,
That echoes on through widest-sundered lands,
In Christian hearts all earthly Christmas Days.

"Come all ye faithful!" Were they calling him?
Bidding him seek a heavenly Bethlehem?
He smiled in answer as his eyes grew dim,
And strove to rise that he might follow them.

"Joyful and triumphant!" Ah! such harmonies
Thrilled through the humble hut, as human ear,
Unhelp'd by angel-teachers from the skies,
Has never heard, may never hope to hear.

Grandly it rose and swelled, that Christmas song!
Surely all the choirs of Heaven joined the strain—
That mighty stream of praise that bore along
Upon its flood a being freed from pain!

* * * * * * * *

When his next neighbors, on the Christmas-Day,
Some friendly impulse to his shanty led,
Calm, placid, still, upon his bed he lay,
A smile was on his face—and he was dead!

—Lindsay Duncan.

Out of His Head.

Guzzleton (about to depart after a Christmas dinner at his club)—Shay, are you sure thish ish my hat?

Waiter—Yes, sir, there's your name in it.

Guzzleton (looking in the mirror)—Well, then, I wonder 'f I hain't borrowed some other feller's (hic) head!

Eastern capitalists have bought 640 acres of land near Pomona, California, and will set out 73,000 fig trees. They will equip the orchard with irrigation pipes, ditches, etc., and put up extensive drying-houses.

PURSUED BY WOLVES.

A Hunter Who Gets His Work in on Them in Great Shape.

I went hunting last Monday morning, says a writer in the Franklin Sun. About 8 o'clock I saddled and mounted my horse and started for the woods with "Punch," my dog, and a young pup following me. After riding for several miles I looked for the pup, but he was missing. I blew my horn for him but he would not come, so I rode on, and after going several miles I heard something howl, which I thought was my pup. I stopped, and in a few minutes the howling was repeated. In less than one minute I saw five wolves advancing. They were in the direction of the howling, and it was them that did it.

When they were within fifty yards of me they commenced to howl again and kept advancing with their tails curled, hair standing on their backs, and looking as though they were bloodthirsty. I sat perfectly still on my horse, thinking they would take to flight should they see me. But I was mistaken. When about twenty yards from me they began to growl like savage dogs, and I could see they were glaring at me. I thought it was time for me to commence work, so with a double-barreled breech-loader I fired on one of the largest. It retreated badly wounded. In a moment I was ready for another. Of course I was expecting to shoot as they ran off, as wolves are very wild. But to my great astonishment the remaining four were still advancing.

I had no time to tarry, so I fired again, and twelve buckshot entered the head of a large brindle male wolf, which was not more than a rod from me. I loaded very quickly, and my next target was a dark, red female. She was not so close—about fifteen rods—but was still coming and growling like a dog. At the crack of my gun she fell into her tracks, and without taking the gun from my shoulder I killed another not more than four or five feet from her. I loaded again, and the fifth wolf was retreating. All my buckshot was gone, but I sprinkled him with a load of squirrel-shot and he fell, but rose again and ran off. Punch was not in sight of me when I began to shoot, but he came just as I shot the last wolf. I put him after the one I wounded, and he ran it some 300 yards or more and bayed. I galloped up, shot it again, and it fell to the earth dead. I then amputated its feet, went back to the battle-ground, did the same for two more, put the fourth on my horse, and, after looking in vain for the first one I shot, started on my homeward trip.

Watermarks on Paper.

The first watermark on record was the coat of arms of a town. The early paper-makers were not slow to adopt this idea in impressing upon their sheets the device of the place where their mill was situated. For instance, the coat of arms of the village of Rives, a dolphin, is a common mark on old papers. This mark is still in use today. The first use of the watermark was then as a signature, or emblem, to point out the place of manufacture and to recommend the material. For all that, certain of these emblems were used by different makers, and even in different countries, with slight variations, "brisures," as they are called in heraldry, which were evidently not accidental, but intentional. The letter "P," used by numberless makers, is a good watermark to take as an example, since we find that not only is there an endless variety of forms of the letter in the product of different mills, but the same mark modified the "brisures" of the letter on different qualities of his paper. Another use for the watermark is more evident still. The name of the principal sizes of "papier verge" have been handed down to us, and the whole of these have suggested watermarks. Rising from the smallest sheet to the largest, they are as follows: Bell, pot, ecu (a 3-franc piece), crown, shell, grape, large grape, jesus, great eagle, and great world. The size "jesus" was indicated by the letter "j," the rest by their emblems. In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries the members of each trade guild were compelled to mark their merchandise with the seal of their guild.—Paper Record.

Old Furniture Not Sought Now.

There is a local collector who at one time used to do a thriving business by collecting in his travels ancient pieces of furniture. He owns his occupation is about gone. He talks about it in this way: "Beginning about ten years back the craze for following up auctions and buying old furniture set in in the country. In the cities it dated away back of that. The first symptom of the disease was old clocks. Some of them were fair looking, and some were not. After clocks, chairs set in, fiddle-back chairs mostly. I've sold them as high as $10 each many a time. Then old writing-desks caught on. When you come to look at it, there's more sense in buying an old desk than in any other old piece, for modern builders have made not so much improvement in these goods. In old times there were no safes used in houses to give secure keeping to the law and family documents, so it was necessary to have some receptacle for them. An old desk of curled maple and slanting front, its lots of little pigeon holes, sly locks and drawer-room, is really a valuable piece of furniture. Buffets and other furniture had their turn. Owners of houses out in the country and the dwellers in provincial cities are now the only people who can be roped in for old furniture. Old furniture which has belonged to somebody else, and old furniture any way, is a fad of the past." —N. Y. Dry Goods Chronicle.

A New Christmas Game.

The new Christmas game will be very fashionable this year. The players hunt through their pocketbooks to see how much money they have left. The one who has the most has to buy a present for New Years.

Sea Captain—"There is no hope! The ship is doomed! In an hour we will all be dead!" Seasick Passenger—"Thank Heaven!"—N. Y. Weekly.

LOVE FOR A DAY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "DORA THORNE," "A DEAD HEART," "TWO KISSES," "THE FATAL LILIES," ETC.

CHAPTER XII.

That evening Lady Yorke came to my room. She was always kind and considerate to me.

"You have not been well to-day, Miss Chester. Masham tells me that you have had one of your bad headaches. Are you better? You look very pale and changed in some way. I came to ask you if you would bring your music to the drawing-room this evening. It would be a great help to me."

I thought for a few moments before I answered her. I could crush down my own pain and anguish, for I had plenty of self-control; and I longed to see Mark's wife. How the words pierced my heart—"Mark's wife!" I kissed the white jewelled hand laid so kindly on my shoulder, and said what was true—that I would do anything to please Lady Yorke.

"If you feel tired," she said, "do not join us for a little while; come later on. And, Miss Chester, make yourself look nice. We must not let Lady Severne think herself the handsomest woman in the world. Bring some of your best songs. Lord Severne is very fond of music."

I knew that. Had I not sung to him a hundred times by the river and in the woods?

That evening it seemed to me that I was about to rival Mark's wife. Was it foolish or wicked that I went to my wardrobe for the long, plain, blue silk dress that Mark liked, and that I made the most of my golden hair, that I found some white roses for it, and that I tried to look bright and happy while my heart was dead?

I need not speak of the other guests. My story deals only with Mark and Mark's wife. Lady Yorke introduced me to all her visitors. I had gone to the drawing-room before the gentlemen had left the dining-room. I could not have entered with Mark looking at me. I remember no names, no faces; my whole soul seemed waiting until we reached Mark's wife.

"Lady Severne," said the clear voice by my side; and, raising my eyes, I saw Mark's wife—the most beautiful, brilliant, dazzling woman I had ever beheld.

She had the vivid bloom of a carnation, a face of exquisite Grecian type, a wide low brow, straight dark eyebrows, lovely mouth, though the lines and curves were rather proud than tender, a beautiful chin with a delicious dimple. As I thought of Mark kissing those lovely lips, the pain in my heart was more bitter than death. A superb woman, with dark blue eyes and dark hair, she was dressed in white velvet, relieved by a rich bordering of purple heart's-ease; a diamond necklace clasped the white, firm throat, a diamond cross lay on her white breast; and the very moment I stood before her I noticed the sweet odor of violets.

Mark's wife! She looked at me with a kindly smile; and then I noticed that there was something peculiar in her face. I did not like it, beautiful, brilliant as it was. There was a vague inexplicable something—a metallic brightness in the eyes, a hard, peculiar color on her cheeks. Love for Mark, interest quickened by affection, made me wonder, and, as I looked at her, so beautiful, so brilliant, I asked myself, "What was his sorrow? What was the secret that clouded his life? What was the mystery that sapped all the pleasure and happiness of his existence? What could it be?"

Lady Severne drew aside the folds of her velvet dress, and asked me to take a seat by her side.

"Lady Yorke tells me that you have a beautiful voice, Miss Chester," she said. "I hope you will sing for us. Lord Severne is fond of music."

Long before her fair face had wiled Mark from me I knew that. What would she say if she knew that I was Mark's first love, that——? Ah, what nonsense! Was I mad? Mark was no longer for me. She talked to me kindly enough for a few minutes. I felt, rather than knew, that there was something strange about her, but I could not define it.

The gentlemen came in. My only hope lay in not looking at Mark. I was keenly, painfully conscious of his presence. I knew where he went; when he spoke, I heard no other sound. But my eyes never sought him. Even when Lady Yorke introduced me to him, I never saw him; but five minutes afterwards, when I went to the piano, the music fell from my nerveless hands. Ah, woe was me! The first song I found was this—"Remember and Forget."

"I sat beside the streamlet:
I watched the waters flow,
As we together watched it
One little year ago.
The soft rain pattered on the leaves,
The April grass was wet—
Ah, folly to remember!
'Tis wiser to forget.

'The nightingales made musical
June's palace paved with gold;
I watched the rose you gave me
Its warm red heart unfold.
But sight of rose and song of bird
Were fraught with wild regret—
'Tis madness to remember;
'Twere wisdom to forget.

"I stood among the gold corn—
Alas, no more I knew!—
To gather gleaner's measure
Of the love that fell from you—
For me no gracious harvest—
Would God we ne'er had met!
For, cruel as remembrance is,
'Tis harder to forget.

"The streamlet now is frozen,
The nightingales are fled,
The corn-fields are deserted,
And ev'ry rose is dead.
I sit beside my lonely fire,
And pray for wisdom yet,
For calmness to remember, or
For courage to forget."

There was no sound in the room as the last notes died away. I knew they had gone straight to Mark's heart, for he left the group of ladies with whom he had been talking, and went to one of the great bay windows. The May sun had set, and the light was dead in the sky.

Lady Yorke's voice broke the spell. She was asking for her favorite, and the words came readily to me—Virginia Gabriel's beautiful song "Ruby."

"I opened the leaves of a book last night—
The dust on its cover lay dusk and brown;
As I held it towards the waning light
A withered flow'ret fell rustling down.
'Twas only the wraith of a woodland weed,
Which a dear dead hand in the days of old
Had placed 'twixt the pages she loved to read
At the time when my news of love was told;
And memory sweet, but as sad as sweet,
Swift flooded mine eyes with regretful tears
As the dry dim harebell skimmed past my feet,
Recalling an hour from the vanished years.

"Once more I was watching her deep-fringed eyes,
Bent over the Tasso upon her knee,
And the fair face blushing with sweet surprise
At the passionate pleading that broke from me,
Ah, Ruby, my darling, the small white hand
That gathered the harebell was never my own,
But faded and passed to the far-off land,
And I dreamt by the flickering flame alone.
I gathered the flower and I closed the leaves,
And folded my hands in silent prayer
That the reaper Death, as he seeks his sheaves,
Might hasten the hour of our meeting there."

Was I dreaming, or did my own voice die away in a wail of pain—die in a long-drawn bitter sob?

Lady Yorke was near me, and I saw tears in her eyes.

"One more, Miss Chester," she said. "Your songs are so sad and so sweet, they take me out of this world. One more, if you are not too tired."

I had forgiven Mark not very long since; but the longing was upon me to make him feel, to pierce his heart with some little of the anguish which had pierced mine. Never mind what I suffered, if I could send my words flying like barbed arrows across the room.

I looked at him. The handsome profile stood out clearly and distinctly. He stood gazing though the long window at the night-sky. Ah, yes, I would sting him into feeling. And this was my song—

A DEAD LOVE.

"Down deep in my heart, in its last calm sleep,
A dear dead love lies buried deep;
I clasped it once in a long embrace,
And closed the eyes and veiled the face
I never again might see.
I breathed no word and I shed no tear,
But the onward years looked dark and drear,
And I knew, by the throbs of mortal pain,
That a sweetness had fled which never again
Would in life come back to me.

"And dreams of the past, like roses, still shed
Their fragrance around my cherished dead;
While tears that ever are falling unseen,
Like soft summer rain, keep its memory green
As the turf of the churchyard sod.
And, weeping and waiting, I pray and wait
That an angel may open the golden gate;
For I think that the love of long ago,
Though cold and dead to me here below,
Will be mine in the rest of God."

There was a little stir in the room when my song was finished. The last words rang through my brain—"Will be mine in the rest of God." I had touched him. All those other men and women were nothing to me—only shadows. They had no identity. I saw moving figures, I heard voices, but to me Mark was there alone.

I saw a quiver of pain pass over his face. I had made him feel. Then, so true, so weak a woman was I that I longed to cross the room and kiss the pain away. The odor of violets came to me; Lady Severne was standing by my side.

"How exquisitely you sing, Miss Chester! You make me long for things that I have quite forgotten. How differently we should all live if we could lead our lives over again."

The brilliant face softened; the hard metallic light had died from her eyes. I liked her better in that moment than I had before. Then I heard Lady Yorke asking Mark to sing. I remembered the rich cheery voice that had trolled out many love songs.

"You never refused to sing for me in Italy," said Lady Yorke; "why refuse here?"

"Lord Severne has a beautiful voice and a perfect ear," Lady Severne remarked, turning to me.

It comforted me just a little to remember that I had known that long before she did. An uncontrollable trembling came over me, for Mark stood by my side.

"Will you play Lord Severne's accompaniment?" said Lady Yorke.

"I would rather not," I replied.

"I will," said Lady Severne; "I like to play for him."

Was he thinking of her or thinking of me? Not of me. He could not sing such words to me now; for the song he had chosen was Sullivan's beautiful "My Dearest Heart."

"All the dreaming is broken through;
Both what is done and undone I rue,
Nothing is steadfast, nothing is true,
But your love for me, and my love for you,
My dearest, dearest heart!

"When the winds are loud, when the winds are low,
When the roses come, when the roses go,
One thought, one feeling, is all I know,
My dearest, dearest heart!

"The time is weary, the year is old,
And the light of the lily burns close to the mold;
The grave is cruel, the grave is cold,
But the other side is the city of gold,
My dearest heart, my dearest heart!"

The lights and the flowers, the fair faces and jewels, swam before me. It seemed to me that I was faint and ill from the odor of violets. I went from the piano to the other end of the room. I could sing no more that night. A tall jardiniere, filled with exquisite white orchids, which stood near afforded me shelter, and from behind the white fragrant flowers I could see and hear all that passed. Lady Yorke came to me there and said that I must rest.

"You musical people take so much out of yourselves," she said. "You throw your whole souls into your songs. Look at Lord Severne. Who is his 'dearest heart,' I wonder?"

"Lady Severne," I replied, quickly.

But Lady Yorke shook her head.

"That is a marriage I cannot understand," she said, slowly; "but I begin to see what Lord Severne's secret is."

I would have given worlds for courage to ask her to explain her words, but I did not dare to do so.

She left me, and I watched husband and wife. There was something between them—some shadow. She seemed to me half afraid of him. He regarded her closely. He was ill at ease if she said much, if she laughed or attracted much attention. He reminded me of some one who had the care of a forward child always on the point of breaking out into mischief. They never looked at each other with eyes of trust or love. I had not watched them one half hour before I felt and saw that Mark was wretched.

What could it be? Lady Severne was beautiful, graceful, elegant, and well-bred. What could be wrong with her? There was something, I felt sure.

Later on that evening, when I sat with aching heart and tired eyes, longing for the hour of dismissal, Lady Yorke came to me again.

"You look so tired, Miss Chester," she said; "I will not ask you to sing."

We both glanced across the room to where Lady Severne, in her white velvet and diamonds, was the centre of a laughing group.

"How beautiful she is!" I said. The words seemed wrung from me in very bitterness of heart.

"Yes," said Lady Yorke. "It is a strange thing that the canker always eats the heart of the fairest rose;" and then, seeming vexed at her own words, she hastened to change the subject.

When she had gone, I looked long and earnestly at Mark's wife. What could be wrong with this beautiful woman? Nothing with her moral character, or she would not be here at Westwood. With all her nonchalance and indifference there was no prouder woman living than Lady Yorke. She would not have associated with a duchess who had a blot on her character. There could be nothing of that kind. I saw no blemish in Lady Severne's manner. She was lively, animated, but not "fast;" she was witty and clever, but not "loud." I lost myself in conjecture. One thing only was quite plain to me—there was something wrong with Mark's wife, and between them there was no love.

The days that followed were busy ones. The month of May was bright and warm. Lady Yorke enjoyed picnics, and several were organized.—Whatever flirtations were going on had no interest for me; I saw only Mark and Mark's wife. He and I never spoke, we never exchanged even a look; we were as perfect strangers. The only time we broke through our rule of silence was when he told me that he hoped I would forgive the intrusion of his presence, but that he could not leave Westwood so soon as he had intended; Lady Severne was not willing.

I did not go to any of the picnics.—Lady Yorke seemed to understand that I was neither well nor happy just then, and she was very kind to me. I noticed that once or twice Lady Severne was absent. She remained at home while the others went, and, on those days I saw uneasiness on Lady Yorke's face, and misery in Mark's eyes. On these occasions Lady Severne remained secluded in her own room, and her maid in strict attendance upon her.

That maid, Martha Glyde by name, was a puzzle to me. Prim, reticent, never using two words where one would suffice; kind, but with never a smile upon her face; gentle, yet with a certain grim manner—to me she soon became a mystery. I thought it so strange that a young and beautiful woman like Lady Severne should prefer a grim, old-fashioned, elderly person like Martha Glyde to a young and pretty maid with a fresh face and quick, tripping footsteps. Moreover, I was not sure in my own mind that Lady Severne did like her. The woman always assumed a tone of authority that I thought most unbecoming.

As yet I suspected nothing. I had no tangible reason for any of the shadowy fears that surrounded me. I had watched Lady Severne with eyes and instincts sharpened by love and by jealousy, but I saw nothing wrong.

One morning—it was almost the last in May, and the June roses were beginning to bloom—a picnic was arranged. Most of the county families had been invited. Lady Yorke had resolved upon giving an entertainment that should not soon be forgotten. A first-rate military band was one of the chief attractions, and every one looked forward to the day with delight. It had been decided to visit the old Abbey of St. Ninian—a magnificent ruin only a few miles from Woodheaton, and a favorite place of resort.

I was with Lady Yorke in her boudoir half an hour before the time for starting; she was telling me about her letters, when Lord Severne came to the door. Seeing me there, he did not enter. Lady Yorke went to him, and he spoke in a low tone of voice to her. I could see that they were both angry and amazed. Then Lady Yorke spoke in a soothing voice, as if she were trying to comfort him. Shortly afterwards he went away, and she returned to the writing-table, with a crimson flush on her face, and an angry gleam in her eyes. I saw that her hands trembled so that she could not hold her pen. She flung it impatiently upon the table.

"You must write this for me, Miss Chester," she said, quickly; "I am vexed and grieved;" and she walked to the window, and stood for some minutes looking out.

I knew that it must be something about Mark's wife—my instinct told me so—but I could not solve the mystery. On the previous night she had been unusually gay and animated. Indeed, Lord Severne had hovered near her, as though he feared her high spirits might "carry her away." What then could be wrong this morning? His voice, when he spoke to Lady Yorke, was full of pain.

I was right; for, when the long line of carriages started with their loads of gay pleasure-seekers, Lady Severne was not there, and her husband's dark, handsome face was clouded and distressed. I was weak enough, as I watched him from afar off, to stretch out my hands to him with a longing cry—

"Oh, Mark, my dear, lost love, what has gone wrong with you?"

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

A Patriot.

In 1861 it was decided to organize the clerks of the treasury department at Washington to defend the building and its contents against an anticipated attack. The following paper was presented to each employe to sign.

"I will defend the treasury, under the orders of the officer in charge of it, against all its enemies, to the best of my ability."

The pledge was not received with enthusiasm. They all, with one consent, began to make excuses.

There was an epidemic of heart and nervous diseases, which were always brought on by any sudden shock. But one old southerner put them to shame. He had been in the office half a century and belonged to an old Carolina family. His desk was in the basement of the treasury, where he had charge of surrendered ship's registers. Few of the other clerks knew him, for scarcely anyone had occasion to go to his desk.

"I never fired a gun in my life," he said. "I could not hit the side of a barn, and I have no doubt that I am a coward. But as long as the star-spangled banner waves I have something to live for. If I am too old to be of any other use I can at least act as a powder-monkey, and my body will stop a secession bullet with the best of you."

He seized the pen, and the name first signed to the paper was that of Francis Lowndes.—Recollections of Lincoln.

Protection Against Fire.

For protection against fire the town of Stillwater, Kan., has a way that is quite a novel one. Every business man has a barrel of water in front of his store, which is so fixed that the bung can be easily knocked out, and in case of a fire the barrels can soon be centered in one place. At a fire there last week they were successful in confining the fire to one place.

"Cleanliness next to godliness," remarked the man who set up a Turkish bath establishment adjoining a church.—Kate Field's Washington.

CONDUCT OF A WOMAN IN A HOTEL.

Things Which Try the Patience of the Knights of the Counter.

A woman in a hotel is worth seeing. She rings the bell three times to a man's once. She apologizes so profusely to the bell boy that he comes down-stairs with not an idea of what he is to do. She writes about eight letters a day and each envelope seems to contain at least three sheets of the hotel's paper. She sends the missives down one by one to be posted and "Ask the office, please, to put a stamp on for me," she says each time. She never makes out a wash list, but she "knows" just what she had, and one pair hasn't been returned. She refuses indignantly to confide more to "the office" when he inquires, but she is sure just how many were in, and "these have blue ribbons." She always regards the clerk as "the office," but he has his feelings and his modesty, just as if he were a person. She puts all sorts of things in the safe, but she is perfectly sure she put several things there that she didn't put there, and, of course, this makes it awkward for "the office," because he can't prove anything and she always "knows." She is always thunderstruck at the amounts paid for her bills, and she "knows" there is a mistake. The bills have to be produced, and even then she does not remember receiving the goods at all or buying them or anything. If she remembers afterward she comes down and explains to "the office" and apologizes, which makes him feel better. Sometimes she gets conscience-smitten about ringing the bell so much, and then she runs out, rings up the elevator, and gives the elevator-boy orders. Yet people wonder at so many elevator disasters. An elevator-boy's life has its ups and downs anyhow, but when the women come to giving him messages he loses his grip altogether and the elevator may take advantage of him.

The woman in a hotel expects the chambermaid to "see to" this, that and the other thing—sewing on a button, taking a stitch, hanging up her dresses, and helping her to put them on. The chambermaid is only a poor human being who has a lot of work to do and the housekeeper to keep an eye on her. But what of that? The lady asks her just the same: "Iron these out for me, Mary, there's a good girl;" or to "face up my dress, there's a dear," or to "put me in a few extra towels, do;" or "get me a cake of soap—I'm leaving this afternoon." She tacks photographs up on the wall—that she will do—and she cries right in the office before every one when she is charged extra for damage to walls. Then cards and callers! O, heaven, give "the office" patience.

"I expect a gentleman to call about 9," she remarks; "please say I am out. If any one else comes send them right up."

The gentleman is late and gets sent up. Heaven help "the office."

When a card awaits her she takes "the office" right into her confidence.

"O, dear, I'm so sorry," she exclaims. "When did they call? O, yes, the time is on the card. If you had only told them to wait. I know I didn't leave instructions, but then, you see, I had no idea they would call. I didn't even know they were in town. Was the baby along, too? O, dear, I've never seen the baby. It was only born last summer, and ——"

"The office" is perhaps not a married man, or perhaps he is, and in either case this is harrowing with a whole line of impatient men waiting for rooms. You understand now, don't you, why so few hotels have "the office" where the women can get at it.—Kansas City Star.

Economyite Dollars.

A few days ago a store of bright silver dollars bearing dates from 1823 to 1830 were sent to the Economy Bank in Pennsylvania, and they have a history. When Father Rapp was the patriarch of Economy there appeared—this was in 1830—a man who styled himself Count Leo Pioli. He brought with him thirty German followers, and the whole party were received into the society. Pioli was a plausible scamp, with a talent for intrigue, and he soon had the good brethren by the ears. One day he demanded for himself and his clique half of the society's funds. To get rid of the fellow Father Rapp turned over to him $100,000, and Pioli took himself off with the money and set up a rival society at Phillipsburg. This came to grief, and when the funds of the colonists ran low Pioli planned a raid on the treasures of Economy. Somebody warned the good Father Rapp, who, with the nine trustees, buried the wealth of the society. The raiders came, but only to be routed by women of the settlement. The money recently deposited in the Economy Bank was only a part of the store, the place of concealment of which is known only to the trustees of to-day, who in turn will disclose the secret to their successors.

The Model of Raphael's Madonnas.

Writing from the Hague, a correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer says: The most celebrated picture is the Sistine "Madonna" by Raphael, by many considered his best work. It is familiar to every one by the thousands of reproductions in steel, photographs, etc. "Where did Raphael get his model?" asked the musician. "All his 'Madonnas' have unmistakably the same look." "She was the daughter of a baker in Rome," said the artist, "for whom the great master had an unusual affection. It is said that he would have married her but that he feared it would injure his art. He did not want any domestic infelicities, and his whole life was a peculiarly sad one. She must have been a wondrously beautiful girl, for although the artist has transformed her into all kinds of saints with his subtle brush, he could not have succeeded so well without a good foundation. This 'Madonna' before us shows us the most beautiful face I have ever seen." 'Tis love that makes the world go round, and love that inspires the divinest art.

Teacher—"Can you explain what is meant by vicarious punishment?" Johnny—"Yes, sir. When ma gets angry at pa she spanks me."—N. Y. Herald.

The Hardwood Floor.

Brush off the dust with a soft hair or feather brush, or wipe it with any cloth of a soft texture. If the cloth is slightly moist the dust will adhere to it more readily, but wipe with a dry cloth afterward.

If there be any dirt that will not come with wiping wash it off thoroughly with clean water, using soap if necessary, which also cleanse off with clean water as quickly as possible and wipe dry.

When the face of the floor begins to look worn and shabby after cleansing of the dirt and wiping dry, if water has been used, rub the surface all over nicely with a cloth moistened with a few drops of oil if the floor has a hard oil finish, or brush it lightly with thin shellac if it has a shellac surface.

After the finish is worn down to the surface of the wood sandpaper the floor all over evenly and give it another coat of shellac or hard oil finish, after which continue to keep as before.

Waxed floors can be cleansed by washing off thoroughly with turpentine or benzine, after which they can be rewaxed if desired.

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we can not cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

☞Sold by Druggists, 75c.

"August Flower"

Mrs. Sarah M. Black of Seneca, Mo., during the past two years has been affected with Neuralgia of the Head, Stomach and Womb, and writes: "My food did not seem to strengthen me at all and my appetite was very variable. My face was yellow, my head dull, and I had such pains in my left side. In the morning when I got up I would have a flow of mucus in the mouth, and a bad, bitter taste. Sometimes my breath became short, and I had such queer, tumbling, palpitating sensations around the heart. I ached all day under the shoulder blades, in the left side, and down the back of my limbs. It seemed to be worse in the wet, cold weather of Winter and Spring; and whenever the spells came on, my feet and hands would turn cold, and I could get no sleep at all. I tried everywhere, and got no relief before using August Flower Then the change came. It has done me a wonderful deal of good during the time I have taken it and is working a complete cure." ④

G. G. GREEN, Sole Man'fr, Woodbury, N.J.

TUMORS

Internal or External, successfully Treated by New Method. No knife; no pain or shock. For pamphlet write The Sanitarium, Union Springs, N.Y.

Farm For Sale.

A No. 1 Improved Stock Farm of 365 Acres for Sale Cheap.

THE PORTLAND STOCK FARM.

Situated adjoining the village of Portland, on the C. M. & St. P. R. R. 4 miles east of Mason City, Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa. Farm fenced into 18 different fields and yards, all hog tight and horse high. Farm buildings and all improvements are first class. Two large troughs soft spring water five rods from barn; farm also watered by Lime Creek and several springs. Twenty acres of timber surround buildings, also one thousand (1,000) rods of beautiful willow hedge on farm, 20 to 75 feet high, mostly bordering on the highways. Four large barns (hay capacity 200 tons) with five hundred (500) feet of basement walls. A large water-power roller mill and cheese and butter factory join farm. A large modern, first-class farm house, built in 1890.

Mason City, the county seat of Cerro Gordo county, and the Lexington of Iowa, is a beautiful little city of about five thousand (5,000) inhabitants. She has just completed one of the best mile tracks in the state, which, with the fair grounds, have been built at an expense of $20,000.

Price of farm, forty-five dollars ($45.00) per acre. For particulars and picture of farm and buildings, call on or address the owner at Portland, Cerro Gordo County, Iowa.

A. S. FELT, prop.

Paper For Sale.

The leading Republican newspaper at a good county seat. Good job office. Address Y care M. C. Newspaper Co., Mason City, Ia.-1a*

THE OLD DOCTOR'S
Cotton Root Pills
LADIES' FAVORITE.

ALWAYS RELIABLE and perfectly SAFE. The same as used by thousands of woman all over the United States, in the OLD DOCTORS private mail practice, for 38 years, and not a single bad result. Money returned if not as represented. Send 4 cents (stamps) for sealed particulars.

Dr. WARD & CO., 117 N. 8th St., St. Louis, Mo.

PILES RUDY'S PILE SUPPOSITORY is a sovereign remedy for Piles (bleeding, itching, blind, inward, etc.) whether of recent or long standing. It gives instant relief, and effects a radical and permanent cure. No surgical operation required. Try it and relieve your sufferings. Send for circular and free sample. Only 50 cents a box. For sale by druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of price

MARTIN RUDY, Lancaster, Pa.

MEN Wanted; salary and expenses. Permanent place. Apply at once. Browne Bros. Co., Nurserymen, Chicago

The WEAK made STRONG

FREE TRIAL {In Nervous Debility, Lost Vitality, Weakness and Decay, sent free for 12 cents postage.

Address Dr. Ward Office, 117 N. 8th Street, St. Louis, Mo.

WANTED.

$15 A WEEK. ANY LADY, employed or unemployed, can make this for a few hours work each day. Salary or com. $10 samples free.

Ad. H. BENJAMIN & CO., 115 N. 8th St., ST. LOUIS, MO.

☞ANY LADY can get a valuable secret that cost me $5.00, and a rubber shield for 30 cents.

Mrs. V. M. APP. CO.

115 N. 8th STREET, ST. LOUIS, MO.

FAT FOLKS REDUCED

Mrs. Alice Maple, Oregon, Mo., writes "My weight was 320 pounds, now it is 195 a reduction of 125 lbs." For circulars address, with 6c., Dr. O.W.F.SNYDER, McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, Ill

WE WANT AGENTS FOR THE FASTEST SELLING article. Big money. No risk. WM. BACHALE, 253 Bissell Street, Chicago, Ill.

$3.75 A DAY and steady work right at home for any man or lady. Write Stone & Wellington, Madison, Wis

Mason City Newspaper Co-91-52

MINING AS SAFE

As Any Other Investment

When the property is organized on a business basis, and conducted on business principles. Such is the case with a company at Pittsburg, Kansas, composed of business men who have recently purchased a million dollar gold mine in Old Mexico. It will pay you to invest in a few shares of its stock.

ADDRESS

Pittsburg-Mexican Mining Company,
PITTSBURG, KANSAS.

MASON CITY, IOWA,
Cancer Infirmary

The Only Reliable Institution in the Northwest,
Homelike and Pleasant,

DR. M. V. MAYFIELD, the Specialist, has been more than successful for thirteen years. No Knife. No Caustics.

H. E. MOORE, the President GUARANTEES A CURE OR NO PAY.

PISO'S REMEDY FOR CATARRH.—Best. Easiest to use. Cheapest. Relief is immediate. A cure is certain. For Cold in the Head it has no equal.

CATARRH

It is an Ointment, of which a small particle is applied to the nostrils. Price 50c. Sold by druggists or sent by mail. Address: E. T. HAZELTINE, Warren, Pa.

Red Lake Falls Iron Works,

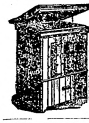
P. & J. MEEHAN, Proprietors.
J. Z PERRON, Manager.

SAW AND GRIST MILL
MACHINERY MADE AND REPAIRED.

Repairing Thresher Engines
AND BOILERS AND
AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS

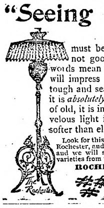
Circular Saws Hammered. Satisfacticn Guaranteed, Correspondenc solicited.

BRING IN YOUR WORK
Scrap Brass and Copper Bought.



PERFECTION IN BUTTER MAKING.
The O. K. OUTFIT EXCELS THEM ALL.
THE O.K. CREAMERY
Has the largest cooling surface; takes less cooling material; less labor, and gives Best Results. All cream raised between milkings. Skimming Glass whole depth of can, showing condition of milk without touching Creamery. Send for O. K. Catalogue.
JOHN S. CARTER, Sole Manf'r, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

"Seeing is Believing."



And a good lamp must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer hasn't the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue and we will send you a lamp safely by express—your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.

ROCHESTER LAMP CO., 42 Park Place, New York City.

"The Rochester."

WE are making a specialty this season of what we call our PARAGON HARNESS. Made of the FINEST STOCK and the very BEST WORKMANSHIP. Such a harness cannot be bought for less than $25. at retail. But we are willing, in order to introduce it, to SELL ONE SET ONLY to one person as a sample for $16.50.

$25.00 HARNESS FOR $16.50
IN GENUINE RUBBER $18.50.

DESCRIPTION OF HARNESS.
A fine Buggy Harness stitched twelve stitches to the inch, except traces which are stitched ten. Is made to represent a $50 harness. It has a 3 or 3 1-2 hand loosed, leather pad saddle, with covered seat and jockeys; is made from fine stock. Bridle is of usual dimensions; has fine blinds, nice leather front and beautiful rosettes with glass centers, nice nickel bit. Check-rein, either overdraw with nose piece, or side check. Nice russet or black reins. The breast-collar, neck-strap, breeching and girt folds are made either of patent enamel or plain harness leather as preferred and the layers on the same are cut wide and straight, and being stitched so very fine and nicely creased, give to the harness a costly custom-made appearance. The hip and back straps are doubled and stitched, nicely creased and finished throughout. Boxloops of beautiful design as on custom-made work. Trimmings either Davis Rubber, Nickel Wire or Brass Wire, or a Fancy style. We refer you to the publishers of this paper as to our responsibility. Remit by Express or Money Order. Money refunded if goods are not satisfactory.

BOSTON HARNESS CO.
Concord Junction, Mas

THE NEWS.
Entered at the post office at Red Lake Falls as second-class mail matter.
Official Paper of the City.

I. LEMIEUX,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON,
Officein residence, First street, Red Lake Falls. Minn.

JOHN WATSON,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEGN,
Office in residence, Sixth street, Red Lake Falls Minn.

Caution. Barbed Wire.

What that barbed wire fence has done to your horses Metzger's Veterinary Ointment will heal at once not leaving a scar, and will grow the hair as before. It is natures own remedy, and is warranted to heal any and all eases of scratches, Grease heal, collar and saddle gall, speed cracks, cracked heels, cuts, wounds, stiff or inflamed joints, frost bites, sore eyes, sore teats, mud fever, inflamed and diseased feet, and will grow a new hoof in the quickest possible time. Call at W. A. Screiter's and get a box and try it price 50c and full lbs $1.00.

A Standard Remedy.

Metzger's Pile Ointment has long proven a boon to suffering humanity, and is effective whenever used. Those in need of a remedy of this kind can find none better or more effective and sure. get a package of Metzger's Pile Ointment, that it warranted to cure. Price 50c. At Schreiter's drug store.

A Sad Mistake.

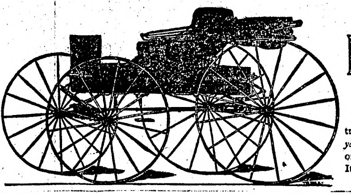
Is to have a stable of fine horses and have the distemper start among them with nothing to prevent its spreading. Heed the warning, and check it in the first stages of the disease by using Metzger's Pink Eye and Distemper Cure, as it has never been known to fail. Cures horses of old chronic coughs, colds, chills, epizootic, and all throat, lung Bronchial and nasal troubles. Especially good in hay fever or heaves. Price $1 per bottle or 6 for $5. For sale by W. A. Schreiter

Strength and Healt.

If you are not feeling strong and healthy, Electric Bitters. If "LaGrippe has left you weak and weary, use Electric Bitters. This remedy acts directly on Liver, Stomach and Kidneys, gently aiding those organs to perform their functions. If you are afflicted with Sick Headach, you will find speed and permanent relief by taking Electric bitters. One trial will convince you that this is the remedy. Large bottles only 50c. at W. A. Schreiter's Drug Store.

A [illegible]tle Girl's Experience in a Lighthouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Loren Trescot are keepers of the Gov. Lighthouse at Sand Beach, Mich. and are blessed with a daughter four years old. Last April she was taken down with Measles, followed with a dreadful Cough and turning into a Fever. Doctors at home and at Detroit treated her, but in vain, she grew worse rapidly, until was a mere "handful of bones".—Then she tried Dr. King's New Discovery and after the use of two and a half bottles, was completely cured. They says Dr. King's Discovery is worth its weigh in gold, yet you may get a trial bottle free at W. A. Schreiter's Drugstore.



WARRANTED WAGONS & BUGGIES
MANUFACTURED BY
EASY WAGON GEAR CO.
DETROIT, MICH.

If you wish the easiest riding, most durable and attractive Wagon or Buggy made, ask your Dealer to show you these goods. A written warranty furnished with every one. Take no other. You may as well have the BEST. It costs no more than an inferior article.

CATALOGUE SENT IF REQUESTED.

We Would Like to Call the Attention of

Capitalists

Manufacturers and Others Desiring a Place for

INVESTMENT

To the

Superior Advantages of

RED LAKE FALLS

Its Many WaterPowers and other natural advantages. It is only a question of a few years until this will be one of the leading cities of Minnesota. Investment in real estate or water privileges are sure to secure to the investors handsome returns.

WE RE
In the Cnter of Vast

Farming District.

Yearly consuming large amounts of imported products of manufactures. This vast tract of land is watered by the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers. Within the limits of the city are

12 DISTINCT WATER POWERS.

The only natural water powers on these streams. There are fine openings for paper and pulp mills, woolen and other factories. Parties outside desiring any information concerning property, address

LOVELL DIAMOND CYCLES.
STRICTLY HIGH GRADE.

LOVELL DIAMOND No 2

No. 1, Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 2, Cushion Tires, $95.00
No. 3, Ladies' Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 3 C, Ladies' Cushion Tires, $95.00
No. 4, Convertible Solid Tires, $85.00
No. 4, C, " Cushion Tires, $95.00

OUR Cushion Tires ARE Warranted ALL PARTS Interchangeable.
$85.00

No better machine made at any price.
Bicycle Catalogue Free.
$85.00

JOHN P. LOVELL ARMS CO.,
MANUFACTURERS, BOSTON, MASS.
Send six cents in stamps for our 100 page Illustrated Catalogue of Guns, Rifles, Revolvers, Sporting Goods of all kinds, etc.

ANDERSON'S SHORTHAND TYPEWRITER
Prints A Word at One Stroke.

THIS is the machine that is used in the Office, Court-room, and for reporting lectures and sermons.

While its speed is greater than any other known method, it is so simple that any intelligent person can gain a speed of 100 or more words per minute, in five or six weeks, without the aid of an instructor. Circulars and testimonials sent to all who mention this paper.

E. T. PIERCE, FAYETTE, OHIO,
Sole Agent for U. S. and Canada.

THE NEW WEBSTER
JUST PUBLISHED—ENTIRELY NEW.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

A GRAND INVESTMENT
for the Family, the School, or the Library.
Revision has been in progress for over 10 Years.
More than 100 editorial laborers employed.
$300,000 expended before first copy was printed.
Critical examination invited. Get the Best.
Sold by all Booksellers. Illustrated pamphlet free.
G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Publishers,
Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

RALPH & BOURDON,
Proprietors of the CITY
DRAY
LINE.
WOOD & COAL.
Anything in our line done
Promptly and at very Reasonable
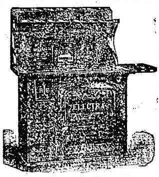
Rates.
GIVE US A CALL

INDIANA RANGE CO.
MANUFACTURERS
OF WROUGHT STEEL RANGES



Guaranteed to be the most economical, most durable and most perfect Range on the market. Suitable for hard or soft coal, or wood.
Send for catalogue to
INDIANA RANGE CO.
EVANSVILLE, IND.

PASTOR KOENIG'S NERVE TONIC

Two Bottles Cured Her.
CARROLL, Iowa, July, 1889.
I was suffering ten years from shocks in my head, so much so, that at times I didn't expect to recover. I took medicines from many doctors, but did not get any relief until I took Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic; the second dose relieved and two bottles cured me.
S. W. PECK.

Worth Its Weight in Gold.
EMMET, Dak., July 28, 1890.
The young man concerned has not now the slightest symptoms of fits, since using Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic. I consider it worth its weight in gold.
J. J. SHEA, Pastor.

Rev. John Redecker, of Wesphalia, Kan., writes, Oct. 13, 1890: "There is a 16-year-old boy here, who suffered from fits about a year. I ordered a bottle of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic for him, and the sickness left him altogether. He never had it since."

FREE—A Valuable Book on Nervous Diseases sent free to any address, and poor patients can also obtain this medicine free of charge.

This remedy has been prepared by the Reverend Pastor Koenig, of Fort Wayne, Ind., since 1876, and is now prepared under his direction by the

KOENIG MED. CO., Chicago, Ill.

Sold by Druggists at $1 per Bottle. 6 for $5. Large Size, $1.75. 6 Bottles for $9.

The Police Gazette

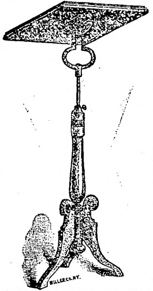
Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber or Club Room [illegible] to be without it. It always [illegible] friends wherever it goes. M[illegible] fire s in the United States [illegible] 13 weeks for $1.00 [illegible] for sample copy.

RICHARD [illegible]
Franklin Square, N[illegible] City

Good Looks.

Good looks are more than skin deep, depending upon a healthy condition of all the vital organs. If the Liver be inactive you have a Bilious Look, if your stomach be disordered you have a Dyspeptic Look and if your Kidneys be affected you have a Pinched Look. Secure good health and you will have good Looks. Electric Bitters is the great alterative and Tonic and acts directly on these vital organs. Cures Pimples, Blotches, Boils and gives a good complexion. Sold at W. A. Schreiter's Drugstore, 50c per bottle.

Adjustable Extension Stand.



MILLER CO. N.Y.

Uses: Book Stand, Music Stand, Atlas Stand, Album Stand, Bible Stand, Flower Stand, also Lamp, Lecture, Parlor, Library, Office, Dictionary and Checker Stand and Easel. Hard wood, rubbed finish, height 34 inches. Height extended, 50 inches. Weight 12 lbs.; size of top 14 x 18; shipped K. D. Price, $5. KEELER & CO., Furniture Man'frs, 81-91 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

ADAM SCHMITZ
DEALER IN
Horse Furnishing Goods,

5/A HORSE BLANKETS
5/A HORSE BLANKETS

EVERYBODY WANTS ONE.

Two or three dollars for a 5/A Horse Blanket will save double its cost. Your horse will eat less to keep warm and be worth fifty dollars more.

LIGHT AND HEAVY HARNESS, Whips, Combs, Brushes, Trunks, Valises.

The celebrated STANDARD HORSE AND CATTLE FOOD. Every stock owner should test its merits. For sale by ADAM SCHMITZ.
Brodway Red Lake Falls

MINNESOTA
HISTORICAL SOCIETY

FINISH

RED LAKE FALLS

NEWS

OCT 16 TH DEC 31

OCT 16 1890 THRU DEC 31 1891

Title:

Red Lake Falls NEWS

7:45 - 9:1

Inclusive Dates: Oct 16 1890 — Dec 31 1891*

Missing Issues: Sep 10, 1891

268-9 -1978

271-9 -1978

Originals held by: MHS X Other ___

Prepared by: V.A.Rogers vr	Date: 9/26/1978	Format: 1A X 2B
Filmed by: Owens	Date: 9/28/78	Camera No. Red 1
Reduction Ratio: 13	Voltmeter ·26/78	No. Expos. 497
Prelim. Inspection by:	Date:	Density:
Target Resolution: _____/mm	O.K. ___ Reject ___	Length:

The Minnesota Historical Society has reproduced the material in this microfilm without any purpose of direct or indirect commercial advantage in order to preserve and to secure it for private study, scholarship, and research. The material reproduced may be protected by copyright law (Title 17, U.S. Code). Any person engaging in further reproduction of this material may be liable for infringement.